Survey to look at student opinion on Lafene services

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A survey distributed by Lafene Health Center will get students' opinions on health services and help Lafene plan for the future.

Health insurance coverage, satisfaction and user fees are the main issues on the survey. Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller said students also will be asked if there are other services they would like to see offered at Lafene.

"It will give us a way to plan for the future and to be sure that services are available for everyone," he said.

The confidential survey will be mailed during the spring semester and will be given randomly to about 500 students. It primarily will be completed on Scantron sheets, with other sections for longer answers.

Robert Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, said he wanted to survey students to find ways to fund rising costs, such as implementing an office-visit fee. Krause said he hopes a fee would not deter students from using Lafene's services.

"If charges are a deterrent, then I've got a concern because of the environments people live in," he said. "With people in group living arrangements and in classrooms together, it doesn't take long for an infectious disease to transfer at a rapid rate."

Research to help student health center decide course of action for future

Part of the reason for the survey stems from last year when Lafene's privilege fee was up for review. It was decided that students would be surveyed to see if user fees would deter students from using Lafene's services.

One survey question asks if a $5 office-visit fee would be a factor in the student's decision to go to Lafene.

"You either have to cut services or find a source of income to fund it," Krause said.

Barbara Dethloff, Student Health Advisory Committee member, said one reason for the survey is to get differing opinions from students, rather than only from those who are on the board.

"Hopefully we can say, 'This is what the student body wants, so we can go this way with it,'" she said.

Dethloff said about one-third of the survey deals with user fees.

User fees are the fees paid by the user of a service and not by the student privilege fee. Lafene charges about half the amount students would pay in the community.

"It really lets the students voice their opinions about if they want more privilege fees or less privilege fees or a user fee," she said.

Full-time students pay $77 each semester in privilege fees to Lafene. Zweimiller said the discussion of user fees and privilege fees has been an ongoing one.

"We need to determine a balance," he said. "We want to keep services affordable to students."

Lafene, which receives about 65 percent of its revenue through privilege fees, has been dealing with rising costs in the health industry in recent years, which makes increasing user fees an option.

"The cost of providing services increases all of the time," Zweimiller said. "We're just like a health or services provider in the general community. We have to look at ways to fund these expenses."

Dethloff said she hoped to have all the surveys in and a report made before May 1. She said the survey will help Lafene get a better idea of what the student body wants.

"When you know your clientele and you know what they expect from you, you can provide that more efficiently," she said.

President Jon Wefald's annual State of the University address will be at 1:30 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall. The address will focus on research and graduate education at the university and will precede the first session of the fall Provost's Lecture Series, which centers around the same topic.

"We're going to have the two back-to-back," Provost James Coffman said. "The entire afternoon is aimed at focusing on research and graduate education."

Glenn set to make return trip to space

By MARCIA DUNN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Lyn Glenn's first words when her father told her he was angling to become the oldest man in space were, "What? You're kidding!"

"I am against it," she informed John Glenn. "I absolutely would not want you to do that."

Almost three years have passed since that out-of-the-blue breakfast conversation, and Lyn Glenn remains opposed to her father's launch next Thursday aboard space shuttle Discovery.

Nevertheless, she's at his side as the 77-year-old astronaut and retiring senator goes into the final week of training for his second and, his family hopes, final spaceflight.

"Would I have him do this? N-o-o-o-o," Lyn Glenn, 51, said by telephone this week from Houston, where she and her mother are doing on their favorite astronaut before his nine-day geriatric-research mission. "Am I being supportive? You bet."

It's not just the dangers of spaceflight that bother her, she said. It's the months he has devoted to training and

Hours, money spent on floats to be showcased in today's parade

By LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It happens every year. Homecoming arrives, and it's float-building time. Students envision the perfect float with walls of color, maybe even with moving parts. After hours of cutting wood, pumping and spray painting, their float efforts lay in the hands of the judges.

Once again, students in the residence halls and greek system have spent many hours creating floats that represent this year's Homecoming theme, "Ride the Tide with Purple Pride." Each Homecoming pairing has a budget of $1,000.

Gretchen Gillen, junior in communication and science disorders, said the most difficult part of building a float is making the vision of the finished product into reality.

Michelle Bertuglia, sophomore in cultural anthropology, said working with different halls can make the process difficult.

"It's frustrating getting the same group of people committed," she said.

Bertuglia said, however, that the process is fun for her. "I enjoy getting to be with people that I wouldn't have met otherwise and seeing the final product," she said.

A stack of shredded newspaper sits ready to be added into the papier maché of the Kappa Kappa Gamma/Sigma Phi Epsilon/Sigma Nu Homecoming float.

The floats are part of the annual Homecoming competition in which the residence halls and greek organizations participate. Banners, body building, Pant the Chant and parade spirit also are included in the competition.

The floats can be seen by community members and K-State students at the parade starting at 4 p.m. Friday at

Bodybuilding champions crowned in residence hall, greek competition

By NICK BRATKOVIC

Musical chants rocked Ahearn Field House on Thursday night during the Homecoming bodybuilding finals for greek and residence hall pairings.

The first-place winner in the residence hall competition was Smurthwaite Scholarship House/Smith Scholarship House/Moore Hall. The winner in the greek competition was Lambda Chi Alpha/Pi Beta Phi/Phi Gamma Delta.

Brody Dorland, the winning greek team's choreographer and junior in mass communications, said planning and performing routines like those used in the contest is his niche in life. Dorland, a K-State yell leader, said it is nice to see his team's work pay off.

"It is a group effort, and it feels very good," Dorland said. "It brings tears to the eyes."

The competition was judged on a variety of criteria, including execution of stunts, time limits, spirit and the creative use of human bodies. Competitors used a variety of dances, chants, leg kicks and even deprecating moves to win the crowd's approval.

Body building is a large share of the point total for the Homecoming competition.

"The main category is enthusiasm," said Susan McKinney, junior

Language is focus of Hispanic celebration

"To Remember the Language is to Remember the Heritage" is the theme for Hispanic Heritage Month, which has been celebrated throughout October.

"We decided on the theme because it reflects what is happening in our society," said Carlos Contreras, president of Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

The English-only movement and bilingual-education programs are the main topics on which the theme and the month focus, said Lori Navarrete, assistant professor of special education and co-adviser of HALO.

"Knowing other languages impacts people individually and collectively by breaking down cultural barriers," Navarrete said.

Maritza Broce will be a speaker for Hispanic Heritage Month. Broce is a community coordinator for Derechos Humanos/Arizona Border Patrol in Tucson, Ariz., and will discuss immigration issues and reforms at 4 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Big 12 Room.

On Saturday, the traditional Gran Baile celebration will take place at the Ramada Plaza Hotel ballroom. The celebration begins at 9 p.m. Tickets cost $5 and can be purchased at the Multicultural Student Organizations office or El Cazador restaurant.

The Union Program Council is co-sponsoring a free movie, "Chicano," at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Union Little Theatre.

The final activity scheduled for the month is speaker Lydia Gonzales. Gonzales works for empowerment and educational opportunities for Hispanic youth.

She has served for 20 years as educational adviser for the League of United Latin American Citizens' National Education Service Center in Garden City, Kan. Gonzales' presentation will focus on "Visions for the 21st Century," at 4 p.m. on Oct. 30 in Union 204.

"This month-long celebration gives individuals on campus who are interested in Hispanic and Latino issues a chance to express their views, share ideas and participate in cultural events," Navarrete said.

Woman pleads guilty to husband's murder

COLUMBUS, Kan. — A rural Cherokee County woman has pleaded guilty to capital murder and conspiracy to commit murder in connection with the fatal shooting of her husband in January. Pamela Livingston, 39, pleaded guilty Wednesday to those counts and one count of aggravated robbery in the death of Patrick Livingston, 43.

She is scheduled to be sentenced Dec. 10.

Livingston won't face the death penalty, which can be imposed only by a jury under Kansas law. Prosecutors said they will recommend a life sentence.

Frank L. Deiterman, 21, of Leroy, Texas, was bound over for trial on a capital murder charge Wednesday. He allegedly was the shooter in the killing. A trial date hasn't been set.

Two other Texas men — Alton R. "Rick" Sheffield and Darrell W. Wilkerson, both of Waco — were sentenced Sept. 22 for the killing.

Sheffield had pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit murder and was sentenced to 11 years and eight months. Wilkerson had pleaded guilty to solicitation to commit first-degree murder and aggravated robbery and was sentenced to four years and seven months on each charge.

According to Sheffield's court testimony, the three Texas men drove to Kansas after Pamela Livingston contacted him about having her husband killed.

Sheffield testified that Livingston sent him $2,000 and said her husband had been making bizarre sexual demands.

Wilkerson and Deiterman both allegedly owed drug debts. Sheffield promised them money if they helped in the killing.

Sheffield testified that he and Pamela Livingston met in Joplin, Mo., where she gave him a check for $25,000, which would be paid once she received her husband's life insurance money.

Parents knew son survived plane crash

RAWLINS, Wyo. — James and Joanne Funk knew their son was a survivor.

The Garrison, Minn., couple clung to every inkling of hope when they heard Dale had disappeared Sunday while flying his single-engine airplane in Wyoming from Marbleton-Big Piney Airport to Laramie. The distance is about 250 miles.

"He's a survivor and a good pilot,"

Joanne Funk said. "We knew that he could survive a crash if anybody could."

The Funks' instincts were right. Dale Funk, 39, of Scandia, Kan., was found Wednesday stranded in the Red Desert, 32 miles northwest of Rawlins, said Col. Betty Cash of Wyoming's Civil Air Patrol. He had no food or water.

A sheriff's deputy rescued him and drove him to an ambulance, which took him to a Rawlins hospital.

"He wouldn't have lasted much longer if they had not found him when they did," Joanne Funk said. "He had draped himself over the wing of the plane. That was the only way he could stand the pain. He stood there like that all those days."

Dale Funk was listed in serious but stable condition Thursday at the intensive care unit of the Carbon County Memorial Hospital. He suffered some internal injuries but was expected to recover, his mother said.

Ranchers lose 50,000 cattle in Texas flood

DALLAS — As high water receded from hills and rooftops Thursday, cowboys began roping some of the tens of thousands of stray cattle that had to swim for their lives when floodwaters flattened fences and swept them downstream.

As many as 50,000 cattle were swept downstream in one big natural cattle drive. Cattle float well, but ranchers worried that hundreds — especially calves — might have drowned or fallen prey to snakes or stinging fire ants.

"I talked to one rancher who said he owned 500 cows Saturday, and he hopes he owns 400 now," said Trey Hamlett, manager at the Luling Foundation farm near the flooded San Marcos River. His 100 volunteers were corralling hundreds of cattle stranded on high ground by mud and broken fences.

"There are submerged trees and fences, other things they can hang up on. They can get water in their lungs, they can get bit by fire ants," he said, adding that the fire ants float near the surface of the water and can get into the eyes or noses of the cattle.

About 1 million head of cattle were grazing on south and central Texas ranches when weekend floodwaters flattened fences and pens. Hamlett said his workers have captured cattle that had been swept 18 miles downstream.

Farther downstream on the flooded Colorado River, ranchers already have moved cattle to high ground. The river is expected to crest at Wharton at 48.5 feet on Friday and already stands at 47.4 feet, breaking the record 46.1-foot mark set in 1991.

Ranchers estimate up to 16,000 head were missing from Gonzales County alone, and up to 15,000 cattle are wandering the San Marcos River Valley.

Tobacco industry to face civil rights suit

PHILADELPHIA — The tobacco industry has been hit with a lawsuit, accusing it violated the civil rights of black people by specifically trying to sell them menthol cigarettes.

The lawsuit — filed in federal court Monday — claims menthol cigarettes are more dangerous than other types.

The lawyers who filed the proposed class-action said it is the first lawsuit brought against the tobacco industry under federal civil rights law rather than personal-injury or product-liability laws.

Plaintiffs include several black smokers and former smokers of menthol cigarettes and two black health groups.

They are demanding tobacco companies and industry groups make public all research about the effects of smoking, especially of menthol cigarettes, on black people. They also said they want a ban on menthol tobacco.

The lawsuit contends menthol compounds, when burned, create additional toxic substances that make such cigarettes more dangerous. Government studies of smoking have suggested that menthol taste makes it easier for people to smoke longer and inhale more deeply, the lawsuit claims.

The case is based on the original Civil Rights Acts of 1866 and 1870, passed to prevent the victimization of former slaves during the Reconstruction period.

The act "has been amended and used in school desegregation and police beating cases, but if you go back to the original act, this is what it was intended to prevent — targeting black people in ways that take advantage of them," plaintiffs' attorney Stephen Sheller said. Philip Morris Inc. had no comment on the allegations, saying company attorneys had not yet seen the lawsuit.

CAMPUS SAFETY

Wildcat Walk Escort Program is available for students from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. to provide safety for students late at night. You can get an escort by calling 395-SAFE or by going to the 24 hour study area in Hale Library.

WILDCAT WALK

Volunteer program promotes campus safety, comfort

By LAURAN COWDREY

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For students concerned with walking alone at night, safety is as easy as picking up the phone and dialing 395-SAFE.

The Wildcat Walk Escort Program is a volunteer service that provides safety and comfort for K-State students who walk alone at night.

The program began seven years ago in Haymaker Hall as a safety feature for students living in residence halls. Wildcat Walk coordinator Travis Johnson said.

However, in the past 1 1/2, with the support of numerous volunteers and funding from Student Governing Association, the program has become campuswide.

"In general, it has been well-accepted," Johnson said.

He said his only concern was that students might be unaware of this option, but with SGA support and newspaper advertisements, he said he hopes to inform more of the student body.

Wildcat Walk has 80 escorts who volunteer their evenings to make K-State's campus as safe as possible.

Brandy Oak, senior in agricultural economics, is in her second semester with Wildcat Walk.

"I was interested in the cause because I know how scared I am walking across campus by myself," she said.

"It gives students peace of mind," Sandi Rucker, sophomore in secondary education, said.

The Wildcat Walk works in cooperation with the K-State Police dispatcher's office to provide this safety service. Oak said undergo a training process with the dispatchers to learn how to use the radios, handle conflicts and be safe.

The escorts, who are based out of Hale Library, work in groups of two every evening from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m. and cover a six-block radius surrounding the K-State campus, including all greek houses and University Commons.

The calls go directly to the police dispatcher on duty, who transfers the calls to the escorts at Hale.

The escorts then collect all pertinent information required to find students and walk them safely to their destinations.

All Wildcat Walk escorts are easily recognizable, with arm bands and readily prepared for emergencies with handheld radios linked to the police dispatcher.

Becoming a Wildcat Walk escort is a three-step process.

Applicants must fill out an application that can be found under "Wildcat Walk" on the K-State homepage or send a letter to Hale Library, Box 34. Applicants then must go through an interview and then a training session. The process takes about one month.

"Being an escort is a neat thing to do and a good way to get involved," Rucker said.

Late-night workers have safety options

By DESIREE LAMBERSON

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The campus might be bustling with people during the day, but once the sun goes down, it might seem like no one is around for miles. For people who must work on campus late at night, this might be a scary scenario, but with the Office Lab Watch program, it doesn't have to be.

The OWL program, sponsored by the K-State Police and the Women's Center, was made official this year. Anyone who must work late at night at either an office or a lab can request an officer to check up on them periodically through the night.

"For the last few years, women in various buildings or labs late at night have gotten spooked, not because of any threat, but because the buildings are spooky when there's no one else around," said Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center.

Allen said she first developed the idea of the program after one of her friends found herself in an uncomfortable situation one night.

"A friend of mine was working late at her office at Bluemont. When she got up to go to the bathroom, she saw a man standing out there that she had never seen before — it made her kind of uneasy," Allen said.

Allen said all the OWL program does is disclose a service by the police.

"We're just advertising a service we always could have used," Allen said.

"The police have the staff to take time out just to check on people to make sure they're all right."

K-State Police Lt. Dave Johnson said his officers always have checked up on people who have requested the service, but that the OWL program is just a way of making it official.

"We have done this for a long time now, but because of the turnover rate, some new people may not know that we can do that," Johnson said. "We just wanted to try to make it official."

Johnson said that throughout the years, many people have asked for officers to check up on them.

"This is more of a peace-of-mind program," he said. "Hopefully, by making it official, we will encourage more people to call."

Allen said the service is open to everyone at K-State who has an office or works late in a lab.

The women's center also would like to monitor the program and asks anyone who uses the OWL program to call the women's center the next day at 532-6444 and tell them how it worked.

"At the Women's Center, we have concentrated a lot on women in crisis situations. What we want to do is add services to empower women," Allen said. "It's an effort to give women a little more freedom to work when they want to."

Those interested in the program can call the campus police at 532-6412 for more information.

New housing officer responds to incidents in all residence halls

By AMANDA LEVIN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many students, the residence halls are a home away from home. In an attempt by K-State to create a more secure atmosphere, Gary Marshall, housing officer, is the new security system around the residence halls.

Marshall started his new position last June.

"I'm actually pretty new on the job, but so far there have not been many incidents in the residence halls, which is great," Marshall said.

Marshall's primary concern when he is on duty, from 9 p.m. to 5 a.m., is to respond to any incidents in the residence halls and to patrol their parking lots.

"The calls I've been on so far have involved medical emergencies and reports of lost or stolen items," Marshall said.

Many problems of theft in residence halls easily could be avoided, Marshall said.

"The best advice I can give from the few situations I have dealt with this year is for residents to always lock their door, no matter what," Marshall said.

While Marshall is on duty and not occupied with matters involving the residence halls, he responds to any incidents on campus.

"I have all the law-enforcement abilities of any other police officer, but I am the only officer on campus that deals primarily with residence hall life," Marshall said.

When Marshall is not working on campus, he keeps busy serving the community as a deputy sheriff in Pottawatomie County and a volunteer firefighter.

Marshall is retired from a 21-year military career, the last 17 of which were spent as a military police officer. Marshall said becoming a military police officer helped him to find a career where he really enjoys his work.

"I enjoy the law-enforcement field," Marshall said. "I meet many different people in several different situations. It's always interesting."

Glenn back in space makes great story

On Thursday, NASA will tackle its most ambitious project since Sharon Christa McAuliffe and the rest of the crew of the Challenger died tragically in January 1986. John Glenn, a former U.S. senator who has served in two wars, has flown as a test pilot and who has the distinction of being the first American to orbit the Earth, will participate in an experiment by NASA to test the effects of space flight on the aging.

Glenn is 77 years old.

Since his retirement from the Senate, Glenn has had the goal of being the oldest man in space. NASA physicians were uncertain at first, demanding that Glenn go through medical tests to make certain he was qualified.

They quickly realized, however, that Glenn was fit for the job.

The first time Glenn went up, he was sitting in a cramped Mercury capsule perched on top of an Atlas launch vehicle, a rocket originally devised to hoist nuclear warheads into orbit but modified for Glenn's trip.

When he returns to space on Thursday, Glenn will be spending eight days in orbit aboard the space shuttle Discovery, which generates about 20 times more thrust at liftoff than the outdated Atlas.

The man probably is as old as your grandfather. He's being joined for this special event by Walter Cronkite, the former CBS newscaster who covered all early space exploration for the nation on the evening news. Cronkite's fascination with space is still with him.

This mission is important for several reasons. Studying the effects of space travel on the elderly could prove useful in devising therapies for them. Furthermore, Glenn could show space to be a positive environment for sufferers of arthritis, circulation disorders, and a whole range of other muscle and bone problems. Space might prove to be a way of extending the quality of living through late adulthood.

Additionally, Glenn will be carrying a bit of K-State with him, or, rather, STS-95 will be. This shuttle mission also is being used for other experiments, including one designed by K-State scientists to test nitrogen fixation. Certainly, being part of such an important and high-profile launch is very positive for the academic programs here at K-State. We should be proud of that.

What is most remarkable, however, is what Glenn's journey stands for. There is a great deal of risk involved in any space shuttle launch, but that risk is greatly magnified in this case. Glenn's courage is apparent; he knows the risks and has dealt with the possibility of his death on this mission.

Everyone seems confident in his capability to get the job done.

Glenn should be more of a hero now than ever before. He has a weakness. He is not a human machine anymore, unlike the rest of the Discovery mission crew — men and women at the peak of fitness. Glenn is now one of us, and if his trip means anything, it should mean that the sky is no longer the limit.

After all, if a 77-year-old man can travel to space, why can't we?

Condom project embarrasses KSU

Editor,

After reading the front page article in the Collegian on Monday, I almost was embarrassed to be a student here at Condom State University.

There are two significant problems with this program. First, by doing this, the university officially is condoning and promoting behavior that is offensive to the morals of many students and that carries severe psychological, emotional and physical consequences. Yes, it happens, but should K-State be endorsing it?

Secondly, if the Regional AIDS Project truly had even the slightest intention of preventing the spread of HIV or any one of the 60-plus known sexually transmitted diseases — about half of which are incurable — it would be conducting seminars and putting up posters to promote abstinence. Numerous scientific studies have shown that condoms fail to prevent the transmission of disease, on average, about one third of the time. By handing out condoms with the stated intent of combating the AIDS epidemic, the Regional AIDS Project is sending the false message that simply by using protection, students have little to worry about.

Somewhat, I had the idea things like character and values would be esteemed at K-State, that dangerous and self-destructive behavior would be discouraged, or at least not condoned. I guess I was wrong.

Saferide has benefits, some precedence

There has been talk, as it seems there has been every year I have been at K-State, about enacting a Saferide program that would drive the intoxicated home free of charge. Some people have expressed views against this program, believing it would be a waste of student fees.

These views are un-American, not that there's anything wrong with that.

We would not be paying extra fee money so that a few kids can drink themselves into oblivion and get a free ride home. We would be paying for our own, sober safety. The whole point is to keep those people off the street and to keep their cars off others.

Despite popular opinion, I don't want to die or be in a lot of pain.

As I'm sure you are aware, the idea of protecting citizens, right or wrong, is an integral part of the American way. Programs designed for safety have been around for a lot longer than you or I, and some, Saferide included, actually are beneficial.

Here's a look at the colorful ... OK, black and white, history of some of America's other protective ways.

■ The Food and Drug Administration: The FDA is in place for one reason: To keep citizens from taking or eating harmful things. It sets guidelines for businesses to follow to keep the bacteria count in ice to a minimum and tells us not to drink alcohol and pop pills.

Unfortunately, it believes its powers also include horticulture and morality. The FDA placed a naturally growing weed, Cannabis sativa, as a schedule-one drug, which cannot be tested. It has been criminalized. Also, in 1986, RU-486, the abortion pill, was invented in France. Now, 12 years later, it soon will be sold legally here in America.

■ Marriage: I know what you're thinking. What possibly could be wrong with the great federally sanctioned bond between two people expressing their love to one another?

Did I say two people? No, by the American interpretation, it means a man and a woman.

Therein lies the problem. It is not legal in all states for two men or two women to be married to one another.

What are they protecting here? Homosexuality and bisexuality have been around a lot longer than our country. There is progress being made, but it will be a long time. It might not come to be that the United States will recognize same-sex marriages.

■ Social Security: Don't know how to save money for when you retire? Not a problem. Want your full wages when you're a teen-ager? There's a problem. We need to take some of it with no guarantee that it will be there when you need it. Social Security was established to help retired people financially. I am not knowledgeable enough in the field of economics to tell you whether Social Security is good or bad. I do know that something needs to be done to make sure I get my money when I am 65.

■ Auto insurance: In Kansas, it is illegal to drive without proof of insurance or at least liability, with most states having similar laws. This law has made auto insurance a profitable business. If everybody who drives has to have it, they can charge whatever they want, right?

In my four years of driving, I am guessing I have paid around $2,000 for car insurance. That means working at least 330 hours at $6 per hour. Oh, wait, I forgot to take out the Social Security ... oh, who cares? How much have they spent on me? About 30 cents every time they mail me a bill for my insurance. There should be some give and take, not just taking.

I don't know; maybe they're right. Maybe if Saferide is enacted, it will turn out just like all these other things. They could branch out their duties to include simultaneously transporting a dung beetle colony.

These are just the ramblings of someone who gets paid to have his letters to the editor published every week.

University falling behind in technology, computing

Last year, K-State was ranked in the top 100 most wired campuses in the nation by "ZDNet." They placed 85th overall and in the top 25 among public universities.

But not this year. K-State did not make a showing on the 1998 list of colleges. Schools like Stanford, Ohio State and UCLA all made huge jumps in the rankings, while K-State dropped off the list.

And I understand why.

When I began my career at K-State, the level of technology that was available to students impressed me. There were plenty of public computer labs, and the equipment in these labs was up-to-date. Students could choose from Windows 95, Macintosh and UNIX workstations.

But that was two years ago.

During those two years, technology has progressed at a breakneck pace, and K-State hasn't done the best job of keeping up.

The computer labs that were once loaded with the newest hardware and software now contain yesterday's technology. Some of the workstations are incapable of running today's demanding applications, either because they are too slow or because they lack enough RAM.

Another glaring problem is the recent removal of the Macintosh operating system from campus. I am a journalism student, and the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications is entirely Macintosh-based. The school maintains two Macintosh labs, only one of which has Internet access.

I am lucky, as I have my own Mac at home, but other students, who don't have their own computers, have to fight for time on the few Macs in Kedzie Hall. The removal of the Macintosh platform from campus really makes it difficult for those students who need a Mac for class or because they prefer an Apple to a Windows machine.

Our school isn't behind in every area. K-State does give every student a free e-mail account and space for a personal web page. Students also have unlimited Internet access available campus-wide. In the past, this would have been enough to shoot the school to the top of the technology rankings.

But times have changed. In order for K-State to regain its position as a technology-rich campus, some changes are going to have to be made.

First, the university needs to invest in at least two computer labs that are comprised only of new, up-to-date Windows-based machines. The current computers are definitely great for checking e-mail, surfing the web and typing papers, and they should be kept in service and placed in labs across campus. But the newest programs demand more power than these computers can provide.

Next, the Macintosh platform needs to be re-introduced to campus. The newest Apple machines are cheaper and better than any of their predecessors, and the availability of Macintosh software has skyrocketed in the past few months.

Apple, as a company, has made a rebound, and their once-imminent demise appears to have been averted.

Lastly, K-State has to commit to setting funds aside for upgrading campus technology. This will make it possible for Computing and Networking Services to avoid letting campus computing resources become outdated.

K-State excels in almost every academic area, and technology should be no exception.

Options exist for any student looking to earn an extra buck

Being a college student and living on my own, I've grown quite adept at living on a shoestring budget.

This is primarily because I have lots of experience in raising emergency rent money quickly. For those of you on your own for the first time, this practice is essential to surviving the whole "breaking the apron strings" thing. So, being the great guy that I am, I'll share some of my tricks of the trade with you.

One helpful tip — Some of these practices are, ahem, somewhat illegal. So, if you see flashing lights, get out of there! And you don't know me, either.

1. Donate blood. All of it. There's a bizarre rumor going around that you actually need blood to survive. Pshaw! All I know is that when you cut yourself, it's messy and gets all over the place. I've got an appointment tomorrow to have it all removed, and they're paying me for it, too! Boy, am I pulling one over on them!

2. Erect a toll booth on Anderson Avenue. Don't forget to justify it to passersby. Try saying something like, "This toll is going into a fund to ensure roadwork will never be done on this street again during the school year." That should get results.

3. Cut out your own kidney and sell it on the black market. C'mon, big shot, it'll only hurt for a week or so, and you have two of them. You may have to be drunk to do this, though. The upside? You can get a fortune for those babies on the black market. Oh, a kind of important tip — read a biology book so you're sure what your kidney looks like. You'll be a little woozy from the pain, and you don't want to be ripping out your colon. Nobody wants it, and you might kind of need it later.

4. Disguise yourself as a police officer and distribute parking tickets. Make sure the money is mailed to a neutral site where you can pick it up later. Important! Do not put your address on the ticket!

Carry out a hit for the mob. Of course, a little travel might be required for this one, seeing how the only mob in Manhattan is the Lynch Mob, and they certainly don't need your help.

5. Carry out a hit for the mob. Of course, a little travel might be required for this one, seeing how the only mob in Manhattan is the Lynch Mob, and they certainly don't need your help. When you carry out your hit, get it right or the next hit will be on you. This is basically a desperation move. Say "hi" to Guido for me.

6. Go door-to-door asking for money for charity. If they ask you what charity it's for, mumble something in French and run away. Come back the next day and do it all over again. Eventually, they'll give you money just to keep you from coming back, that or they'll call the police. You've got about a 50/50 shot at making some money.

7. Copy down each of your textbooks word-for-word, photocopy them each 100 times and sell them to students for half of what the Union charges. If you happen to copy down a German IV textbook, call me and let me know what you want for one.

8. Stand in the free-speech zone and juggle live, flaming nuclear warheads. Anything in the free-speech zone is sure to draw a crowd. If you can't find a nuclear warhead, copy me down a German IV textbook and I'll let you borrow one of mine. If K-State is still here when you're finished, pass the hat.

9. Get a job. Ouch. The harsh reality of life exposed.

Students receive help with studies at academic center

■ Center helps teach students different ways to succeed in school.

By JENNIFER WHITE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some students struggle every day to keep their grades up, but the Academic Assistance Center is there to help them realize their potential.

"Our philosophy is we need to be able to reach out to students where they're at and help them up to where they need to be — to help them reach their potential and be able to succeed," Judith Lynch, director of the center, said.

For some students, extra help might be in order. This help often comes in the form of the center's tutoring service, which offers tutoring in basic undergraduate level courses such as math, biology and chemistry.

"We don't offer tutoring in every subject," Lynch said. "In order for it to be efficient to hire a tutor, we need to have a certain number of students requesting tutoring in that subject."

The center is not limited to tutoring. It also offers the PILOTS program, which focuses on students considered at risk due to standardized test scores.

The academic-transitions program helps freshmen and transfer students adjust to university life, while math review classes are offered for students not ready to enroll in intermediate algebra. The center offers a variety of entrance and professional examinations, such as the National Teacher Examination and the Law School Admission Test. This wide range of programs all focuses on student achievement.

"Any math instruction below college algebra is done through our offices," Lynch said. "When the center first began, math was the most requested subject for help."

The instructors of these courses are employed through the center, which is funded by student fees from Student Governing Association, Lynch said.

"They have been generous, but with 20,000-plus students, we have to spread it pretty thin," Lynch said.

Part of the center's time and money is focused on the University Experience classes it offers.

"That's an introduction to the university, an orientation, plus study skills," Lynch said, "plus an enhanced version of the course, with specific assistance in other courses the student is taking."

The study skills taught in the course are applied by students to courses they might be struggling in.

"The students go to an enhanced University Experience lecture each week, and they meet with me for an hourlong recitation period where we concentrate on study skills," said Elaine Egan, a University Experience instructor for sociology and senior in interior design. "Study skills are the main focus of the University Experience."

Egan said she went through an application process and training to be involved with the course.

"It sounded like a really unique opportunity. It is something completely unrelated to my major," Egan said. "It could make a difference in a freshman's college experience, and I thought it would be neat to be a part of that."

Also part of a student's college experience are midterm tests. Melissa Splichal-Peat, senior in math and physics education and math lab leader for a University Experience class, gave some hints for students struggling to study for impending tests.

"A lot of students are afraid to ask about tests," Peat said. "You have to study differently for essay tests than you would a multiple choice test. Don't be shy about asking professors what the test will consist of."

Lynch said students should talk to professors and form study groups. They should review notes and readings briefly every day and more thoroughly once a week, she said. Coming up with a personal system for organizing information and starting early are two more ways Lynch suggested to be better prepared for tests.

"Start studying now so you don't have to cram the night before," she said.

Nationally ranked Texas teams to battle No. 22 Cats

■ Texas, Texas A&M come to Ahearn for weekend matches.

By BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When you think of college volleyball powerhouses, Texas and Texas A&M might be two names that come to mind.

Rest assured. Things are no different in 1998.

This weekend, K-State gets its second crack at the Longhorns and Aggies — only this time it's in Manhattan.

At the beginning of October, the Cats ventured south and returned home with a pair of losses.

K-State fell to Texas in four games and to Texas A&M in three.

Now, three weeks later, the Cats are ranked 22nd in the country and appear to be a more formidable opponent.

"If we play hard and play smart, we're right there," Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin said.

"We stand to gain no matter what."

It all starts tonight when the Cats face the 12th-ranked Longhorns.

Texas is 14-4 overall and 8-1 in the Big 12 Conference after a four-game win over Texas A&M on Wednesday night.

The Cats haven't beaten Texas during their six-match series, which dates back to

"What I've been concerned with is improving every day," McLaughlin said. "It's what's happening right now that's important."

The Longhorns, at times, have proven to be beatable this season. Third-ranked Nebraska swept the Horns in three games Oct. 16.

"You have to bring your 'A' game with you every day," McLaughlin said. "I don't think there's a sense that we're ripe and they're not."

Sance epitomized her season in Wednesday night's win with 18 kills and 16 digs, while hitting .343 for the match.

"They have the best college player in the country in Demetria Sance," McLaughlin said.

"Texas is Texas. They are a very, very, very physical team."

Saturday night, K-State will be host to 15th-ranked Texas A&M.

The Aggies are 12-4 overall and 5-3 in conference play.

Texas A&M has fallen 1-1/2 games behind K-State in the league standings after three losses in a row to the top-three teams in the Big 12.

McLaughlin said he compares playing the Aggies to playing Texas Tech.

"It's a little bit of a cat-and-mouse game,"

McLaughlin said. "You can expect a battle from start to finish."

The Aggies are 0-2 in Manhattan, including a 15-6, 15-2, 15-2 blowout last season, which marked their worst loss in nearly seven years.

It was arguably the biggest win in K-State history, as Texas A&M was ranked 12th at the time.

The Cats will look for another upset this time around.

"We have to come out and play hard and execute our game plan," McLaughlin said.

Tonight's match against Texas will start at 8. Saturday night's match against Texas A&M will begin at 7 and can be heard on KSDB-FM 91.9.

K-State already has a school-record 14-game winning streak, and the Cats look to move to 7-0 on the season in Saturday's Homecoming game against Iowa State

WINNING WAYS

K-State's Gavin Peries (87) tries to haul in a long pass from quarterback Michael Bishop while being defended by Oklahoma State defensive back Ricky Thompson (9) during last Saturday's game at KSU Stadium. Peries couldn't hold on to the football, and the pass was incomplete.

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It may not appear like much on paper, but the K-State football team (6-0, 3-0 in Big 12 Conference play) might learn its most important lesson to date when the Cats look to build on their school record 14-game winning streak against Iowa State (2-4, 0-3) at 1 p.m. tomorrow at Wagner Field.

That lesson is focus.

With the Cyclones bringing a less-than-impressive record to Manhattan and two consecutive road games awaiting the Cats after this weekend, a letdown is always a concern.

Just ask Virginia Tech head coach Frank Beamer, who witnessed his previously unbeaten Hokies fall to perennial doormat Temple last weekend due to a lack of focus.

Dubbing the Cyclones as a doormat would be a mistake. Although they have yet to earn a Big 12 victory, Iowa State possesses a very efficient offense. In 21 attempts inside the Red Zone (the opponents' 20-yard line), the Cyclones have posted 20 touchdowns.

When analyzing their offense, K-State head coach Bill Snyder said he was impressed with ISU's blend of rushing and passing.

"Number one, they're a very balanced offensive football team," Snyder said. "They run the ball and pass the ball equally well."

One of the main weapons in the Cyclone offense is senior quarterback Todd Bandhauer, ISU's record holder with 38 touchdown passes. Possessing one of the quickest releases in the Big 12, Bandhauer has not been sacked this season — a stat that amazed Snyder.

"Bandhauer was a very fine player last year and has been a very fine player this year," he said. "I think he's made improvements and throws very accurately."

"He gets the ball off very quickly and attempts to negate your pass rush, and he, consequently, has not been sacked this year. That's pretty astounding," Snyder said.

Complementing the Cyclone attack is junior running back Darren Davis. The younger brother of former Cyclone star Troy Davis, Darren has continued the family legacy by rushing for 759 yards this season, ranking 10th nationally.

"He's a guy who's not going to lose yards very often," linebacker Mark Simoneau said. "He's strong. He spins off tackles, and he does all the things a good running back should do. He's tough to bring down."

Facing a highly-touted rusher is nothing new for K-State, which held Texas' Ricky Williams, the NCAA's leading rusher, to 43 yards in a 48-7 Cats victory on Sept. 19. But corralling Bandhauer was a legitimate concern for Snyder, who said he wouldn't consider changing his defensive scheme due to Bandhauer's ability to avoid sacks.

"I don't think so. On the other side of the coin, if he is rushed, he's probably not going to be as accurate as he normally would be," Snyder said.

"It's important to us to maintain the balance in our defensive package and not be afraid to utilize a good defense," he said.

Labeling K-State's defense as good would be like calling DaVinci a decent painter. The Mob leads the nation in four different statistical categories and brings the No. 4 total defense to Wagner Field.

Regardless of their numbers, strong safety Jarrod Cooper said there is room for improvement.

"The last five quarters we've played, I don't think we've played good defense," Cooper said. "From the fourth quarter at Colorado to the whole four quarters of (Oklahoma State), we haven't played well."

If the D has trouble holding the Cyclones, they can take solace in the fact that K-State's offense leads the nation with 52.8 points per game. Although Iowa State holds some insight into K-State's play book (ISU Coach Dan McCarney coached with Snyder at Iowa), wide receiver Darnell McDonald said if the Cats stick to their game plan, nothing can stop them.

"If we execute, block where we're supposed to block and put hat on hat, no one can stop us, even if they know where we're going," he said.

With the chance to reach 7-0 for the first time since 1910, the Cats know they must maintain their focus on the Cyclones before preparing for the two contests away from KSU Stadium.

Although ISU looks like an easy victory on paper, right guard Jeremy Martin said the Cats won't take them lightly.

"Iowa State's faced some pretty good teams this year, and if you look at their record, yeah, it's not very good," he said. "But if you look at the scores, they've put some points up, and their defense plays pretty hard, so it's going to be a challenge for us."

K-State's 1998 squad loaded with superstars on both sides of the ball — and that equals wins

VIEWPOINT

BERGGREN

After viewing K-State's first six games, fans and foes are coming to the conclusion that there is a new brand of football being played in Wildcat Land.

No, Bill Snyder has not implemented some kind of new offensive scheme that is blowing opponents away. He's just using the same old tricks that put the Wildcats on the map five years ago as a top-20 program.

Defensively, Snyder hasn't changed anything, either. K-State always has had nine players in the box — leaving the corners in man coverage on receivers — to stifle offenses by shutting down their running games and putting a heap of pressure on their quarterbacks.

The difference in K-State football this season is the motherload of talent that lies in every entity of the team.

No matter where you look across the Wildcat roster, there is a player who, on any other team, would be labeled as its superstar. K-State is packed with so many superstars that no one player stands above any other.

The plays that all these superstars are turning in on a weekly basis are translating into crushing blowouts on the scoreboard and unbelievable NCAA statistical rankings. No other team in the nation is ranked in the top five in six statistical categories.

The Wildcats rank first in net punting, punt returns, scoring offense and scoring defense, are third in total defense, and are fourth in pass efficiency defense and in rushing defense.

There are the obvious big-play performers like Michael Bishop, who even when he's having an off game is still unstoppable, and Frank Murphy, who has only shown hints of his speed and ability to both run and catch the ball.

What about Aaron Lockett, a redshirt freshman who is throwing up receiving numbers that could end up shattering his older brother Kevin Lockett's career feats?

What about Eric Hickson, who is so steady at running back, averaging 86 yards a game in a role where he doesn't even get the ball enough to have any kind of real rhythm?

But what about the not-so-obvious big-play offensive players, like fullback Brian Goolsby, who has an excellent shot at making the pro's after his senior season, just based on his blocking abilities?

What about tight end Justin Swift, who, when he's not blocking someone, is wide open for the short gainer but rarely is used because Lockett is streaking down the field past every defender?

K-State's offense definitely is loaded with talent, but the Wildcat defense sure didn't come up short in the old gene pool. At every position, whether it's on the line, where Damion McIntosh and Darren Howard rule the roost with 24 and 22 tackles respectively, or anywhere else, there are superstars galore.

You can look at the Wildcat linebacker corps, which is second to none in the nation with three preseason Butkus Award candidates and one Butkus award finalist in middle linebacker Jeff Kelly.

You can look at the K-State secondary, where strong safety Jarrod Cooper ranks third on the team in tackles with 42 and free safety Lamar Chapman ranks second on the team with two sacks.

Not even Snyder can deny that his team is loaded with playmakers. "When you look at the players across the board, you would think that might be true," Snyder said.

"With Michael at quarterback, he's made some big plays. Lockett now has emerged in that capacity, Darnell (McDonald) has shown the capacity and Eric (Hickson) has made some plays."

"Frank Murphy has shown the ability, and Justin Swift has come up with plays that classify him as a big-play guy that probably gets overlooked, and Brian Goolsby is probably as steady and instrumental in creating big plays as anybody else."

"You know what? I can't deny that K-State is loaded with talent, either."

FLOATS

Manhattan Town Center.

The parade normally occurs on the Saturday morning of Homecoming, but the possibility of a game time change for television coverage and conflicts with tailgating caused organizers to change the date, said Heather Lansdowne, chair of the All-University Homecoming committee.

The parade will begin at the mall, travel down Poyntz Avenue to 11th Street, go north on 11th Street by City Park, then west on Moro Street to the Old Stadium where a bonfire and the Pant the Chant contest will take place from 6 to 8 p.m. Lansdowne said the winning floats will be displayed in Aggieville's Triangle Park Saturday.

The parade will feature the floats, as well as K-State Ambassador candidates, national chairman of the alumni board, student body president and political candidates. Veryl Switzer, assistant athletic director and former K-State running back, will serve as the parade's grand marshal.

Mary Seltzer, executive secretary of the Panhellenic Council, said the annual parade will be a treat for the community and is a good display of the students' hard work.

Gillen also said it's an important way to get the community involved.

"It gives people a chance to show some school pride to the community," she said. "Body building and Pant the Chant aren't as communitywide."

Nick Lander, president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, said the event is important to the community and students.

"It's something that people look forward to each year. They get to interact with the Manhattan community, and it brings people together to form a bond for the rest of the year," he said.

said.

"We need to further those gains with a stronger emphasis on graduate education," Coffman said.

Wefald will present other topics of concern to the university, but the lecture's focus will be the future of research at K-State, Coffman said.

"My remarks will be solely focused on graduate education," Coffman said.

Ruth Dyer, assistant to the provost and organizer of the lecture series, said the annual address is in conjunction with the first session of the lecture series because the topic is a high priority for the university.

"The university would like to place some emphasis on research and graduate education," Dyer said. "They want to examine the direction K-State will take with regard to this topic."

Wefald's and Coffman's addresses will be followed by two guest speakers.

Karen Holbrook, senior vice president for academic services and provost of the University of Georgia, and Arden Bement, distinguished professor of engineering and head of the School of Nuclear Engineering at Purdue University, also will speak about issues, challenges and trends research universities face, as well as shaping graduate education programs for the future.

A panel will be available to answer questions and continue the discussion after the presentations. The panel will consist of the four speakers and Patrick Richard, university distinguished professors chair, and Ron Trewyn, vice provost for the graduate school and research.

The addresses and presentations will be broadcast live on TCI-TV 19 and LP-TV 21.

in elementary education and a judge for the contest.

Thursday was the second night of competition and the finals for the greek houses. Panhellenic Council Executive Secretary Mary Seltzer said residence halls were put on the second night of competition this year to decrease the length of the preliminary round.

Seltzer said she was pumped up before the night started, but she was relieved when it was over.

"The time and effort that goes into body building makes tonight such a showcase," she said.

Members of the K-State volleyball team attended the event, and they said the performances increased their excitement for their matchup tonight against the University of Texas.

"All the older girls told us we had to come watch it," said Lisa Mimick, freshman in pre-health and a member of the team. "It is really exciting, and it gets you pumped up for the game tomorrow."

K-State cheerleader Stephanie Symes, junior in marketing, said she was impressed by the way members of her house, Alpha Delta Pi sorority, and other competitors performed. Because of their performing experience, cheerleaders and yell leaders are not allowed to participate in the contest.

"I was impressed by the level of intensity of each finalists' routine, and every routine was intricate and exciting," Symes said.

Jesse Russell, freshman in wildlife biology, said it was nice to get involved as a representative of residence halls.

"A lot of people sit around and let Homecoming pass by — it is one of those things to increase school spirit," Russell said.

Audience members and participants alike were impressed.

"I was really impressed with the amount of enthusiasm that all the houses showed. It was great to see," said Julie DuBois, junior in public relations.

all the goodwill trips planned after he gets back.

"I guess we had some sort of image, our own image, of what it would be like when he retired from the Senate, and it had not included the Discovery launch," she said, laughing.

John Glenn admits his family was cool to the idea of his returning to space, but claims they warmed up when they heard about the medical experiments he would be conducting.

Lyn Glenn, a counselor and refugee worker-turned-painter, who lives in St. Paul, Minn., said her brother shares her misgivings.

Dr. David Glenn, 52, is a family practitioner in Northern California; his two sons are about the same age he and his sister were when their father rocketed away on Feb. 20, 1962.

"Both of us had the same response when we heard about this," Lyn Glenn said. "It was kind of like, 'Been there, don't want to do that again.' Our whole lives, we both have lived with the potential of our father's death."

First came Korea, after his stint as a combat pilot in World War II. Then came test pilot work. Then came Project Mercury. And then, perhaps most frightening for the Glenn teen-agers, came America's first manned orbital flight.

Lyn Glenn (short for Carolyn) vividly recalls watching the launch with her mother, brother and maternal grandparents at the family's home in Arlington, Va.

Vote Yourself A Raise

A Raise In Salaries

Manhattan salaries and wages are at an all-time high.

Because in 1994 Manhattan voted to invest in creating new jobs. That investment is working. ☑ The 1/2¢ economic development sales tax ends this year. Let's sustain our controlled growth. Vote "Yes" for 1/4¢ to replace the old tax. ☑ That's less than it was. It will bring Manhattan more! ☑ Vote "Yes" on November 3 to keep Manhattan's wages and salaries rising.

4 more flood victims found

By PAULINE ARRILLAGA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WHARTON, Texas — Four family members who were last seen leaving a wedding reception during a downpour over the weekend were found dead inside their car at the bottom of a murky, rain-swollen creek Thursday as the storm death toll in Texas climbed to 27.

Justin Hartman, whose girlfriend, 2-month-old daughter and 65-year-old grandmother were among those who died in the car, fainted as workers pulled the Lincoln Town Car from the Salado Creek, where it was found in 10 to 12 feet of water. They were last seen Saturday night.

A missing 7-year-old boy also was found dead.

Floods have ravaged south and central Texas since the weekend, when as much as 2 feet of rain fell. Damage has been put at $400 million. Twenty counties have been declared federal disaster areas, making them eligible for aid. Gov. George W. Bush said five more counties should be on the list.

The Colorado River topped 47 feet Thursday, surpassing the 46.1-foot record set in 1991. The river was expected to crest today at 48.5 feet.

In Wharton, 55 miles southwest of Houston, authorities took boats and big-wheeled Army trucks into the Colorado floodwaters to urge people to leave.

"This area's continuing to take on water, and it probably will all day long," Fire Chief David Copeland said as he stood on a dry spot of land across from a neighborhood swallowed by the river.

Some were stubborn, including 94-year-old Ira Mae Anderson, who waved off rescuers for most of the day before leaving by boat late in the afternoon. Floodwaters were covering the front steps of her one-story home before Anderson relented, heading pleas from a friend.

"I'm used to being alone," she said,

"but I'm tired of worrying."

Streets which were dry 24 hours earlier became swamps as the river swelled, surprising those who failed to heed earlier warnings to flee.

"This homestead down here, I've never seen it like this before," said Demetria Frazier, who escaped before dawn with her brother from the house they share.

Wharton County, Texas' leading rice producer, was reeling from the damage, though farmers already had harvested their first crop of the season. Still, more than 30,000 acres were soon to be harvested for a second crop.

Bob Little, general manager of the Rice Farmers Co-op in nearby El Campo, estimated up to 15,000 acres were lost — the last thing these farmers needed after taking a hit from drought and earlier storms.

"This is kind of finishing us off," Little said.

Peace accord nears completion

By BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUEENSTOWN, Md. — With key elements of a Mideast accord falling into place, Israeli and Palestinian leaders tentatively agreed Thursday night on a procedure for revising the Palestinian charter to eliminate calls for Israel's destruction, diplomatic sources said.

An Israeli official called it a "break-through agreement" with the Palestinians and said the Palestinian National Council and other groups would convene in Gaza. James P. Rubin, the State Department spokesman, said "some substantial progress had been made ... but there is no closure."

In a hastily arranged news conference in the summit press center, White House spokesman Joe Lockhart said, "I think people here are determined and they are working hard."

Rubin cautioned that "even if one makes an advance on parts of an issue, it doesn't mean it's closed. I've watched them talk for a few hours over a few words."

But Israeli and Palestinian sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, insisted that several key issues were virtually settled on the eighth day of the Middle East summit at this Chesapeake Bay retreat.

One of the most emotional was the Palestinian covenant. And Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Leader Yasser Arafat cleared major hurdles regarding it, the diplomatic sources said.

"We succeeded," a senior Israeli official told The Associated Press. Minutes later, Palestinian sources confirmed the agreement on the covenant.

Still unresolved, however, were a U.S. call for a timeout in Israeli settlement expansion on the West Bank and Gaza, the establishment of a Palestinian airport.

Netanyahu, who had threatened to walk out on the talks Wednesday night, instead stayed on for the marathon negotiations with Arafat aimed at ending a 19-month stalemate in Mideast peacemaking.

Under the tentative agreement on the PLO covenant, the Palestine National Council, a de facto parliament, would assemble along with other Palestinian groups, Israeli and Palestinian sources said. The convocation would take formal action to annul clauses of the 1964 document that promotes Israel's dismantling as a Jewish state.

President Clinton would attend the convocation, according to the sources. Rubin said "it would be flat wrong to say the big issues remaining today have been resolved."

Netanyahu had made action by the Palestine National Council a centerpiece of the eight-day summit, declining to sign on to a further Israeli withdrawal from the West Bank unless Arafat yielded to his demand.

The Clinton administration gave only limited backing to Israel on the point, saying repeatedly that Arafat had already taken big strides to disavowing the emotional provisions of the Palestine Liberation Organization's founding document.

Netanyahu insisted that only the council could complete the legal cancellation of the emotion-laden provisions.

On another tough issue, the official said Israel and the Palestinians would form a joint committee to consider Arafat's demand for another Israeli pull-back on the West Bank following the 13-percent withdrawal that would be called for in the accord.

And in a rush to wind up the summit, the Israeli officials said Netanyahu also had agreed to release scores of Palestinians held in Israeli jails, but not "those with blood on their hands."

Still unresolved, but nearing solution, was setting up a safe-passage route for Palestinians to cross back and forth between the West Bank and Gaza, Israeli sources said.

Sources said the accord would include a timetable for the arrest and punishment of suspects identified by Israeli authorities.

The CIA would oversee the meting out of justice.

Escalation of eco-terrorism evident in Vail

By STEVEN K. PAULSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — The burning of a ski lodge and other buildings on Vail Mountain appears to mark a significant escalation in eco-terrorism, going well beyond the graffiti-spraying, tree-spikings and smaller arsonists committed by radical environmentalists.

Wednesday night, an underground organization called the Earth Liberation Front claimed responsibility for Monday's attacks in Vail, the most costly act of eco-terrorism in America, with damage estimates of at least $12 million. No one has been arrested in the attacks.

"This was a surprise because it was so bold," said Ron Arnold, vice president of the Center for the Defense of Free Enterprise, an organization in Bellevue, Wash., that tracks crimes committed to save nature.

"They've stepped over a line they've never crossed before. Now, they no longer care what the public thinks. They're also getting more professional. That troubles me a lot."

Seven fires broke out on the mountain before dawn Monday, destroying three buildings and damaging four chairlifts.

The fire came just days after Vail began clearing trees on an expansion project bitterly opposed by environmentalist groups. Last month, Vail won a significant court battle against the groups, which say the expansion would interfere with plans to reintroduce the lynx to the region.

In a letter sent to news media outlets, the ELF said it carried out the Vail arson "to stop the destruction of natural habitat and the exploitation of the environment." It said the expansion of the biggest and busiest ski resort in the United States would "ruin the last, best lynx habitat in the state."

"Putting profits ahead of Colorado's wildlife will not be tolerated. This action is just a warning. We will be back if this greedy corporation continues to trespass into wild and unroaded areas," the communiqué said.

The ELF was founded in Britain in 1992 by Earth First! members frustrated with the lack of progress in protecting nature. Last June it claimed responsibility for spraying red paint on the Mexican Consulate in Boston to protest the treatment of peasants in Chiapas, Mexico.

Since December, the ELF has taken at least partial responsibility for fires at U.S. Agriculture Department buildings in Olympia, Wash., a fire at an Oregon coral used for wild horses and burros captured by the Bureau of Land Management, and the freeing of 310 animals from a Wisconsin fur farm.

"As long as it doesn't harm human lives, we approve," said Craig Rosebraugh, an environmental activist in Portland, Ore., who sent out the communiqué for the ELF. "I think it was a statement to corporations who continue to exploit and destroy the Earth. And I think it did just that."

Katie Fedor, a spokeswoman for the Animal Liberation Front based in Osceola, Minn., said her group has allied itself with the ELF and the two organizations have declared war on companies that desecrate the Earth.

"It's a war. It's a nonviolent war. It's a nonviolent revolution. Unfortunately, the traditional routes to societal change such as lobbying haven't worked. Constituents are not being heard. We are forced to take nonviolent action," she said.

Fedor refused to identify those who carried out the Vail attack, but said: "They assured that no one, human or animal, would be injured and they were successful. People should take comfort in the fact that this was a professional action."

She said activists who carry out attacks have no formal training and get most of their information on building bombs and other devices from books or the Internet.

Arnold said attacks by radical environmentalists have increased steadily over the past two decades. One of the first organized groups was the Ecoraiders, a group of teen-agers who caused more than $2 million in damage in the Santa Catalina mountains near Tucson, Ariz., more than two decades ago, destroying billboards and houses to stop developers.

Over the years, environmentalists also have put metal spikes in trees to discourage timber companies from cutting them down. Loggers and mill workers have reported serious injuries from cutting trees containing spikes. Environmental groups said they aren't to blame for the injuries because they warn loggers to avoid the trees.

The attacks by environmental radicals also have increased in severity, to the point that Congress had hearings last June. In the past 20 years, more than 1,500 attacks have been reported.

Arnold, who testified at those hearings, said members of Earth First! upped the ante in 1988 with an attack on the Arizona Snowbowl, using explosives to damage ski lifts.

The battle escalated in March 1997 when the Animal Liberation Front used pipe bombs to blow up five feed trucks in an attack on a fur breeders cooperative in Sandy, Utah. The offices and computer system were destroyed; damage was put at $1 million.

The Unabomber Ted Kaczynski also took up eco-terrorism. Kaczynski, whose bombings left three people dead and 29 wounded, admitted that two of his victims were chosen based on Earth First! publications.

Radio, TV director gets K-State football fans ready to roll on home gamedays

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State football fans will be spending another Saturday afternoon at KSU Stadium for the Iowa State game. But, as in the last few years, they'll be getting more for their money than just football.

Ben Boyle, athletic director of radio and television communications, said entertaining fans before and during the game is almost as important as the game itself.

"It's part of the whole game-day atmosphere," he said. "College athletics is a high-dollar event now. People want to be entertained."

Entertaining a crowd of more than 40,000 fans takes a lot of work and coordination, and Boyle's job is to coordinate everyone's ideas.

Boyle takes everything that will happen at the game — Willie the Wildcat's skits, the K-State Marching Band, Jumbotrons — and puts them into a minute-by-minute script that outlines each thing that will happen before and during the game.

"The key is planning and preparation," Boyle said.

"One thing we try to do is put on a show beyond the game."

K-State is setting examples to be followed by other schools in its pregame show.

Because he was so impressed after attending last week's game, the athletic director for Oklahoma State said he wants Boyle to hire someone to tape the pregame show Saturday and send it to him.

One thing he might have been impressed with was the stadium voice of the Wildcats, Ivan Wilkinson. Wilkinson, who has been the voice for the last six or seven years, said he tries to get fans involved with the game by getting them excited.

Students who attend the games probably noticed the change in the phrase Wilkinson uses to lead the football players onto the field. In past years, Wilkinson yelled over the public announcement system, "Let's get ready to rumble!" This year, he changed the phrase to "Purple, get ready to roll!"

"A lot of us kicked around the idea to get something more original than something that's done at a lot of different places," he said.

Wilkinson said when he was at the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, he heard the football team chant "Purple, get ready to roll" at the pep rally, and he decided to try that phrase.

"I thought the team would like it, since they did it in their huddle," he said.

Wilkinson said the new phrase hasn't been as successful with fans, but it's original.

"It's not near as exciting as the 'Let's get ready to rumble,'" he said.

"Good for another Wildcat first down," wasn't successful at first, either. Wilkinson said, but it is now a phrase well-known by fans.

Wilkinson said he hopes "Purple, get ready to roll," will catch on, too.

There were also legal reasons involved in the change.

Like many other schools who use the phrase, Boyle said the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics received a letter from Michael Buffer, who coined the phrase "Let's get ready to rumble" and now owns its copyright. However, he said that wasn't the reason for the change.

"We just wanted to develop a theme that the players would like," he said. "They're the ones you want to get fired up and ready to play."

Wilkinson said if the fans want "Let's get ready to rumble" back, he would be glad to do it.

"It's not that I don't want to do it, I wanted to get something that's ours," he said.

Other facets of game day that entertain fans are Willie, the Jumbotrons, the marching band and the Big Cats — the men on stilts.

Cindy Fox, assistant athletic director, said the No. 1 reason people attend the football games is for the football, but the entertainment is important.

"We're just the frosting on the cake," she said. "It's very important for us and the individual ticket holder not only to see a great game but to have a great time."

Fox said the Jumbotrons really enhances the pregame environment.

"I think it's been a great addition to our football environment, and it's been entertaining," she said. "We've been able to do some things with it."

The pregame will continue to change, and the athletic department will try new and innovative things but still will respond to what the fans want, Fox said.

"From the moment the fans pull into the parking lot to the moment they leave, we want them to have a good time," she said.

Program offers free smoke detectors

Manhattan residents no longer have an excuse to put off getting a smoke detector, because they're being given away.

Flint Hills Breadbasket has begun to distribute smoke detectors to low-income families in the area. More than 100 have been given out since the program began in July.

"Just because you are low income, you are still entitled to the same safety everyone else has," said Shirley Bramhall, Flint Hills Breadbasket executive director.

Although safety is the main reason for the program, the smoke detectors also are required by law, which states that every residential dwelling must have one smoke detector on each level.

Rather than handing out the maximum $25 fine, the Code Services division of the Manhattan Fire Department is supplying smoke alarms to households so they will be in compliance with the law.

"We're giving them what they need for the state law instead of fining them," Fire Marshal Don Francis said.

The smoke detectors initially were given to Flint Hills Breadbasket by the Riley County Health Department after the department expressed an interest in the program.

"They sent us about 30 or 40 of them, and they went like hotcakes," Bramhall said.

After the fire department was asked to supply batteries, employees went a step further and decided to supply the whole detector — batteries included.

The fire department was given a grant by the Safekids Program for 50 smoke alarms. At an open house for the public, 35 were given out in one day.

"If we can't continue to get grants, I think we'll buy some from our budget," Francis said.

Smoke detectors also are given out, if needed, during annual inspections by the fire department. Rental properties with three or more units are inspected annually by the department.

Other housing units are inspected by the code division after a complaint or if the property is new.

"We're slowly getting the word out that if you need one, we'll give you one," Francis said.

Manhattan public housing has not been affected by the new law. Public housing, which is subsidized by the federal government, already is equipped with smoke detectors.

"We've had smoke detectors long before the law," Jai Johnson, public housing officer, said.

Residents interested in receiving a smoke detector are asked to fill out a form at Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"As long as the fire department continues to give us smoke detectors, we'll continue to give them out," Bramhall said.

The code division also has agreements with the Riley County Fire Department and the Blue Township Fire Department, which provide the same service. Bramhall said she would like to see more people take advantage of the program to increase the number of local residents with smoke detectors.

"It saves lives. It's better to have that alarm going off to save your family rather than having everyone taken over by smoke," she said.

Detectors save property, lives

A properly maintained smoke detector can save property and lives. Routine smoke detector checks are a necessity to ensure they are still functioning properly.

Fire Marshal Don Francis of the Code Services division of the Manhattan Fire Department said people in households with working smoke detectors are 50 percent more likely to escape a fire.

He said the test button should be pushed each month, which ensures the sound on the smoke detector is functioning, but not the smoke detector itself.

"It really makes sure that the battery is still working," Francis said. "It gives you a better sense of security that it's going to work."

The battery should be changed annually. The manufacturer's warranty on a smoke detector normally is 10 years, and they usually cost between $3 and $15.

The city of Manhattan took steps last July to make sure that all houses have smoke detectors. The Smoke Detector Act requires all households to have one smoke detector on each level.

However, the fire department is giving fire detectors to households, rather than fining them.

"If we find a house that doesn't have one, we'll provide one for them," Francis said.

The best location to put a smoke detector is in a hallway outside the bedrooms so everyone can hear the alarm, but this is not where most fires originate, Francis said.

The most likely place for a fire to occur is in a kitchen. In the winter, many fires also are started from furnace equipment.

Francis said that if a fire should occur, it is important to stay low in a room full of smoke. Check the door to see if it is hot. Crawl out a window if the normal exit cannot be accessed.

Francis said smoke detectors can be an important safety and financial safeguard.

"Smoke detectors save lives, and fires are detected earlier, so there's less property damage," Francis said.

Campaign ad forces K-State to report NCAA violation

OUR OPINION

The Collegian editorial board says the athletic department should look into reprimanding Peterson. See Page 4.

■ Advertisement second time Peterson uses Wildcat football players for political purposes.

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A campaign ad placed in Sunday's Manhattan Mercury will force the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics to report another rules violation to the NCAA.

Jeff Peterson, R-Manhattan, placed an ad in Sunday's Mercury featuring a photograph of himself with K-State quarterback Michael Bishop.

NCAA regulations state that student athletes are not allowed to endorse anything, including political candidates.

Kent Brown, Sports Information director, said Bishop did not give permission for the photo to be used in the advertisement.

"He probably took the picture during one of our sponsored photo days this fall — probably either Media Day or Fan Appreciation Day," Brown said. "It was fine for him to take the picture at the event, but he did not have permission to use it for a political advertisement."

Peterson confirmed that the photo was taken at Media Day and said permission from Bishop was not received.

"I did not ask Michael for his endorsement," Peterson said. "The ad was supposed to be a fun, positive, pro-K-State kind of piece."

Peterson said he did not know that the ad was against NCAA regulations.

"I was not aware that this ad would break NCAA rules when I placed it. There is no way that I would ever knowingly jeopardize K-State in any way," Peterson said.

Brown said K-State must report the incident to the NCAA, but no significant consequences would result.

"In the big picture of things, this is not a major offense. It won't cost Bishop any eligibility or result in any punishment for K-State," Brown said.

K-State is under investigation concerning money a Garden City, Kan., booster club gave football player Frank Murphy. K-State still is waiting for the response from the NCAA Infractions Committee concerning Murphy, but Brown said Peterson's ad should not affect the committee's decision.

"This is a minor infraction. It should not affect the Murphy case in any way," Brown said.

Peterson ran a similar ad during his 1996 election campaign featuring another K-State football player, former cornerback Chris Canty.

Brown said K-State warned him athlete endorsement ads were against NCAA regulations, but Peterson said no one contacted him concerning the 1996 advertisement.

"We had really positive feedback from the Canty ad in 1996," Peterson said. "I now

Speech focuses on academic, financial gains

By NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State President Jon Wefald used the State of the University address Friday afternoon to give an overview of the financial and academic gains K-State has made over the last decade, as well as the progress that needs to be made if K-State hopes to be in the upper tier of public universities.

Among the things imperative to K-State's progress, Wefald said, is increasing the salaries of its faculty members and convincing legislators in Topeka that K-State is worth investing in.

"Since about 1932, we've been 42nd out of 50 land-grant universities in faculty salaries," Wefald said.

Wefald said a three-year plan has been devised to increase salaries so they are par with land-grant universities like Oregon State University and North Carolina State University, K-State's peer institu-

Mideast leaders face tough sell of accord

By DINA KRAFT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OFRA, West Bank — Jewish settlers demonstrated across the West Bank on Sunday, vowing to scuttle a new Mideast peace deal that gives more land to Palestinians.

The protests came hours before Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu returned to Israel, hoping to convince hard-liners that the deal he made with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat was the best possible. Netanyahu was expected to face a no-confidence motion Monday in parliament.

Arriving back in Israel to a red-carpet welcome, the Israeli leader said security concessions won from the Palestinians during the nine-day summit outside Washington would justify ceding more West Bank land.

"We are returning after a long and difficult effort to bring ... security and peace to Israel," he said. "We achieved such a deal — we achieved the best deal."

Arafat, meanwhile, said in Cairo that he hoped the new accord would be "accurately and faithfully" implemented. Arafat's comment, made at Cairo airport after briefing President Hosni Mubarak on the accord, reflects Arab skepticism that Netanyahu will live up to Bunck and Asquith's Homecoming pairing of Alpha Delta Pi/Sigma Chi/Delta Tau Delta placed fourth in the parade competition and fourth overall. The parade started downtown, continued along Poyntz Avenue and ended after circling through Aggieville.

Homecoming week filled with purple pride ends in Wildcat victory

Success was not entirely new to the winners of this year's Homecoming competitions and K-State student Ambassador elections.

The teams that won the overall Homecoming Spirit Award were Strong Complex in the residence hall and scholarship house division and Pi Beta Phi/Phi Gamma Delta/Lambda Chi Alpha in the greek division.

Aaron Cross, Homecoming chair for Lambda Chi Alpha and senior in industrial engineering, said members of this year's first-place pairing in the greek division had been experiencing déjà vu.

"About five or six years ago, we won with the same pairing," Cross said.

He said the Lambda Chis were excited about the win but were resting after a week of hard work.

"We've been winding down this weekend," he said. "Everyone got up for the game but after that we relaxed and watched movies and hung out."

Strong Complex also was celebrating a repeat win. The complex had won the residence hall and scholarship house division the last five years, said Miranda Hinrikus, social chair for Van Zile Hall and sophomore in elementary education. She said emotions were high when the moment came to announce the winning pairings.

"A friend of mine had put everything into Homecoming, and she started crying because this is the fifth year in a row that we've won," Hinrikus said. "She's been here for every year."

Hinrikus said everyone in the Strong Complex, which is composed of Putnam, Boyd and Van Zile halls, was excited but exhausted after their win.

Student ambassadors were announced at Saturday's football game at KSU Stadium. Student ambassadors represent the university to alumni and students.

Students elected Phil Stein, sophomore in political science and pre-law, and Angie Moxley, junior in textiles, to represent them.

Population change affects deer bag limit

Due to heavy deer populations, the deer bag limits for this season have been increased to a possible six deer per person. An extra two-day season that will run Jan. 9 and 10 also will be opened.

Deb Aldrich of the Information Education Center at the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks said deer populations have been increasing steadily over the years. The number of permits issued each year depends on deer populations.

"They do survey work, and if it's showing we need to harvest more, more permits are issued," Aldrich said.

This year, heavy populations in certain regions of the state have made two extra game tags for antlerless whitetail deer available for hunters who purchase any other permit. The game tags are for hunters who purchase permits for units of eight to 13 and 16.

The game tags will be sold over the counter by most licensed vendors. They are good for use in muzzleloader, archery or firearms season. There is no deadline for purchasing the game tags, as they will be available all season.

The extra two-day season is open to all hunters with an unfilled 1998 permit. Hunters must hunt with the weapon and in the unit specified on the permit. During those two days, all permits convert to a bag limit of one whitetail deer without a visible polished antler.

Dole breaks boredom by helping candidates

MILLTOWN, N.J. — He was relaxed, funny and just a little self-deprecating. He shook hands, posed for pictures and even stopped to look for bargains at a garage sale.

Former Sen. Bob Dole spent Saturday doing what comes naturally to a politician — campaigning. But not for himself.

The Republican from Kansas came to New Jersey to support two candidates looking to defeat incumbent Democrats for Congressional seats. Along the way, he displayed the humor that has become more apparent after his unsuccessful 1996 bid for the presidency.

"It's always great to come to New Jersey," he said at one rally. "We didn't do too well here in '96, but one thing I've determined is that once you get out of politics, your numbers go straight up. People can't remember why they're mad at you, and I don't go around reminding them."

While going door-to-door, he stopped to talk to Joe Calabrese, who was having a garage sale.

Dole asked, "Got any old '96 buttons left over?"

Calabrese, 37, said Dole had respect in the public eye because he was not an office holder in a scandal-laden capital.

"That makes a big difference," he said. "The way Washington is right now, I don't think anyone trusts anybody from down there."

The longtime Kansas politician said he had offered his help to the two campaigns because they were races the national party was watching. Besides, he said, he was facing a malady that strikes many retirees — boredom.

"I was getting a little restless, sort of like anyone else who retires. You feel like you want to do something," he said. "I said, 'Give me the competitive races, races where we have a real opportunity.'"

Ground broken for Oklahoma memorial

OKLAHOMA CITY — Thousands came to the site of the Oklahoma City bombing Sunday to break ground for a memorial to the 168 people who died, with Vice President Al Gore digging the first scoop of dirt.

"The people who died here were victims of one of the cruelest visitations of evil this nation has ever seen," Gore said. "But we offer them today not pity but honor, for as much as any soldier who ever fought in any war, they paid the price of our freedom."

After speeches by Gore, Attorney General Janet Reno and other officials, Gore took a shiny shovel and dug it into the ground where the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building once stood.

He handed the shovel to young Clint Seidl, who was in the second grade when his mother died in the 1995 bombing. She worked for the Secret Service, and Clint said he wanted to do the same. Gore said several agents wanted to talk with Seidl after the ceremony.

"Being down here always takes us back," said Diane Leonard, whose husband died in the April 19, 1995 bombing that also left 500 injured.

The $24.1 million memorial will include a reflecting pool, an interactive museum and 168 stone chairs built atop glass bases, one for each of the people killed.

A portion of the chain-link fence that surrounds the bomb site will be kept as part of the memorial. The fence has become a shrine, with visitors leaving mementos.

The fence holds "the real story of our democracy. This is how we feel," Gore said.

Burning well delays retrieval of bodies

BRUCELAND, La. — A seventh worker died Sunday from injuries suffered in a natural gas well explosion, and authorities retrieved the charred remains of five other workers from the well's fiery wreckage.

The well blew up Saturday as 13 workers prepared it to begin pumping natural gas. It continued to burn through the day Sunday, sending flames 100 feet or more into the air.

Emergency crews entered the fiery, twisted wreckage after cooling it with water and clearing a path to the five bodies.

Another victim was brought out hours after the explosion. The seventh person died early Sunday; another worker was in serious but stable condition.

Five other workers were examined at hospitals Saturday and released.

The well is in a remote area of Bienville Parish, about 45 miles east of Shreveport. Despite initial fears that the fire would spread to nearby woods, officials said the blaze likely would be contained.

State authorities did not plan to begin investigating the cause until all of the bodies were retrieved and the blaze is put out, state police spokesman Chris Johnson said.

Philip Gipson, associate professor of biology, has studied wild hogs since they appeared in Kansas five years ago. This hog skull came from a male wild hog at Fort Riley that weighed about 200 pounds.

STEVE HEBERT/COLLEGIAN

Wild hogs continue to infiltrate Fort Riley, Midwest

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Kansas has a hog problem, and it has nothing to do with big corporate farms. It's mean wild hogs, multiplying rapidly, tearing up crops, spreading disease and killing livestock.

"If you care about your state, you should care about this," said Philip Gipson, K-State associate professor of biology, who has studied wild hogs since they appeared in Kansas five years ago.

Kansas is now among 23 states coping with wild hogs, sometimes called feral hogs. Six states have been invaded in the last 10 years: Colorado, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Kansas.

How the hogs got to Kansas and how many they number is uncertain, but officials are aware of three reproducing herds in the state, each numbering in the hundreds.

They're located at Fort Riley, the strip mines of Crawford County in the southeast, and the Gyp Hills of Barber and Comanche counties in the southwest.

Wildlife experts said hog-hunting enthusiasts probably dumped them on the Kansas prairies several years ago.

"Maybe they thought it would be good for the state to turn 'em loose," said Mark Uhlik, a Washington County farmer and president of the Kansas Outfitters Association, an association of guide hunters.

Charles Lee doesn't think it's been good for the state. Lee, who has hunted and trapped predators throughout Kansas, met one of the tusked hogs last spring somewhere along the border of Comanche and Barber counties.

"Meanest thing I ever trapped," Lee, K-State's extension wildlife expert, said. "It weighed 265 pounds. It tried to come up over the top of the hog panels twice, and it wasn't trying to get away. It was trying to come at me."

At Fort Riley, the hogs have taken up residence in the "high impact zone" — 15,000 acres of shell crates and unexploded shells. No one goes there but a herd of hogs that has been multiplying since moving in five years ago.

The Army invited hunters to kill the animals, which kept multiplying anyway. Next came the helicopter attack. For five days last winter, a chopper swooped low over the tallgrass as a predator hunter leaned out the cockpit, firing away with a semiautomatic shotgun. When it was over, 199 hogs were dead.

It wasn't enough, with more wallowing in creeks on the post.

"We wish we could have got them all," said Herb Abel, chief of Fort Riley's conservation division. "But we didn't, and we never will. There's still 20 to 40 wild hogs in the high-impact zone, and we can't go in to finish them."

Abel said the Army ordered the hogs shot as a last resort and because of concerns that they would spread disease to neighboring farms.

To feedlot hogs, the ferals pose the risk of pseudorabies, hog cholera and swine brucellosis. To humans, they can spread encephalitis and parasitic worms. They also eat indiscriminately.

"They'll eat your corn, wallow in every milo field and every creek," said outdoorsman Kirk Woods, who plans to be ready with a shotgun if he sees any wild hogs around his farm in rural Oxford, south of Wichita. "They eat anything — quail eggs, turkey eggs, reptiles. They kill livestock, even deer. They spread disease."

George Teagarden, Kansas livestock commissioner, said farmers in states where hogs have spread must increase their testing for diseases.

"They could cost multi-millions of dollars all over the state if the ferals spread," Teagarden said.

Kansas outlawed the harboring or release of feral hogs in 1995. However, that doesn't address the problems of the animals that are already in the state, mating and multiplying.

Groups join for music, fellowship

Nearly every seat was filled in the lower section of Union Forum Hall last night as a five-member band and two backup singers performed upbeat songs with Christian themes to the crowd.

"This is going to be awesome," Keri Davis, freshman in pre-professional secondary education and a member of the campus worship group Christian Challenge, said before the all-campus Christian worship service.

Passages from the Bible were read between some of the songs, and as the band played, audience members sang along, clapped and several raised their hands in the air.

Seth Davidson, one of the organizers of the service who also played guitar in the band, said the worship service was the first of its kind.

"It's the first time we've done this," Davidson, senior in education-English, said. "We practiced just two times before tonight."

There are several Christian worship groups that meet on campus regularly, but they normally don't all meet for joint-worship services. Davidson said he thought nine different campus ministries were represented at last night's service.

Some of the student-worship groups in attendance were Campus Crusade for Christ, Navigators, Christian Challenge and Ichthus Christian Fellowship.

Bass player Chris Thompson, a member of Campus Crusade for Christ, said he and a band performed most Thursday nights in Denison Hall, but the all-campus service was an original idea.

"There are a lot of different groups represented," Thompson said. "The whole thing is really Seth's brainchild."

The non-denominational service began with a prayer, and band members met backstage before the service to pray together as well.

Paul Spears, junior in sociology, attended the service and said the large audience was representative of students who had a common goal.

"The worship groups are spiritually unifying," Spears, a member of Ichthus, said. "Many times you have people who think they can make it on their own, and the groups are a place where together we can find support, encouragement and God."

OUR VIEW

Athletics department victim of poor judgment

Sometimes it is the little things that cause the biggest problems.

That seems to be the case with Jeff Peterson, Republican candidate for 66th state district representative. Peterson ran an advertisement on Sunday in the Manhattan Mercury showing him shaking hands with K-State quarterback Michael Bishop. The tagline read: "Give one the Heisman and re-elect the other."

Under NCAA rules regarding the conduct of collegiate athletes, athletes are not permitted to endorse or promote anything other than the occasional public-service announcement. They are not allowed to use themselves for the profit of any person or group, unless otherwise sanctioned by the NCAA.

An ad depicting Michael Bishop shaking the hand of a candidate for state government is a violation of NCAA rules. It is a minor infraction, and no serious harm to the athletic program will come directly from this, but the decision is still pending on the Murphy violation. Although Department of Intercollegiate Athletics officials said they will immediately report the ad to the NCAA, there is no denying the seriousness of the issue. Those presiding over the Murphy case will not be blind to another trespass, and although the punishments for minor infractions are light, the punishment for Murphy could be severe. The recent ad will not help.

We only can assume that we are experiencing growing pains from a program that is beginning to be larger than life.

In 1996, Peterson used a campaign ad featuring standout K-State cornerback Chris Canty. K-State Sports Information director Kent Brown said the athletics department notified Peterson of the violation after the Canty ad appeared.

The boosters in Garden City, Kan., involved in the Murphy case lost privileges they once enjoyed. Maybe that's what Peterson needs. Anyone involved in this sort of case should be reprimanded in some way.

The football program and the university itself can't afford to encounter these little surprises every so often.

The athletics department needs a policy in place to deal with small problems like this one. Fans need to be aware of the possible repercussions of their actions.

Most student athletes seem happy to sign autographs for fans or to have their photos taken with fans. We hope that an incident such as this one will not result in a loss of privileges like Fan Appreciation Day. No doubt the athletics department will feel a need to control these activities to a greater extent.

Granted, this is an extraordinary case, one that officials can't foresee.

We all need to make sure something like this doesn't happen again. Some say we're on the road to a national championship. Fans, officials, coaches and players need to start acting like it.

NEGLECTING OUR NATION'S YOUTH

Motivation, caring needed to get America's children on pathway to success

VIEWPOINT
Corbin H.
CRABLE

A deadly epidemic is on the rise. It affects children all over the world, and unfortunately, it is caused by their own parents. It is neglect, and the parents of these children are the instigators.

They drop off their 12-year-old daughters and all 27 of their pre-pubescent friends at the movies on a Friday evening and leave them for hours after the movie has ended, to be babysat by theater employees.

They could care less about their children's piano recitals, or the fact that they won first place in the third-grade spelling bee. They're just not that involved in the lives of their children.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but I thought to have children is to take an active interest in their lives and thus to raise them to be well-rounded, healthy individuals. I've seen too many instances where, when their kids do something rebellious, parents treat their children's actions with a sense of apathy and mostly refuse to take responsibility for these actions.

Allow me to elaborate, as always, with a story.

One evening when I went home to work at my good ol' movie theater a couple of months ago, a woman reported to me that a group of about 10 kids was outside, throwing rocks at her car. When I went to confront them, of course, all of them denied doing anything of the sort. I finally got one member of the herd to call his parents, and within a good half hour, a maroon mini-van drove to the front of the building. A baggy-eyed woman peeked her head out of the driver's side window, a cigarette in one hand and a beer in the other.

"Okay, what have you guys done now?" she cackled, either obviously not concerned or completely oblivious to the fact that her son and his entourage were vandalizing the property of another patron.

The angry (and rightfully so) owner of the car explained the situation to the beer-sipping hag at the wheel of the mini-van. In a raspy voice, the "mother" basically called the woman nothing short of a liar, and she used the age-old excuse, "I know my kid, and he would never do that."

How many parents claim to know their children yet play such a minimal role in their lives?

The issue of violence in schools, which has grown to be a dominant concern over the past decade, too often places the blame on the entertainment and news media and not enough pressure is put on the people who are supposed to be monitoring what their children watch or listen to. Again, it is issues such as this that cause parents to turn an apathetic ear, too immersed in their own lives to concentrate on anything else. When parents toss caution to the wind and allow their children to do, say and watch what they want, they lose the right to complain about the state of affairs of America's youth. Truly, they have no one to blame but themselves.

While I have absolutely no experience with parenthood whatsoever, I do know what a world of difference it can make for a child when his or her parents show a genuine interest in what their kids are doing. My mother made it a point to stay at home with her children until we were in college. To this day, I can't remember her not missing a Boy Scout meeting, a choral concert or just a chance to stop and say how proud she was of me.

Parents, please make it a point to set aside some time regularly, if not daily, to stop and spend time with your kids or just let them know you love them and care about what's going on in their lives.

With a little motivation and caring, you can do your part to help fight the epidemic known as neglect.

Answers found in tolerance for all sexual preferences

Editor,

Hate-crime legislation would not have stopped the murder of Matthew Shepard, the treatment of the black man who was dragged behind a truck in Texas or any other violent act motivated by prejudice. The one thing that would have prevented these crimes against humanity would be tolerance. Tolerance for race, ethnicity, culture, religion, ideology and sexual preference would have stopped it, as would have tolerance for differences — not the current campaign of hate.

The hypocrisy is calling yourself a Christian but telling everyone to "be on guard against everyone who yells, 'Tolerance!'" The hypocrisy is proclaiming to love the person but hate who they are or the lifestyle they "chose." Who would choose to be spit on, yelled at, beaten, thrown out of the house, to lose their family and their job because they are gay or bisexual?

Guys, lesbians, bisexuals and transgendered people don't want special rights, which I would like someone to define. What special rights have we asked for? To love whom we chose? To laugh with whom we chose? To raise children with whom we chose? (If this one abhors you, do your research and you will find we are not pedophiles or child abusers.) To choose the person with whom we want to share our fears, joys, successes and failures? To live without the fear of getting beaten? To feel a sense of belonging? Stop all prejudice. Stop the hate. Got Love?

TV producers desperate to relive pain of son's childhood

VIEWPOINT
Mary Renee
SMITH

I came home one night a few months ago and checked my messages. My mom called, my best friend called and the "Maury Povich Show" called.

There on my answering machine was the perky voice of a 20-something production assistant wanting me to call her in reference to the new "Maury Povich Show." My mind reeled. What backwoods family member had called into the show sharing all of our family secrets? What ex-boyfriend or ex-girlfriend had I wronged who would want revenge? Who would want to be reunited with me on national television? Who do I know who I think is a man but is really a woman?

In my family and with my circle of friends, the possibilities were endless.

It was too late to call the young woman back that evening, and so for the night I was left to my imagination. The night was filled with nightmares of my mother dragging me for a makeover on national television. I had dreams of becoming a famous talk show host on my own after my stellar performance on the show. Then I woke up.

I called the 1-800 number and was transferred to the production assistant of choice. She told me her name, title and then, the kicker, the reason for her call.

"I was searching around online and came across one of your columns," she said.

Oh great, that narrows it down, I thought. It doesn't rule out any of my fears of bad crossdressers or big-haired enemies from junior high.

"You wrote about bullies," she said. Bullies, bullies, bullies. I quickly searched my brain. I haven't written about bullies. She sensed my confusion in the silence.

"It was in June of 1997 — a really good column. You wrote about some bullies who were picking on your son on the way to school. You seemed really mad. I was wondering if the situation had gotten any better?" she asked.

"Oh," I said in the kind of way you do when your grandmother starts talking about her toenails. "I remember that now. That was a long time ago. Yes, it has gotten better. Thanks."

At this point in the conversation, we both knew what was going on. She was about to ask if my son and I would like to come on the show, and I was about to turn her down cold.

Her tone changed a bit.

"The Maury Show was wondering if you and your son would like to come on the show and talk about this bully," she finally asked.

"I don't think so," I said flatly.

I have seen talk shows like this before. Parents drag their children on television to talk about being teased at school. Everyone looks so pathetic. The child ends up crying. The parent ends up crying. The host cries and hugs the child and the parent. They cut to commercial.

My son is not like those children. This was one bully at a bus stop. My son is a well-liked, well-adjusted young man, and I am going to keep it that way. National humiliation is not part of my plan for my children.

The production assistant persisted. "Well, you also mentioned in the column that you were teased as a child. Can you remember anyone specifically who teased you?"

Her name was Pina Pinales. I was new to the school in sixth grade, small, poor and insecure. She came down on me like a vulture on rotting flesh. In my memory, she is huge and has crooked teeth.

I will never forget the day we got in a fight and missed noon recess, because she pulled my hair in music class. She was wearing a purple-and-black striped shirt and black jeans.

"No, I can't recall anyone specifically," I said.

"Really? Usually the names of people who tease someone are etched in their minds forever," the production assistant said.

We both knew what was going on.

Children are cruel. That is a fact of life. There is no reason to drag up the past and parade it on national television. Living well is the best revenge.

The only reason I ever would want to meet up with the bullies of my past would be to thank them. I am a secure, happy adult in part because their teasing made me stronger.

Stuff like that doesn't make good talk shows.

HALO speaker says brutal border patrols need to be stopped

By JAMI STUMP

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is time to restore immigrant human rights in America at the borders, said Maritza Broce, community coordinator for the Coalition de Derechos Humanos/Arizona Border Rights in Tucson, Ariz.

In conjunction with Hispanic Heritage Month, sponsored by Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Broce spoke Friday in the Union Big 12 Room.

She said an increase of immigrant deaths to 1,300 people in three years is a result of beatings and border patrol brutality.

"What gives me hope is that people will speak out and break the silence about immigrant human rights," Broce said.

Derechos Humanos works to fight discrimination, law-enforcement harassment and the abuse of authority at the border and in urban areas. Broce said the group promotes human and civil rights of all immigrants.

HALO President Carlos Contreras said HALO chose Broce as speaker for Hispanic Heritage Month because Midwesterners don't always hear about what is going on at the borders.

"We wanted to have someone speak about what is actually going on out there and talk about issues concerning immigration policy," Contreras said.

Broce said immigration legislation is more restrictive today.

"What amazes me is that when I have children I will have to tell them that the regulations that are set right now are more oppressive than they have ever been," Broce said.

She said there has been a 75-percent increase of border enforcement. This includes 8,000 border patrol agents and $260 million in military hardware at the border. Broce said the current border patrol budget is $3.8 billion. All of this results in the increase of immigrant abuses by border patrol, Broce said.

"People are dying in order to live," Broce said. "The border patrol is forcing people out to bad places to cross in order to live. Hunger will always conquer fear so people will risk their lives to get across."

Leo Prieto, senior in pre-medicine and Speaker Committee chairman of Hispanic Heritage Month for HALO, said Broce had good points during her presentation.

"In the Midwest, we don't have a clue that these situations exist," Prieto said. "Human rights is a concern for everyone. It is one thing to be aware, but you must understand that policies are affecting people and taking away their human rights."

Abortion doctor killed by sniper's bullet worried he would face violent end

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Dr. Barnett Slepian's own words signal a chilling premonition of his own violent end.

In an August 1994 letter to the editor reacting to his frequent run-ins with "nonviolent" anti-abortion forces, he wrote: "Please don't feign surprise, dismay and certainly not innocence when a more volatile and less restrained member of the group decides to react ... by shooting an abortion provider."

In a TV interview, the father of four worried about how his family would cope, if his work ultimately led to his death.

Slepian, a 52-year-old obstetrician-gynecologist, was killed by a sniper who fired a rifle bullet through a window in his home Friday night. His was the first fatality among five sniper attacks on upstate New York and Canadian abortion providers in the last four years.

The killer remained at large Sunday as an international investigation continued. Police listed no suspects. All of the previous attacks have occurred within a few weeks of Nov. 11, Veteran's Day, which is known as Remembrance Day in Canada.

In the 1994 letter to The Buffalo News, Slepian said he did not begrudge pro-life demonstrators who "scream that I am a murderer and a killer when I enter the clinics at which they 'peacefully' exercise their First Amendment right of freedom of speech.

"They may also do the same when by chance they see me during the routine of my day," he wrote. "This may be at a restaurant, at a mall, in a store or, as they have done recently, while I was watching my young children play at (a children's restaurant)."

But "they all share the blame," Slepian wrote, when "a more volatile and less restrained member of the group decides to react to their inflammatory rhetoric by shooting an abortion provider."

In a statement Sunday, the founder of Pro-Life Virginia called Slepian's killer "a hero," one who ended Slepian's "blood-thirsty practice."

"We as Christians have a responsibility to protect the innocent from being murdered, the same way we would want someone to protect us. Whoever shot the shot protected the children," the Rev. Donald Spitz said.

Slepian often expressed his fears that abortion foes were encouraging violence. In a 1994 interview with Buffalo TV station WIVB, Slepian said, "Maybe they are not going to perform it, but they're setting up their soldiers to perform the violence."

Three years earlier, he told the station he was not afraid for himself but for his family and children. "I think, if I wasn't around, what they would go through," he said.

All of his children were home when Slepian's wife, Lynn, called 911 after the sniper's bullet entered the doctor's back, pierced his lungs, exited his body and ricocheted into another room. Fifteen-year-old Andy had been watching a Buffalo Sabres hockey game on television and ran into the kitchen.

"He saw blood in back of his dad," Andy Berger, 14, a friend of Andy Slepian, told The Buffalo News.

Generally, people on both sides of the abortion debate condemned the killing. The Revs. Rob and Paul Schenck of the National Clergy Council, who helped organize the massive "Spring of Life" abortion protest in Buffalo in 1992, urged "all people of conscience to defend life peacefully."

"The murder of Barnett Slepian," they said, "is wrong, sinful and cowardly."

Dr. George Tiller of Kansas, who was wounded in an August 1993 shooting in the parking lot of his clinic, called it "a well-orchestrated political Armageddon against women and their freedom."

Slepian was shot only days after a Canadian-American task force investigating the series of sniper attacks warned abortion providers to be alert for possible violence. A reward of at least $100,000 in Canadian currency (about $150,000 U.S.) was announced when the warning was issued last week.

Private funeral services were planned for Monday.

Cats run wild on Homecoming with 52 points, 573 yards of offense

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

For weeks, K-State head coach Bill Snyder has preached the virtues of a team effort.

Saturday, his sermon was answered. K-State (7-0, 4-0), posted 573 yards of total offense and held the ball more than 40 minutes of the contest to dismantle Iowa State (2-5, 0-4) 52-7 Saturday. It was the Cats' school-record 15th-straight victory and the 14th-straight win at KSU Stadium.

The Cats' seven touchdowns were provided by seven different players, while the K-State offense barely skipped a beat when starting quarterback Michael Bishop left the game with an injury in the third quarter.

Adam Helm stepped into the huddle and completed four of six passes for 70 yards, including a 1-yard touchdown run. Snyder wouldn't speculate on Bishop's injury but said he thought Bishop would be all right.

when the outcome already was decided. With 5:37 left in the game, running back Eric Hickson scampered for 3 yards, giving him 117 on the afternoon and the school's career rushing record with 2,268 yards. Hickson replaced good friend Mike Lawrence, who set the record last season.

Snyder said it was nice to see Hickson earn the record in front of fans who have supported him during his six years at K-State.

"Eric wanted to do it here at home," he said. "He's a tremendous player and leader on this team, and it's quite an honor that he achieved it."

Hickson opened the scoring for K-State early in the first quarter when he stepped through the Cyclone defense for a 5-yard touchdown run. The 80-yard drive was highlighted by a 40-yard fingertip catch by running back Frank Murphy. Murphy finished the day with 67 yards on 14 rushing attempts and 112 yards of total offense. The drive countered a mid-set Iowa State field goal from 35 yards, which would have been the first time this season K-State has trailed in a game.

After the defense held ISU to a three-and-out series, Bishop led the Cats on a lengthy 10-play drive capped off by a 13-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Aaron Lockett.

"I thought Michael played pretty well," Snyder said. "He did what we'd been asking for, and he handled play

Hickson's 24th birthday present comes in form of K-State career rushing title

By NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State running back Eric Hickson received an early birthday present Saturday. One day before he turned 24, Hickson became the school's all-time leading rusher.

With 5:36 remaining in the fourth quarter, Hickson broke the record on a 3-yard run. The run was not flashy, but he said that was fine.

"I just wanted to try not to get any negative yards and just keep plowing forward, and sooner or later it will fall," Hickson said.

Hickson gained 117 yards on 23 carries and scored a touchdown, but his final two carries of the day will be the most memorable.

Hickson jogged off the field and embraced Coach Bill Snyder after gaining 10 yards, which he said he thought eclipsed the all-time rushing mark of 2,265 yards set last season by former teammate and close friend Mike Lawrence.

Instead, Hickson soon learned he only had tied the mark. Three plays later, Hickson set the mark for good, giving him 2,268 yards and 25 touchdowns for his K-State career.

Punter James Garcia said Hickson's focus was a key to his success as a running back.

"He's a very determined runner," Garcia said.

"He's got his sights set on what he wants to do, and he goes 110 percent in doing it."

Shortly after Hickson broke the record, he left the field and received a standing ovation from the 43,203 fans inside KSU Stadium.

"I was really proud to be able to get it here at home and to get the standing ovation from the crowd," Hickson said.

K-State offensive coordinator Ron

Hudson said the Cats were very conscious of Hickson closing in on the record going into the game.

Snyder said it was important to Hickson that he break the record at KSU Stadium.

"Eric wanted to do it here at home. He's a tremendous player and leader on this team, and it's quite an honor that he achieved it," Snyder said.

Life has not always been easy for Hickson. After seeing limited playing time as a backup to J.J. Smith his freshman year, Hickson gained 816 yards on 158 carries and earned Big 12 Conference honorable mention honors during his sophomore season.

Hickson missed the entire 1996 season with a broken leg suffered during a Fan Appreciation Day preseason scrimmage.

"I went through a lot of trials and tribulations, but somehow, I came out on top," Hickson said.

Where many players might have questioned their return, Hickson, with help from his family, kept a positive attitude and worked hard to bounce back.

"My brother always told me to stay positive, stay focused and be patient, and good things will happen," he said. "I got back on my feet and got into therapy, and I really made my mind up that I was going to come back."

Hickson received a medical redshirt following the 1996 season.

Hickson said he'd like to send the NCAA a thank-you card for allowing him to attain his goals.

Offensive guard Jeremy Martin said Hickson's perseverance made his record-setting day that much more significant.

"For him to miss a whole year and get dinged up consistently over his first three years," Martin said, "it's just a tremendous achievement for him to get the record."

K-State running back Eric Hickson carries the ball in the first quarter against Iowa State on Saturday at KSU Stadium. Hickson rushed for 117 yards.

More than 1,000 wrestling fans packed King Field House to watch a night of wrestling Friday. Fans paid $10 to watch the six matches.

Rumble at FORT RILEY

Jake "The Snake" Roberts is greeted by fans while heading to the ring before his match with Greg "The Hammer" Valentine during Friday night's Wrestle Slam at King Field House at Fort Riley. Over his shoulder, Roberts carried his python to the ring, where it stayed in his corner until the end of the match. After Roberts won the match, the python was let out of the bag and put into the wrestling ring.

Professional wrestling delights soldiers, fans at Fort Riley

THERE WERE LEAPING ELBOW-SMASHES, flying drop-kicks, face-plants into the turnbuckle, devastating pile-drivers and, of course, lunges from the top rope.

It was classic professional wrestling, and it made its way to Fort Riley on Friday night. 1-800-COLLECT sponsored the event, which allowed older fans to see their former heroes and gave younger children an opportunity to experience the excitement and entertainment of pro wrestling.

Included in Friday night's lineup at King Field House were former World Wrestling Federation greats Jake "The Snake" Roberts, Greg "The Hammer" Valentine, Brian Lee (formerly the "Evil Undertaker," now "Chainz" with the tag team "DOA" in World Championship Wrestling) and Brian Knobs, a member of the tag team "The Nasty Boys."

The first of six matches to appear before the 1,000 in attendance featured "Malibu" Mike Henderson vs. Derek Stone. Stone, clearly the underdog based on crowd response, ended up pinning the 18-year-old Henderson.

The 26-year-old Stone was taunted by the crowd and seemingly humiliated by the smaller and more muscular Henderson throughout the match.

"At first it bothered me, but after a while, I was like, hey, they don't know me and will probably never see me again in person, so it doesn't bother me anymore," Stone said in response to how he is usually received by an audience. "It's all just part of it."

A resident of Lawrence, Stone said he hopes to make it someday as a regular in either the WWF or the WCW.

A majority of the crowd waited in anticipation for the man they came to see — Jake "The Snake" Roberts. In the third match of the evening, they got what they wanted.

Once Roberts' opponent, Greg "The Hammer" Valentine, was in the ring, Roberts made his way towards the ring, along with his enormous python draped over his shoulders in a bag. Roberts did his usual pre-fight ritual of intimidating his opponent with his reptile, as well as scaring the referee out of the ring.

After exchanging blows with each other and taking turns throwing one another into the ropes, Valentine finally got Roberts into a "figure four" leg-lock. Roberts, however, managed to get out of it and rallied his way to a victory.

Limping with an apparent knee injury due to the leg-lock, Roberts made his way over to his bag and tossed his python out onto the mat, which sent both Valentine and the referee scrambling out of the ring.

Next was Brian Lee vs. Tom Brandi. Lee said backstage that he has wrestled and beaten Brandi approximately 10 times.

changes well."

Bishop also completed touchdown passes of 21 yards to Darnell McDonald and 30 yards to Gavin Peries to put K-State up 28-0 at the half. Bishop left the game after connecting on 14 of 21 passes for 216 yards and three touchdowns.

After Helm's third-quarter touchdown run finished a 14-play drive that spanned 7:54 on the clock, kicker Martin Gramatica capped off another steady, time-consuming drive with a 31-yard field goal in the fourth quarter to increase the Cats' lead to 38-0.

Touchdown runs of 9 yards by Brian Goolsby and 11 by Murphy finished the Cats' scoring on the afternoon. ISU quarterback Todd Bandhauer ended the defense's shutout bid with a 14-yard touchdown pass to Damian Groce with 7:05 left in the fourth.

Once the game was officially in the books, the statistics reflected the Cats' dominance. Doubling the Cyclones in possession time, K-State rolled up 89 total plays on offense while only punting once.

Much of the praise for the offensive domination fell on Helm, who stepped in with nearly an entire half left to play and kept the rhythm established by Bishop alive.

"He totally surprised me. He came out, and he threw well," McDonald said. "Perfect passes right on the money — he made some good decisions. When no one was open, he pulled the ball down and ran for as much yardage as he could get. Adam's a great player, so I wouldn't have minded either quarterback in the game."

While the offense was busy piling up the statistics, the defense was thwarting any Cyclone scoring attempt with solid play. Free safety Lamar Chapman picked off Bandhauer early in the second quarter, the tenth pick on the year for the Cats' "D" by the 10th different player.

The defense also held Darren Davis, the nation's 10th leading rusher, to 18 yards on 15 carries.

Without the services of linebacker Jeff Kelly and cornerback Gerald Neasman, who sat out the game with injuries, the defense responded with solid play from its replacements — freshmen Ben Leber and Jerametrious Butler. Leber finished with six tackles, while constantly providing pressure on Bandhauer. Butler provided tight coverage and recorded five tackles. Defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said the pressure exhibited by the "D" and the play of the two newcomers was solid.

"I thought we got out of the pressure what we needed to and had pretty good control of the game throughout the day," he said.

"Ben played exceptionally well and Jerametrious the same."

This feeling was echoed by Snyder, who said the younger players' response to being thrust into action was encouraging.

"I tell them that everyone is going to get a chance to do something, so it's important that our players be prepared," Snyder said. "I thought they proved they were today when they got a chance to play."

Selecting quality pumpkin key for Halloween success

Now is the ideal pumpkin-carving time, said Chuck Marr, professor of horticulture and extension vegetable specialist.

Marr said most jack-o'-lanterns last for about a week at best.

"When you carve pumpkins, you break the skin and the flesh dries out," he said. "Uncarved, they can last for months."

He said cool weather helps preserve jack-o'-lanterns, but if the temperatures drop into the 20s, people might want to bring them indoors.

"They aren't injured by a light frost, but if they freeze, they get soft and squishy," he said.

Marr said it's best to start with a fully mature pumpkin, which has a tough skin and passes his "fingernail test." Try to puncture the surface with your fingernail, he said, and if the skin won't break, the pumpkin is mature and should keep well. He said to avoid those with soft spots, which are signs of rot.

Marr said although all pumpkins are edible, most hybrids sold for carving have flesh with a higher water content, which has to be cooked longer to be used in recipes.

"Most people aren't into boiling all day," he said.

Most of the pumpkins grown for commercial processing aren't orange at all but more of a yellowish color, like the hybrid Buckskin. The flesh is usually mixed with butternut squash for color before canning, he said.

Maxine Thowe, owner of Thowe Farms, said she grows and sells both carving pumpkins and pie pumpkins, which are smaller with firm flesh. The pie pumpkins are a favorite of children, since they only weigh 2-3 pounds and can be easily carried. She said she offers customers recipes for pumpkin pie and roasted pumpkin seeds.

Her pumpkins are sold on-site every day through Oct. 31 and at Eastside & Westside Markets, she said. Hayracks tote visitors and tour groups from the parking lot to the pumpkin patches, where they can select their pumpkins from the vine.

As Halloween draws near, jack-o'-lanterns are popping up on porches around town.

Joey Podrebarac, freshman in construction science, said one of his two jack-o'-lanterns originally was supposed to be Willie the Wildcat. However, when one cut took a wrong turn, he converted it into a self-portrait.

"I was doing it for my girlfriend," he said, "so I made me winking at her."

Podrebarac's purple pride still shines by candlelight, though. His other jack-o'-lantern bears a Powercat.

The choice of design for Zygmunt Jarczyk, senior in computer science, was easy, he said. He carved a profile of Ziggy, the cartoon character who shares his name. Working on his jack-o'-lantern between classes, he spent less than an hour completing it, he said.

David Gleue said he used a kit purchased at Fort Riley to carve a dancing ghost into his pumpkin. The kit included a template and a piercing tool to cut out the pattern. Gleue said he chose the ghost from among other available patterns because "it was the easiest."

Jack-o-lantern lore

A little history on why we have jack-o-lanterns. Information sources are "Witches, Pumpkins, and Greeting Ghosts" by Edna Barth; and "Celebrations — The Complete Book of American Holidays" by Robert Myers

Most explanations for today's jack-o-lantern point to the story of a Irishman named Jack. The stingy drunkard was said to have tricked the devil twice when he came for Jack's soul. When Jack died, he was denied entry into heaven for living a wicked life, but at the gates of hell, the devil wanted nothing to do with him, either. The devil sent him back to roam the earth endlessly. Before he left, however, Jack asked how he could possibly find his way back through the darkness. The devil, feeling only mildly sympathetic, tossed him a coal from the fires of hell, which Jack stuck in a turnip he had been munching on. Though the vegetable has changed, Halloween merry-makers still light up the night with Jack's lanterns.

Men Against Rape Society hopes to educate

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Their purpose is to educate others — mostly men — about what they can do to stop the act of rape and help others to do the same.

Members of the Men Against Rape Society work to dispel myths and inform students about rape.

The society's idea is that rape predominately is perpetrated by men, Kelsey Needham MARS member and sophomore in pre-health, said.

"Men can commit to personally not committing rape and encourage others to do the same," Needham said.

The group is in a three-week rotation. The first week it has a business meeting, and the next two weeks there are round-table discussions about topics pertaining to rape, such as prevention and education.

"Rape is a problem, and we are aware of that. We do what we can to help through education and prevention," Kelly Robb, senior in elementary education, said. "The more that we are aware, the less of a problem it might become."

MARS also focuses on self-control issues and educating about the possible consequences after rape is committed.

"A lot of times, they don't think about the consequences that can result from what they do. That is why we try to educate others," said Nick Lander, president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls and sophomore in statistics.

Because the name of the organization is Men Against Rape Society, some women thought they could not join. However, Needham said that because MARS is a society, anyone can participate.

"I don't see how you can have membership in a group when the goal is trying to educate men to be against rape. It is a great cause and a philosophy we all agree with," she said.

MARS also gives various presentations about rape to residence hall floors, at freshmen seminars and for anyone else who asks for a presentation.

Posters that help students see that some of the leaders on campus are interested in the cause are displayed on campus every year, Lander said.

"When they see my picture, I hope they will recognize me as someone they have seen in their hall and somebody they know is trying to make a difference," he said.

MARS President Matt Porter said that although rape might not be a problem at K-State, it is a problem on other campuses.

"It takes a group effort to stop it. Everyone needs to help in controlling it, not just some," he said.

Another activity being planned by MARS is a rally this spring. Lander said it is a way to get information out about rape to those who would not get it otherwise. Last spring, the rally was canceled due to the weather, but it is scheduled for next semester.

"The rallies bring a group together on our campus to stand up against something that isn't right," Lander said.

Porter said the decisions made by men are some of the most important things that can be done in order to decrease the number of incidents of rape.

"Men need to be smart in their decisions. They should try to put themselves in the female's position and look at it from their angle," Porter said.

MARS is having a round-table discussion at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Delta Chi fraternity house. The topic will be on the stereotypes of fraternities and rape and what can be done about it. Everyone is invited to attend.

Violence continues in Kosovo, despite U.S. efforts

Peace agreements do not bar Serbs from fighting in self-defense

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — A Serb police outpost is attacked. Men die. An ethnic Albanian village is shelled in revenge. Civilians flee. Fear is everywhere, and the cycle begins again.

The rebel Kosovo Liberation Army says it is protecting ethnic Albanian villagers from vicious attacks by police bent on driving them from the southern Serbian province. Serb-led Yugoslav forces say they are responding to ethnic Albanian provocations.

The low-level daily violence in Yugoslavia's Kosovo province grinds on. The American-led international effort to stop the conflict, which has killed hundreds and driven nearly 300,000 from their homes, has no mechanism for dealing with this kind of violence.

The Kosovo peace agreements do not require the Serbs to pull all their forces out of Kosovo, where ethnic Albanians greatly outnumber Serbs. The agreements do not bar the Serbs from fighting in self-defense.

If one side or another goes too far, the ultimate threat, NATO airstrikes, probably would be a disproportionate response. In any case, air power would be useful only against the Serbs. There is no effective means of punishing the KLA, which is scattered in rural strongholds.

Western diplomats close to the negotiations concede a certain level of violence will have to be tolerated. Infractions of the cease-fire are inevitable, they said. The question is how many and how serious.

What cannot be tolerated are violations that interfere with the political process of resolving the ethnic Albanians' grievances.

The KLA, beaten back but not defeated by a combination of Serb military forces and police in seven months of fighting, has been displaying a new aggressiveness and a certain cockiness — strutting defiantly through some villages in full uniform, practically under the noses of Serb forces.

It is difficult to apportion blame for the almost daily breakdowns in the cease-fire, but the Albanians realize they face no real sanctions from the international community and that the Serbs are under new constraints.

"When we announced a cease-fire, we never said it was a total cease-fire," KLA spokesman Jakup Krasniqi said. "They shell our civilians and attack us, so this is our response."

Veljko Odalovic, the Serb regional governor, said the struggle against what he calls terrorism is the legitimate right of the state.

"It's clear the terrorists want to provoke new conflicts and to involve large numbers of police and army where they can, and the international community knows that," he said. "If that is the case, and our right to respond is restricted ... then one has to ask, who is supporting terrorism?"

Adem Demaj, the political representative of the KLA, said the provocation claim is false.

"The regime does not want peace in Kosovo," he said. "There has not been a single day ... without Serb forces undertaking some action and blaming it on the KLA, saying it was violating the cease-fire. (The Serbs) are not withdrawing, they have been digging in."

There are still 14,000 Serb police in Kosovo, according to NATO — more than double the 6,500 estimated to have been there before Milosevic's crackdown began Feb. 28. About 11,000 Yugoslav soldiers remain, above the 8,000-9,000 normally stationed in the province.

Under the Oct. 12 peace agreement, the 54-nation Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe is to send roughly 2,000 unarmed monitors into the field to verify that Yugoslavia keeps its commitments.

Police confirm fatality report in truck-pedestrian accident

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A pedestrian was killed after an accident Sunday night on U.S. Highway 24 about 10 miles north of Manhattan.

Riley County police and medical crews responded to a report of an injury accident shortly before 7 p.m. Sunday.

A police department source, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed that the pedestrian had died but could not identify the victim or the driver of the vehicle.

"We had a report of a car-versus-pedestrian injury accident," the source said. "We responded and found the pedestrian dead."

The source said the Riley County physician who was on call as the county coroner declared the pedestrian dead at the scene. He did not know his name.

Kansas Highway Patrol trooper Wes Wheeler arrived to assume control of the investigation from Riley County officials. He would not comment at the scene and did not return phone calls at press time.

Witnesses were kept within the confines of the accident scene and left before they could be asked for comment.

Several officers interviewed witnesses and the driver, who was kept at the scene.

competitions, as well as the overall winners, were announced at the pep rally at Memorial Stadium instead of Saturday's football game, Lansdowne said.

"Everyone who participated was there, and not everyone can be at the game," she said.

She also said in recent years, less time was allotted to announcing the winners at halftime.

Cross said the spirit of the whole week culminated in the pep rally, and it was a more appropriate place for the announcement of the winners.

"In the past, it's been downplayed at the game," he said. "And people who don't have tickets to the game couldn't celebrate with the group."

when it looked like he was about to get pinned, Knobs came back with a series of brutal moves that sent the Sultan to the mat.

After retrieving his chair, Knobs swung it and made a connection with the Samoan's head that looked and sounded all too real.

Once down, Knobs quickly pinned the Sultan, and both the match and Wrestle Slam were over.

Because the event was sponsored by 1-800-COLLECT, all of the money generated from the $10 tickets stayed within the Fort Riley community and would help fund various improvements to the base, Wrestle Slam coordinator Jim Westerhaus said.

WEFALD

He said progress won't be made easily.

"This is a very conservative state," Wefald said. "It's very, very tough to get the people of Kansas — the Legislature — to get us to where we should be."

A key element of increasing not only the salaries of faculty but also K-State's general operating money is showing legislators there is a good return on taxpayer money spent on the university. This year, the taxpayer money that went to K-State was about $150 million.

Some progress has been made, including a 2.5-percent operating-expense increase and 4-percent average salary increase approved in the 1998 legislative session, but not enough to keep K-State from being relatively poor compared to universities across the country.

Wefald said progress won't be made by simply complaining to state officials.

"You can't just go to legislators and whine," Wefald said. "We have to show them that K-State is worth investing in and that is what we plan to do."

"Kansas State University is the best investment in the state," he said. "Really, where else can you get a $17-dollar return on every dollar you invest?"

While the battle to obtain and keep the best faculty possible by paying competitive salaries is ongoing, Wefald said K-State has made promising strides in other areas.

Funding for research at K-State is one of them.

In 1988, the university had $18 million in funding for research. This year, the funding has increased to $55 million, putting K-State in the top 70 of all public universities for research funding, Wefald said.

Provost James Coffman, who also spoke Friday, said one of the benefits of improving K-State's graduate programs is it empowers faculty in furthering research funding.

"It will take university-wide involvement to improve this," Coffman said, referring to K-State's graduate programs.

Using the number of Rhodes, Truman, Marshall and Goldwater scholars from K-State as a measure, Wefald said K-State is a leader in another area — generating student scholars.

"I'm pleased we have become the No. 1 public university out of 500 in generating the top student scholars," Wefald said.

In the midst of recent discussions about the expansion of KSU Stadium, Wefald said the most emphasis has been, and will be, on improving academic facilities at K-State in order to attract the state's top students.

A $40 million fund for improving crumbling classrooms was cited as one example. Wefald said half the money will be used to renovate buildings. Up to this point, 15 classrooms have been updated. He said the goal is to renovate 12 to 15 more.

Wefald also pointed out the $11.4

million addition, Fiedler Hall, that will be made to the engineering complex, the $11.9 million that will be spent on an addition to Ackert Hall and a $6 million project to renovate Seaton Hall that Wefald said he hopes will begin within the next one to two years.

"In the last decade, 1.3 million square feet of usable space has been added," he said. "Academic space accounts for 85 percent of that."

Of the estimated $30 million raised from alumni by the KSU Foundation, Wefald said most of it is used for academics.

"Academics garners about 85 percent of all the money raised for K-State," Wefald said.

Aside from the constant jousting for more dollars and the politics of where to spend it, Wefald said people should keep in mind the real reason K-State has been able to improve the last several years.

"Compared to other universities, we are relatively poor financially," Wefald said. "K-State is doing well today because we empower people."

know that the Canty ad broke NCAA rules, but no one told me that at the time. One of the big reasons we ran the ad with Michael Bishop this year was because of our success with Chris Canty's ad in 1996."

Peterson said he will take full responsibility for the ad, but he is bothered that stories criticizing the ad were written before the ad was run.

"A reporter should have notified me that this was against the rules," Peterson said.

"The ad was to run on Sunday, and the stories in the Manhattan Mercury, the Topeka Capital and the Kansas City Star written about the NCAA violations came out on Sunday, too. These stories had to have been written before the ad was even run. Had I been notified, I would have pulled the ad."

The ad was contracted with the Mercury as a one-time ad for Sunday's paper, and it will not run again, Peterson said.

Peterson said he learned the ad violated NCAA policies when a friend called him Sunday to tell him about the story that ran in the Kansas City Star.

"Once I found out about it, I thought the most appropriate thing to do would be to talk to Coach Snyder," he said. "As soon as I got back in town, I stopped by his office and apologized to him. We worked things through, and I feel much better about the incident after talking to him."

Both Brown and Peterson said this is an unfortunate incident.

"We abide by NCAA regulations and ask our fans to respect the rule also," Brown said. "Student athletes like to comply for fans' requests, and I hate to see these opportunities used for personal gain."

Peterson said he now understands that the ad was in violation of the rules.

"This is definitely not an ideal situation. Again, I never intended to bring any harm to K-State. Now, all I can do is apologize and try to make things right," Peterson said.

"You can be sure I will never place this type of ad again."

the agreement to withdraw from another 13 percent of West Bank land.

Arafat also briefed officials in Algeria on the new pact Sunday. He then flew to Morocco and was to travel later to Saudi Arabia.

At least 20 settlers — once Netanyahu's staunchest supporters — were arrested and two police officers were hurt in Sunday's widespread demonstrations, including one outside Israel's international airport after Netanyahu's arrival.

"With the Lord's help, we will use all of our powers to break this agreement," settler leader Ahron Dombi said.

Near the settlement of Ofra north of Jerusalem, about 50 settlers and their supporters rushed past Israeli police and sat cross-legged on the highway, blocking the route. Some settlers wrapped in prayer shawls held morning services at the roadside.

Settlers also burned tires at the Karmel Tsur settlement north of Hebron, police said.

"I'm here to show that this is a sad day," said Natan El, 38, an engineer, sitting in the middle of the main north-south highway through the West Bank. "We are in danger of losing our land, the land we have returned to after 2,000 years."

Tensions also boiled over in the West Bank town of Ramallah, where infighting broke out among Arafat's supporters. Members of the Palestinian leader's political faction, Fatah, battled Palestinian security forces with rocks and bullets. A 16-year-old was shot in the head and killed.

The confrontation broke out after Palestinian intelligence agents searched Fatah headquarters, looking for illegal weapons. A crackdown on unlicensed arms is one of the provisions of the agreement.

In Israel, politicians across the board predicted Netanyahu would face political turmoil as a result of the agreement signed Friday at the White House when he brings it before his right-wing cabinet on Monday.

By handing over 13 percent more of the West Bank to Palestinian civilian control, some Jewish settlements will be surrounded by Palestinian-controlled territory, except for access roads.

Police investigating 2 deaths as possible murder-suicide

By JEFF ELLIOTT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Manhattan men were found dead from gunshot wounds in an apartment late Monday morning after police responded to a call of a man threatening suicide.

The deaths are being investigated as a homicide/suicide, according to a statement issued Monday night by the Riley County Police Department. Authorities would not release the victims' names at press time, pending notification of next of kin.

At the scene Monday afternoon, RCPD Capt. Steve French said officers believed at least one of the victims might have been a K-State student.

RCPD officers answered the call from 2265 Buckingham St., Apt. 7, at 11:29 a.m. Monday. According to the statement, no one answered the locked apartment door when officers arrived. When they gained entry, officers found the two men, believed to be in their late 20s.

"I heard a loud crack. Then, about 1-1/2 to two seconds later, I heard another loud crack. I heard something stumble and hit the floor. After that, there was another loud crack. I looked over at my clock and it said 11:31," Constantinos said.

Constantinos said there had been no loud fighting or screaming before she heard the gunshots.

The management of Westchester Park Apartments issued a statement Monday afternoon, which was placed on each resident's door.

According to the statement, police do not believe the suspect to be a resident of Westchester Apartments.

Authorities could not be reached for comment on the statement.

The bodies were transported to Irvin-Parkview Funeral Home. At press time, investigators said the investigation is ongoing, and the motive is unknown.

Campaign ad didn't violate NCAA rules

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A local political candidate's advertisement in Sunday's Manhattan Mercury that included a photo of K-State quarterback Michael Bishop was not in violation of NCAA rules, Sports Information director Kent Brown said Monday.

That's a change from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics' earlier statements — that the ad was in violation and that they would report it to the NCAA.

Jeff Peterson, incumbent candidate for the 66th district seat in the Kansas House of Representatives, placed the ad, which included a photo of him shaking hands with Bishop at a media event earlier this year.

Brown said he was wrong when he told Collegian reporters Sunday that the ad was a minor violation of NCAA rules.

"It probably would've been more accurate, yes, to say that it was a possible violation," Brown said, "but on a Sunday and a weekend, it's hard to know exactly what the situation is. It's not an NCAA violation, but it's just one of those things."

But even though the ad wasn't a violation, it was still wrong, Athletics Director Max Urick said in a statement Monday, because Peterson didn't ask Bishop's permission before he used the photo.

"The ad implies that the athlete endorses the candidate, and that is inaccurate," Urick said. "For any candidate to take this liberty is improper. The athletic department does not endorse any political candidate."

Peterson said Monday that he knew not asking Bishop for permission to use the photo was a mistake but that it was his only mistake. Besides that, the ad

Chiefs lose 20-13, fall to 4-3 on year

By DAVE GOLDBERG
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Once again, it was the story of the unsung Steelers.

Oh yes, Jerome Bettis, Kordell Stewart, LeVon Kirkland and Carnell Lake did their part as Pittsburgh beat Kansas City 20-13 Monday night. But Lance Brown, Fred McAfee, Hines Ward and Josh Miller did as much.

Bettis rumbled for 119 yards on 33 carries and Stewart threw a 5-yard TD pass to Charles Johnson with 10:05 left in the game for the winning score.

But as Pittsburgh seems to replace free agent defectors by turning hitherto little-known players into stars, they won this game because they got contributions from the little guys.

It began on Kansas City's first possession.

After Miller dropped a 47-yard punt dead on the Kansas City 1-yard-line, Brown blocked a punt that McAfee fell on for a touchdown.

"What more can you say about our kicking game?" Steelers coach Bill Cowher said of Miller, who averaged 46 yards on six punts. "Our kicking game has made big plays time in and time out."

"That's the special teams opportunity of a lifetime to cover a ball in the end zone," said McAfee, a 30-year-old reserve running back who added 36 yards rushing on a late first-half drive that resulted in a field goal.

Ward, a running back-wide receiver-quarterback at Georgia acted like the new "Slash" by taking a handoff from Stewart, the old "Slash," and throwing back to him for 17 yards on a third-quarter drive that led to one of Norm Johnson's two field goals.

The win left Pittsburgh (5-2) in a tie with Jacksonville for first place in the AFC Central, while Kansas City (4-3) fell three games behind Denver and a game behind Oakland in the AFC West.

"We've taken a lot of criticism and a lot of it is just," said Cowher, whose team scored as many as 20

SHALLOW SWIMMING

Ron Mills, an employee with the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department, makes his way through the shallow end of the Manhattan City Park Swimming Pool after finishing winterizing the pool Monday afternoon. Mills, along with two other employees, Shane Wilson and Ron Springer, was trying to get the pool ready for winter by covering all the lights and pulling up the drainage grates in the deep end. Besides what was done Monday afternoon, the walls of the pool have to be sandblasted and repainted, and the cracks must be filled in order to keep the pool in good shape through the winter.

Parking Council gives go ahead for Rec Complex parking pass

By MATT KREPS

MANN

With the Parking Council's unanimous seal of approval on the proposed parking permit specifically for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, students will have another parking option next year.

The $30 pass will allow students to park for up to two hours at the Rec Complex. The pass is intended for off-campus students who want to drive to the Rec Complex but who do not otherwise need a parking permit.

"I think it was a good accomplishment for the students," Student Body President Tracey Mann said.

The permit began as a platform in Mann's campaign and gained approval from Student Senate. From there, it went to Parking Council for final approval.

Mann credited student support for its success. He said interest from more than 400 students who signed a statement saying they do not use parking passes now but would purchase a Rec Complex permit if it was available played a key role in the decision.

Mann also said student leaders went to the administration with a clear plan and evidence of support.

"I think we came to them with a plan, and they were more open to it," he said. Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said the next steps in the permit process are more approvals and legal paperwork. The earliest the permits would be available is next June.

"We have to go through the entire approval process, which allows us to change laws for next June," Abbott said.

The permit still has to be approved by the President's Council and go through an open-meeting process. Abbott said he expects those approvals to go smoothly.

For Abbott, the biggest question surrounding the permit was one of economics. In an earlier Student Senate meeting, he voiced concerns about the costs of patrolling the lots and added expenses for Parking Services.

Abbott said the one-year trial will help determine if the pass is a hit with students and economically feasible.

"It may turn out to be a good thing, and a lot of people may buy it, and it may be a good thing for us," he said.

However, Abbott said enforcement still will be a key issue. Parking Services will have to patrol the lot regularly to enforce the two-hour time limit on the permits and prevent students from using the passes as a cheaper alternative to the full $60 pass.

"The enforcement cost will go up there, because we don't want it to get to a point where there is a lot of abuse," Abbott said.

100 people attend public forum on expansion of Scenic Drive

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fate of the expansion of Scenic Drive has taken another turn.

The proposed extension of the west side Manhattan street north to U.S. Highway 24 drew favorable and dismissive — but always strong — reaction from about 100 people at a Riley County Commission public forum Monday night. The road, which currently runs between Kansas Highway 18 and Anderson Avenue, would define a new western boundary of the city and could potentially spur more development.

Lasting more than two hours, the discussion pitted environmental and suburban sprawl concerns against growth proponents who see the extension of Manhattan westward as a sign of progress.

Reading from a strongly-worded letter, Chris Cokinos, a member of the Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society and K-State English instructor, told the commissioners Russ Frey and Jim Williams that the arterial is not needed and would particularly be harmful to the prairie chicken.

"I think we've been missing the boat in marketing the prairie," Cokinos said. "I would hope we would stop using Konza Prairie as an excuse."

Cokinos' letter urged commissioners to pass a resolution to ask Faculty Senate and President Jon Wefald to prohibit residential, road and commercial development on university property. The proposed artery would pass through K-State property.

Dan Harden, county director of public works, offered a map showing alternatives to the Scenic Drive arterial. The map showed two other possible routes that would be further west of Scenic Drive and still connect the two highways.

"The far western route was 9 miles long, which would be expensive and environmentally destructive," Harden said.

The west side of Manhattan has received much attention as of late. Salina, Kan., developer Jack Vanier, who is father-in-law to vice president for institutional advancement Bob Krause, is developing a housing subdivision for more than 1,200 residents, Grand Mere, on land he owns just west of the Farm Bureau building and north of Kimball Avenue.

At the heart of the matter is whether or not the commission should force Vanier and the Colbert Hills Golf Course, which is mixed with Grand Mere, to comply with a 1990 county master plan that would place a primary arterial road — Scenic Drive —

Pedestrian identified; name not yet released

Kansas Highway Patrol investigators have identified the victim of a Sunday night truck-pedestrian accident but won't release the name.

Trooper Wes Wheeler, head of the investigation, said the victim was a 32-year-old male from outside of Kansas. Wheeler said the victim's name has not been released because investigators have been unable to locate any next of kin.

The accident occurred about 10 miles north of Manhattan on U.S. Highway 24. Riley County Police Department and medical units responded to the accident report at 6:51 p.m.

The man was declared dead at the scene by the Riley County physician who was on-call as county coroner. The victim was walking north when he was struck from behind by a 1979 Dodge pick-up truck driven by Brian Prather, 18, of Randolph, Kan.

Charges probably will not be filed against Prather, Wheeler said. "We don't anticipate any at this time, but everything is still under investigation," he said.

Further attempts will be made to find relatives of the victim, Wheeler said. If none are located, Wheeler said he expected the name to be released sometime today.

Case unravels at MIT after fraternity closes

BOSTON — The manslaughter case against a Massachusetts Institute of Technology fraternity in the drinking death of a freshman effectively ended Monday because the fraternity has disbanded, and there is no one to answer the charges.

Last month, prosecutors took the extraordinary step of bringing manslaughter charges against Phi Gamma Delta — the organization, not its members — in the case of 18-year-old Scott Krueger, who drank himself into a coma at a party and died.

Since no individual members were named in the indictment, the case quickly unraveled when the fraternity disbanded.

On Monday, the Superior Court magistrate who had issued a warrant against Phi Gamma Delta filed it away in case the fraternity tries to reorganize at MIT.

Pamela Wechsler, assistant district attorney, conceded the case is over for now but said it wasn't all for naught: The charges drove the fraternity off campus and prompted MIT to change its alcohol and disciplinary policies.

"A lot of things have happened as a result of the investigation and indictment," she said.

The chapter disbanded the day the indictment was announced and the national fraternity disassociated itself from the local a year ago, Henry said.

Police said Krueger was forced to drink huge quantities of alcohol as part of a pledge contest at "Animal House Night" in the fraternity house.

Doctors order Yeltsin to cancel another trip

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin, reduced to a part-time president in recent months, was ailing again Monday and canceled yet another foreign trip, this time to recuperate from high blood pressure and extreme fatigue.

Yeltsin's fragile health is a source of daily speculation, and a growing chorus of critics questions his fitness to guide Russia through its worst economic crisis in the post-Soviet era.

His doctors ordered Yeltsin not to make a one-day trip to Austria today because he was suffering from an "asthenic condition," the president's office said. Asthenia refers to a lack of physical strength.

Yeltsin's blood pressure also was unstable, presidential spokesman Dmitry Yakushkin said, adding that doctors recommended a vacation for the president.

"I think everything will be fine" with Yeltsin, Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov said Monday.

Primakov will travel to Vienna for talks with the European Union in Yeltsin's place.

Yeltsin aide Oleg Sysuyev said the 67-year-old president would likely start a vacation Wednesday and probably would stay near Moscow.

Serb troops withdraw to comply with NATO

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — In convoys of rumbling tanks and trucks, Yugoslav troops and Serb police vacated some heavily fortified positions in Kosovo on Monday, the eve of a NATO deadline to comply with a peace agreement or face punishing airstrikes.

The withdrawal was President Slobodan Milosevic's 11th-hour attempt to convince NATO he was fulfilling the agreement he reached two weeks ago with U.S. envoy Richard Holbrooke to defuse the eight-month Kosovo conflict.

Throughout the day, lines of army tanks, artillery trucks and police in armored vehicles were seen moving toward military and police barracks in Pristina, the provincial capital, and other cities.

In the Drenica region, 18 miles west of Pristina, a steady drizzle filled freshly gouged tracks made by tanks withdrawing from roadside positions they assumed Oct. 18.

Several police checkpoints were vacant, including one in Malisevo — the last front line in fighting that virtually halted last month. All that remained was a tattered Yugoslav flag that hung over a pile of bricks.

At another checkpoint in Dragobilje, which was occupied by heavily armed police a few days earlier, a uniformed ethnic Albanian guerrilla stood holding an automatic rifle.

2 K-Staters challenge all state colleges in recycling

■ Stacy Meredith, Tracey Mann want to see contest week of Nebraska game.

By JESSE MCCURRY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The biggest day of the year for many K-Staters will offer more than just a chance to beat the University of Nebraska Cornhuskers.

Colleges and universities statewide have been challenged by Stacy Meredith, junior in geology, and Student Body President Tracey Mann to see which one can collect the most pounds of pop cans during the week of the K-State/Nebraska game.

K-State students will have the opportunity to make use out of their pop cans before the game.

"Our main activity will be at the Nebraska game, where we'll be collecting cans from tailgaters before the game," Meredith said. "As a Nebraska native who bleeds purple, having the event at this game is really exciting for me."

This recycling effort is commemorating America Recycles Day, which is Nov. 14.

"America Recycles Day is a national event to increase awareness for recycling and buying recycled products," Meredith said. "I personally wanted to show that recycling doesn't have to be a chore. It is easy and can be fun."

Manhattan residents also will be able to contribute their cans on campus the week of the game and at Aggieville's Triangle Park on gameday. Exactly where the cans can be dropped off is not yet determined, but Meredith said she hopes students will help in her efforts.

"I would love to see various campus groups and departments challenge each other in their own recycling competition," she said.

Students for Helping the Environment is involved heavily in the implementation of the program, but Meredith is asking for help on gameday to collect the cans.

"We will be meeting every Wednesday leading up to the event at 8:30 p.m. in Ackert 120," she said. "We have already had a lot of fun preparing for it and would love to have new people involved."

On Nov. 16, each school involved will weigh all of the cans it collected and the total will be divided by the students enrolled at the college or university. Meredith said she hopes the competition will become as popular as the semi-annual K-State/University of Kansas Blood Drive.

Janet Parrish, Riley County Public Works recycling events coordinator and member of the Kansas committee for America Recycles Day, said the whole community can participate.

Parrish said although some residence halls have recycling containers, most of what happens is through individual efforts. She said she encourages students, especially off-campus, to collect cans, glass and paper.

"Also, if you're not buying recycled products, you're not recycling," she said.

In its second year nationally, Parrish said she thinks the popularity of America Recycles Day will grow.

"A few years down the road I think it will be comparable to Earth Day," she said.

Convicted murderer arrested in Council Grove death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COUNCIL GROVE, Kan. — A Council Grove man convicted of stabbing a K-State student to death in 1993 has been charged in the death of a 15-month-old boy, authorities said.

Scotty R. Adam is being contained in the Morris County Jail on a $250,000 bond. He is charged with felony murder and felony child abuse, stemming from the death of 15-month-old Timothy Post, Kansas Bureau of Investigation Special Agent Scott Teeselink said Monday.

Staff at Morris County Hospital in Council Grove notified police Wednesday of possible child abuse involving the boy, the Morris County attorney's office said. Timothy was airlifted to a Wichita hospital, where he died Thursday evening.

KBI agents arrested Adam on Friday, Teeselink said. Authorities would not discuss the 24-year-old's relationship to the boy.

A preliminary hearing for Adam is scheduled for Nov. 4. In 1993, Adam was convicted of murder in the stabbing death of Scott O. Sanders, a 19-year-old K-State freshman from Junction City.

Two years later, Adam's conviction was overturned on legal technicalities, and a jury in a second trial found him guilty of lesser charges. Adam was paroled in 1996 and has since been living in Council Grove.

Witnesses at Adam's trial said Sanders and two friends were returning home after partying in Emporia the night of Jan. 22, 1993, when they stopped to buy gas at a Council Grove convenience store. One of them got into an argument with two Council Grove residents.

Adam testified he and a friend saw the argument and decided to chase Sanders' car out of town. The other two got into a vehicle and joined the chase on K-177 highway.

Court testimony indicated the drivers forced Sanders to stop about three miles north of Council Grove. Sanders, who was unarmed, confronted Adam and was stabbed four times, including a fatal wound to the heart.

Adam was convicted of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery in July 1993 and was sentenced to 15 years to life in prison.

In 1995, the Kansas Supreme Court reversed Adam's conviction based on legal technicalities involving jury instructions and suppression of evidence.

Adam's second trial was moved to Marion County, where, in February 1996, a jury convicted him of involuntary manslaughter. He was sentenced to three to 10 years in prison.

Kansas Department of Corrections spokesman Bill Miskell said Adam was paroled on April 11, 1996, and finished his parole on April 11 of this year.

Sanders' mother, Marylou Sanders, of Junction City, said Saturday she felt justice wasn't done when Adam was given a second trial and convicted of a lesser charge.

"I hope the system doesn't fail this child as it did ours," she said.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

RECENTLY, MORNINGSTAR CALLED US CHEAP.
IT'S NOT EVERY DAY
YOU GET A COMPLIMENT
LIKE THAT.

All financial companies charge operating fees and expenses—some more than others. Of course, the lower the expenses you pay, the better. That way, more of your money goes where it should—towards building a comfortable future.

We make low expenses a top priority.

As the largest retirement system in the world—a nonprofit company focused exclusively on the financial needs of the educational and research communities—our expenses are among the lowest in the insurance and mutual fund industries.<sup>1</sup>

In fact, TIAA-CREF's 0.51% average fund expenses are less than half of the expense charges of comparable funds.<sup>2</sup> It's why Morningstar—one of the nation's leading sources of annuity and mutual fund information—says, "At that level [TIAA-CREF] is cheaper than any other [variable annuity] policy, and is even competitive with the cheapest mutual fund complexes, though it offers far more benefits."

"TIAA-CREF sets the standard in the financial services industry."

Of course, expenses are only one factor to consider when you make an investment decision. Morningstar also noted our commitment to "consumer education, service" and "solid investment performance." Because that can make a difference in the long run, too.

At TIAA-CREF, we believe people would like to spend more in retirement, not on their retirement company. Today, over two million people count on that approach to help them build a comfortable and secure future. So can you. To find out more, call us at 1 800 842-2776. We'd consider it a compliment.

OUR VIEW

Collegian regrets errors made in story, editorial

As stated in yesterday's editorial board, it's the innocuous details that can do the greatest damage.

Yesterday, this column carried a harsh rebuke to Representative Jeff Peterson. We criticized him for an advertisement run in the Manhattan Mercury on Sunday, depicting Peterson shaking hands with quarterback Michael Bishop.

Department of Intercollegiate Athletics sources told Collegian reporters that the ad was a violation of NCAA rules. We suggested that the implications of including Bishop in the ad could have an effect on the NCAA decision regarding running-back Frank Murphy.

That, as it turns out, was wrong.

College athletes are not prohibited by the NCAA from giving political endorsements, contrary to what we reported yesterday. We were under the mistaken impression that collegiate athletes were prohibited from giving any sort of endorsement, with the exception of public-service announcements. We criticized Peterson when, in reality, the NCAA does not consider a political advertisement a violation.

The article was written on Sunday, a day that NCAA offices are closed. As a consequence, we were not able to confirm whether or not campaign endorsements from college athletes were allowed.

We were in error.

As journalists, it is our job to report the little things — to check facts, double-check them and triple-check them. On Sunday, we called Sports Information director Kent Brown for an explanation. He said the ad was a minor violation of NCAA rules but that it should not affect Bishop's eligibility. This echoed articles run in the Kansas City Star and the Topeka Capital-Journal on Sunday.

Peterson used a picture of him greeting Bishop from this year's Media Day. Although Peterson did not receive Bishop's, the coach's or the athletic department's permission, the ad does not put Bishop in any real jeopardy. Nevertheless, the use of Bishop in a campaign ad was irresponsible. People who use events like Media Day for personal profit should be dealt with harshly. Peterson has since apologized for running the advertisement.

The Collegian moved ahead with an article of its own. We were able to contact Peterson, while the Star and the Capital-Journal were not. Peterson said he had received no warning from the athletic department about running campaign ads with student athletes. The editorial board's viewpoint that was run yesterday said the opposite — that Peterson had received warnings before the Bishop ad. That was untrue but was published as a result of statements from department sources.

Other errors in Collegian stories don't always result in corrections and follow-up editorials, but this is serious. The board's actions may have unintentionally jeopardized the political aspirations of a candidate for state representative. For that, we apologize. It would have been better to call the advertisement a "possible" violation of NCAA rules, rather than to simply refer to it as a "violation."

That was bad journalism.

This whole affair has brought some interesting issues to light. How did athletic department officials know about the ad in time to tell reporters about it a day before it was printed, and if they knew, did they try to keep it from publication?

Why did Brown not know the difference between an NCAA violation and poor taste?

K-State has never had so much to gain or lose from its supporters. We all need to be on the ball. In a statement released Monday, Athletics Director Max Urlick condemned Peterson but said nothing about inaccuracies from his own department.

"For any candidate to take this liberty is improper," Urlick said. "The athletic department does not endorse any political candidate."

"This matter is closed," he said.

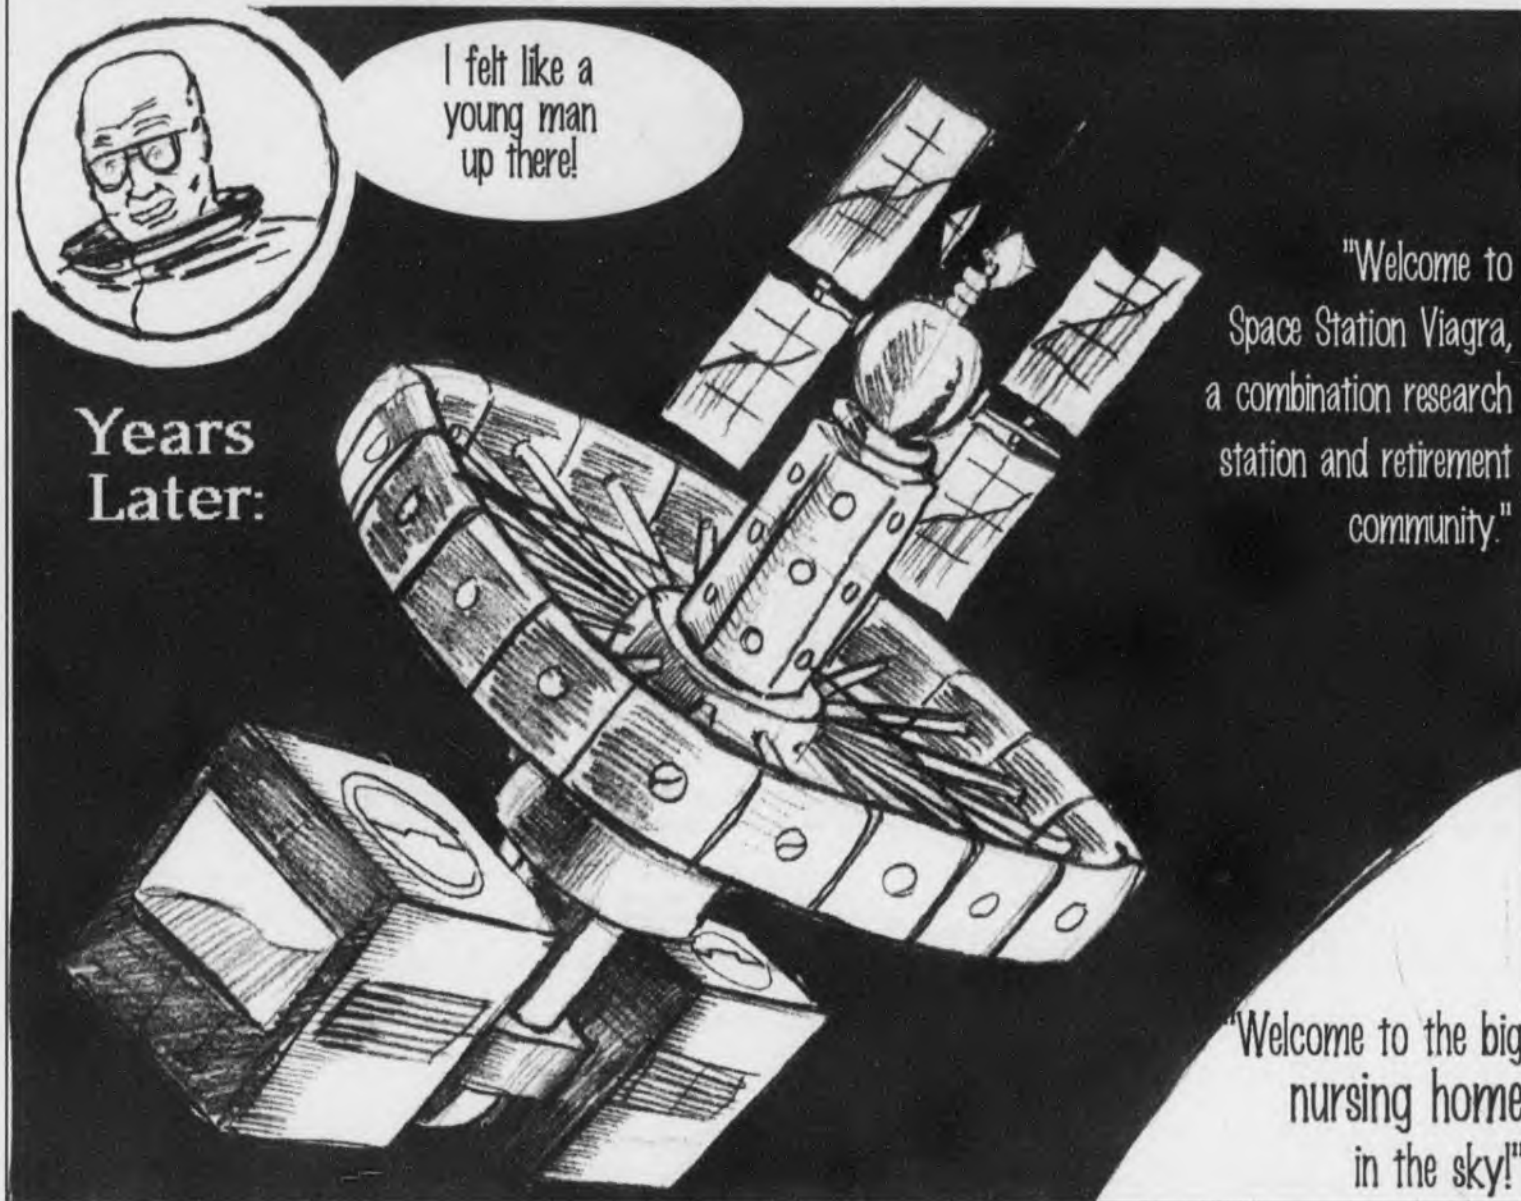

Unfortunately, the matter is not closed. Not yet. Rather, it has raised a number of important questions.

If this whole controversy has taught us anything, it's that we don't pay enough attention to the little things.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

'ANTZ' INVADE MOVIE THEATERS

Animation, cast bring excitement to fall movie season

It's been a long, dry season for moviegoers.

We have been patient during the traditionally mediocre Autumn of Crap that started with "The Avengers" and ended with "Bride of Chuckie." I'll admit I got a little nervous during "54," but the best things come to those who wait, and the wait finally may be over.

After several disappointing flops, DreamWorks, the love child of Steven Spielberg, David Geffen and Jeffrey Katzenberg, has finally given us a good movie. Actually, it is much better than good. "Antz" is a minor movie miracle.

It is a miracle for putting Woody Allen, Sylvester Stallone, Anne Bancroft, Sharon Stone, Jennifer Lopez and Christopher Walken all in the same universe, let alone the same movie. This may be the best voice-over acting in the history of animation.

Also miraculous is the animation itself. We never have had a movie that looked like this. A tiny sidewalk crack becomes a massive factory for worker ants. The visuals are so stunning that their world becomes ours, and the intricacies make Aladdin and Pocahontas look like stick figures.

Most importantly, however, this is great storytelling. The tale of Z-4195, a frustrated worker ant who is sick of conformity and breaks away from the collective, has a valuable lesson for every college student in the wake of Homecoming week.

The social themes are reminiscent of everybody from Chaplin to Brecht. It's a near perfect allegory.

And it's hilarious. Those who can't stand Woody Allen won't have any problems, since you don't actually have to look at him, and the supporting cast makes up the difference. Those who love Allen will have a busman's holiday. He never has been more neurotic and paranoid, and his neurosis and paranoia never have been more justified.

Surprisingly, this is not a movie for children. There is some brutal violence, intensely dark imagery, and the themes seemed to be aimed at an adult audience. All the better.

Most of us only go to see cartoons with our younger siblings or on syrupy dates. Now we finally have an animated feature that college students can go see in droves.

The beautiful part about seeing this in the theater is knowing you have paid to see a good cartoon, and yet, your money isn't going into Michael Eisner's pocket. Disney has had a monopoly on this part of the entertainment industry for far too long. How appropriate that they should be taken down by a film about a revolt of the masses.

The absence of Disney's big brother participation means there are no mindless pop songs to be recorded by vapid Top-40 artists, and "Antz" probably never will be turned into a Broadway musical. It's just as well.

"Antz" is candy for your brain. It has something for every moviegoer. And if we all go see it in the theater, Hollywood will get the message that we aren't interested in another Chuckie sequel.

This movie teaches not just about the individual, but about the power of the collective in revolution. Let's use our collective moviegoing dollars to revolt.

This ant has high hopes.

Successful attire means discomfort for professionals

I don't know who decided that to look professional, a lack of comfort was a must, but whoever they were, they should be forced to walk around in a pair of six-inch stiletto heels with a tie tugging at their neck like a noose.

In the summer, when it's 105 degrees outside, men are walking around wearing a billion layers of dark clothing — all in the name of professionalism.

I don't know how they can make it through the day without going mad from all that clothing. When I was young, I had a lovely hate for turtlenecks. I felt as if they were strangling me. Not that my turtleneck experience really compares with a tie experience. I can only imagine how it would feel to daily have cuff material strapped around your wrists, a top button cutting off your circulation and a tie hanging from your neck like a noose waiting for the trap door in the floor to open.

Maybe it's just me and my fear of confinement that makes me sympathize so much with suited men. Maybe I just don't think you should have to wear tons of clothes and accessories like the tie to look like you know what you're doing.

Women don't have it any easier. In fact, I believe we have it worse.

First of all, women wear suits as well, so cross-apply the constraints named above minus the tie and the one half of the pants (women have the option of wearing a skirt).

I speak from experience and observation. It seems to me that being a professional woman takes more than a suit. It involves wearing makeup, pantyhose and uncomfortable shoes.

Makeup is such a pain in the wazoo, but unfortunately, it's a necessity when you're trying to look grown up. Ever stop to think about how weird makeup is? It's just colored paint people put on their skin to enhance features and hide so-called flaws. Men's faces have flaws, yet they don't feel the need to cover them. OK, I'm getting off track. The point: Makeup is a pain, and most women wear it in the work force.

Pantyhose. Whoever thought of pantyhose? All they are is a bit of sheer material that makes your legs look all shades of plastic. What are see-through pantyhose really supposed to hide?

Here's a nifty oxymoron for you — nude pantyhose.

You put on hose the color of your leg so it doesn't look like you have hose on. Who decided women should wear hose? More than likely it was male-driven. Do men wear pantyhose? No! They are imposed on women by a portion of the population that doesn't have to wear them. They are silly and unnecessary, yet women in the work place wear them every day to maintain a professional appearance. I think you realize how militantly I'm opposed to pantyhose.

High heels. They're damaging to your health. They aren't comfortable; they're difficult to walk in and impossible to run in. What happens if you need to make a quick getaway or do superhero crime fighting?

You couldn't get anywhere in heels. Plus, high heels increase the pressure in the toe box of your feet by 50 percent and jam your toes up against a very unnatural angle with every step. That's a lot of toe-jamming when you consider that the average person takes eight to 10,000 steps a day!

The American Orthopedic Foot and Ankle Society surveyed 400 women and found that 90 percent of them also were wearing shoes too small for their footies, and 80 percent of the women had foot problems.

In addition, 90 percent of common foot surgeries are performed on women. Why? It's all because women perform Chinese binding on their feet by wearing shoes too small for them. They want their legs to look longer than they are, and they feel it's necessary to buy pointy-dressy shoes to look good.

Well, I started off writing about how professional dress for both sexes is very uncomfortable in the name of expectations and ended up spouting about how women wear contraptions designed by men who don't have to wear them.

Hey, at least I didn't talk about the brassiere. I'll save that for another column.

Peterson apologizes for campaign ad

Editor,

I want to apologize for placing a campaign ad that shows me pictured with Michael Bishop. I take full responsibility for having placed the ad. It was my decision. When placing the ad, I did not know it could be a possible violation of NCAA rules. I since have learned the ad is not a violation of the rules. However, it was a bad decision.

I love K-State. I believe K-State represents everything that is good and true about the state of Kansas, and I would never do anything knowingly to harm the university, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics or individual players. This ad ran once in The Manhattan Mercury and will not run again. I truly am sorry for any problems this issue has caused.

It's time to give KU fans a real big scare

Editor,

I just had to laugh. I open The Kansas City Star on Wednesday morning and see a tiny box at the bottom of page D-7. It reads: "About 10,000 tickets remain for the Sunflower Showdown, when Kansas plays host to No. 4 Kansas State on Oct. 31 at Memorial Stadium."

Don't you just love this? Even in years when the Wildcat basketball team supposedly had little chance to beat the high-powered Jayhawks, Bramlage Coliseum has been sold out. No seats.

Yeah, Jayhawk fans bought up their allotment pretty quickly, and K-State ticket-holders are guilty of selling the things, but the Coliseum is always a guaranteed sellout, no matter how the Cats are playing.

Not even two weeks before the Kansas version of Halloween Havoc, the uninterested Hawk fans are starting their Halloween parties early that Saturday.

Take advantage, Cat fans! Sure, the tickets are a pricey 40 bucks, but what better day to give the newly remodeled Memorial Stadium a sellout than Oct. 31?

It's the Big 12 game of the week. Bowl officials might or might not be there — who knows? Turn Memorial Stadium into Wagner Field East and give the Hawks a real scare this Halloween.

'Phantom Seat Zone' should be eliminated

Editor,

It's a theory that can be hard for some to grasp, so you're going to need to follow me on this one. It's called the "Phantom Seat Zone," and it exists at KSU Stadium during every home game.

It's that area at the top of the student section that opens up when all students stand on the seat in front of them as the game begins. In effect, an entire row is left unfilled by standing students, but when everyone sits, it disappears. The key here is that everyone stands in the student section.

Now, there wouldn't be a problem if the section always was filled with students, but this isn't the case. Somehow, a lady with a bitter attitude toward the student body was able to purchase a scalped ticket to the student section and believed this entitled her to a zone of space.

As you can guess, I was in the "Phantom Seat Zone" at the K-State vs. OSU game, sitting by friends who, incidentally, were not responsible for stealing the ABC Sports banner. When others were being kicked out by this lady for standing on the seat in front of her, I leapt to their defense, citing that we were fee-paying, Wildcat-card-carrying, season-ticket-holding students.

I'm not one to bow to "the man," so I asked a security guard to get his boss, Jim, the head of Bramlage Coliseum parking, came to straighten out the situation. After describing the "Phantom Seat Zone" theory, he told me to find another seat. I asked to see the written policy that says I can't be there.

Surprise! There isn't one. I pulled out my ticket and read aloud to him what is written clearly on the front — "KSU Student." Nowhere is it written you get a seat or a zone or an area. It does, however, say you are a student. Jim refused to card the woman and, as the conversation took place in front of three gun-toting officers, a group of OSU fans went walking into the student section.

I believe if I'm going to raise the level of campus discussion with this problem, I should offer a solution. So, I'll propose that those entering the student section should be asked to show a student ID, and the unwritten and arbitrary policy of kicking people out of the "Phantom Seat Zone" end. If the zone were filled with K-State students, as most of the ICAT section is, then this problem would not exist. Those who are not students should not be paying full price for general admission reserved seats.

Rucker column timed
well with workshop

Editor,

It was timely that Jason Rucker's editorial, "What's in a Name," appeared in the same Collegian edition in which a front-page article reported on workshops conducted in response to the beating death of a gay student in Wyoming.

Two men are not the same as the Ku Klux Klan, and being pistol-whipped and tied to a fence is not the same as being hanged. However, the mentality that murdered Matthew Shepard is no different than that which murdered African Americans well into the 1960s. The two men who murdered Shepard surely were deciding for us who, on the basis of sexual preference, had the right to remain part of American society.

If, as Rucker suggests, the K-State defense would still "kick as much butt" by any other name, then why use a name that legitimizes violence most recently linked to race? What makes K-State football great is that both the players and coaches strive for excellence on a daily basis. Performance, not names, intimidates opponents.

That Rucker takes little offense simply means he has never feared for his personal safety because he was different.

So, what's in a name, Rucker? I submit that you contradicted yourself in answering the question. If the K-State defense is intimidating, it has no need of a name that strikes fear in the opponent based on a history in which whites controlled blacks through the threat of vigilante violence.

Despite the fact that African American players seem willing to accept the metaphor, I am not.

The cost to our society is simply too great. The two men who brutalized Shepard because he was gay were equally poised to brutalize him had he been black. Those who do not understand this simply never have been different enough to fear for their personal safety.

K-State baseball plays final World Series game today

■ Fall classic features Cat players, scrimmages.

By MIKE VIETTI

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The World Series is being played in Manhattan. No, not Manhattan, N.Y., but Manhattan, Kan., and this World Series pits the K-State baseball team against itself in an intrasquad replication of the fall classic.

The 13th version of the Little Apple World Series began Wednesday at CiCo Park blue diamond with the white team defeating the purple team, 8-6. The white team was led by senior transfer Derek Anderson who pitched five and one-third innings, striking out nine batters and allowing only two earned runs on three hits.

The purple team almost pulled off a comeback, scoring four of its six runs after the sixth inning. Freshman Brett Reid slammed a two-run home run in the top of the eighth inning to close the gap to 6-5. However, the white team sealed the victory in the bottom of the eighth inning when sophomore Mark English smashed a two-run homer.

Pat Hertzell took the loss for the purple team, allowing five earned runs on six hits over five and one-third innings.

The purple team got off to a solid start with junior transfer Randy Brady lifting an Anderson pitch over the 365-foot center-field fence in the first inning. From that point, Anderson froze the purple team, allowing just one hit in the fifth inning before leaving after registering one out in the sixth.

Game two was completed Friday afternoon with the white team triumphing again in an offensive explosion, 15-14. Twenty-seven hits were recorded between the two squads. Kyle Boyer led the white team, going 3-5 with two doubles and four runs.

Fans cheer after the K-State volleyball team scores against state rival Kansas in Ahearn Field House on Sept. 26. The contest drew 4,568 fans.

PACKIN' THE STANDS

K-State Wildcat volleyball attendance ranks 11th in the country

By BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not too long ago, the K-State volleyball team was a relative unknown.

Now, Wildcat volleyball is something to behold.

Over the past five seasons, the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has teamed up with players, coaches and a gung-ho marketing department to assemble a program for K-State to be proud of.

"The best thing we can do, from our standpoint, is get as many people in the stands as possible to support those young women," said Missy Decker, assistant director of marketing promotions.

The Wildcats have climbed all the way to No. 11 in the country in attendance this year, averaging nearly 1,600 fans per match.

The Cats finished last season ranked 13th in attendance, averaging just more than 1,500 per match.

Earlier this season, in a match against Kansas, the Wildcats drew 4,568 fans. It was the 13th-largest crowd in the country this year.

However, that's not where the story begins. Back in the early '90s, the Wildcats were a perennial doormat for the rest of the conference. Attendance during those years was roughly 450 per contest.

In fact, from 1991 to 1993 the Cats did not win a conference match, going 0-36 against Big 8 Conference opponents during that span.

MORE FANS

The K-State volleyball team's attendance continues to rise. Below are average attendance for the past 5 seasons and through 7 home matches this year.

1994:	472
1995:	1,032
1996:	1,507
1997:	1,586
1998:	1,476

Now, four years and two straight trips to the NCAA Tournament later, the Wildcat volleyball team is among the top 25 teams in the nation.

In his second year at the helm, head coach Jim McLaughlin has taken over where Moore left off. McLaughlin has guided the Cats to their best ranking in history, at No. 23 in the latest poll.

With the team's success has come an outpouring of support from the K-State student body and the Manhattan community.

"The crowds have grown with the team's success," Zac Clark, senior in finance, said. "The fans have become a lot more knowledgeable. They keep coming back, and they know what's going on."

It's a welcome sight — not only for the team but also for the K-State marketing department, which has worked hard to connect the team with the public.

For instance, K-State players Linsey Luther and Val Wieck spent the summer traveling to Catbacker Clubs around the state to speak on behalf of the team.

"They were tremendous ambassadors, not only for volleyball but for K-State athletics," Lon Floyd, director of Catbacker Clubs, said.

The first couple of months of this school year also have provided the team with a chance to drum up support.

"We've done a lot of things this year, allowing the players to be visible with the public, especially with the student body," Decker said.

At the season ticket sales in August, the players were handing out pocket schedules and mingling with the fans.

Last month, the team made an appearance at Purple Power Play on Poyntz, the annual K-State pep rally in downtown Manhattan.

K-State beats Aggies, loses to Longhorns

By BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When members of the K-State volleyball team put on their shoes this weekend, they knew they better lace them up tight.

The 22nd-ranked Wildcats would face 12th-ranked Texas and 15th-ranked Texas A&M on back-to-back nights. And after losing to both teams three weeks ago in Texas, you couldn't fault the Cats for looking for a little revenge.

A fired-up group of Longhorns came into Ahearn Field House Friday night and quickly jumped on the Cats, winning the first two games. However, K-State battled back to win game three 15-13.

In game four, the two teams played back and forth until K-State went up 14-13 — one point away from sending the match to a fifth game.

However, Texas regrouped and reeled off three straight points to take the game and the match, 16-14. All-American Demetria Sance led the Longhorns with 28 kills, while hitting .377 for the match. The senior hitter also added 20 digs and seven blocks to the Texas cause.

According to Wildcat head coach Jim McLaughlin, the loss took a lot out of his team.

"It was a little scary after the match, because I knew it was going to take us a while to wind down," McLaughlin said. "I was nervous of our level of emotion going into the A&M match."

The A&M match Saturday night got off to a good start for the Cats as they jumped out to a 7-3 lead.

However, the Aggies went on a 12-1 run to win the first game, 15-8.

"We missed too many serves, and it gave them a chance to get hot," McLaughlin said. "We need to work on our serving and sustain an effort over time putting the ball in play."

In game two, A&M received a terrible blow when its leading hitter, Stacy Sykora, went down with a knee injury. She would not return to the match.

"When she went down, our eyes opened up," McLaughlin said. "It was an opportunity we needed to jump on, and we did."

The Cats rolled to a victory in game two, 15-8. Game three was another tight battle, but K-State pulled away down the stretch to grab a 15-10 victory.

Then, in game four, it was all Wildcats. K-State took control of the game early and won the match with a 15-7 blowout.

"It was just about a team fight," senior Val Wieck said. "We refused to lose tonight."

Freshman Liz Wegner stole the show for the Cats. Wegner had the best match of her young career, recording 20 kills and 12 digs.

"She carried us there for a while," McLaughlin said.

"She hit some balls that were just great, and she served some tough balls."

Wegner was one of three Wildcats who recorded a double-double in kills and digs.

Dawn Cady chipped in with 14 kills and 20 digs, while Kim Zschau added 17 kills and 19 digs.

"It was just a matter of staying steady, concentrating on our serving and passing game and siding out and scoring points," Wieck said.

With the win, the Cats improved to 13-6 overall and 7-3 in conference play. K-State remained fourth in the league standings, two games ahead of A&M.

The Cats are back on the road next weekend. K-State will play Friday night at KU and the University of Oklahoma Saturday night.

For lack of anything better, my baby daughter's first lullaby was Wabash Cannonball

Sometimes things can't be explained.

Darryl Strawberry faces his toughest opponent yet while the Yankees sweep the World Series. Magic Johnson and Mike Tyson are good friends. The NBA changes its name to No Basketball Allowed. Todd Bandhauer hasn't been sacked this season.

These are issues I pondered recently while stopping at red lights, brushing my teeth and putting on socks.

That was until 7 a.m. Thursday. Until the truly unexplainable happened. Until I witnessed the first miracle of my entire life on the third floor inside Mercy Health Center in Manhattan, when, standing a foot from my lovely wife, J. J., clenching her right hand, patting her forehead, swallowing hard and blinking back tears, the most beautiful girl in the world was born before our eyes.

The delivery of Kaylee June Fritchen was more beautiful than watching Michael Jordan's fade-away jump shot.

So, I don't know what it feels like to throw the winning touchdown, shoot the winning basket or hit a ninth-inning home run. I'm a sportswriter and often try to describe emotions and actions we mortals merely dream about.

But Thursday I witnessed a miracle. You don't put miracles into words.

People talk about miracles all the time in sports. Cardinals' part-time groundskeeper Tim Lincecum said it was a miracle that he was the one to discover Mark McGwire's 62nd home run. Colorado fans still shake when talking about Michael Westbrook's miracle catch to beat Michigan in 1994. Another miracle: Kansas State football, 1989-1998. I, myself, left KSU Stadium on Oct. 12, 1991, numb from K-State's out-of-nowhere 16-12 victory against Kansas. I saw goal posts tumble to the ground for the first time.

I thought I had seen it all.

Until now.

Miracles leave people stunned, speechless, searching for explanations and finding none. The feeling rises from the earth's core, continues up your legs and squeezes your heart. You swallow hard. Your eyes swell.

People — athletes — attempt to capture the feelings like lightning bugs in a jar to share with the world. They fail miserably. Butterflies overcome their bodies and no doubt, clichés spew from smiling mouths like 3-hour-old Red Man chew.

Eight hours prior to the miracle, my wife and I, between contractions, watched New York complete arguably the greatest season in professional baseball history. Yankee's owner George Steinbrenner held his trophy while thoughts of 175 baseball games whizzed through his head, and he wept to a national TV audience. "I just can't explain the feeling."

I thought of Strawberry's tightened face greeting victory with a toothful smile. I wondered how many miracles can happen within a single week.

My wife carried Kaylee June inside her for nine months, eight days and was in labor for more than 14 hours.

VIEWPOINT

D. Scott FRITCHEN

A single second changed both our lives forever.

I prepared for fatherhood like K-State coach Bill Snyder prepares for Nebraska. I watched tapes. I talked to people. Parenting magazine fell next to Sports Illustrated on the coffee table. I read Bill Cosby's "Fatherhood" and reflected on past experiences with my father, David Rex Fritchen, the man whom I admire more than any other in the world. I wondered what words I would speak first to my newborn. What I would sing to her. What I would tell her about life and about her parents. I felt I had an idea of what to expect, but as Snyder says, expectations are silly.

Four days before the miracle, I announced to Snyder I was going to be a father in a couple days and wanted some advice.

"Holy Cow!" he said. "It's an impossible task. I can assure you of that."

He paused and lowered his tone like a grandfather before telling a bedtime story.

"It's a special thing," he said. "It really is."

Late Friday night, I rocked my bundled baby in a hospital rocking chair. Following a 38-hour circus of diaper-changing and several blown attempts at garbled baby talk, Kaylee sat in my lap on the verge of finally going to sleep. My mind went blank. I couldn't think of a single lullaby to sing.

I thought of Iowa State, Homecoming, the cheers of KSU Stadium and how many great stories would unfold during another week of college football. How cute Kaylee would look in one of her K-State outfits on Nov. 14. How years from now, I could tell her she was there on Nov. 14, K-State's biggest game in school history. How the cheers cascaded her delicate body and how beautiful she looked.

Kaylee wouldn't understand the significance of Nov. 14 for years. The only feeling she possibly would recall was that of a wet diaper.

Sitting in the rocking chair, I nonchalantly hummed the Wabash Cannonball. Kaylee's eyes closed. A tiny smile crept across her angel face.

Sometimes things need no explanation at all.

Tour showcases homes rumored to be haunted at Fort Riley

As Halloween grows ever closer, the haunted houses in Kansas City have become crowded with thrill seekers.

However, anyone looking for a good ghost story doesn't have to travel that far.

In the past three years, Fort Riley's Ghost Tours have become a popular attraction. Mary Sue Moore, contributor to a book about ghost legends in the area titled, "Ghosts of Ft. Riley," said an estimated 700 people were expected to attend this year's tours. However, that record was broken well before 8 p.m. Monday night.

Lines stretched for a few blocks beyond the parade grounds as hopefuls waited for their chance to see the tales come to life.

The ghost tour itself lasted about an hour and a half. Tour guides and fort residents told many tales of strange happenings around the post.

Spectral riders, Civil War casualties and grieving widows are among the many spirits who supposedly haunt the barracks and living quarters of the fort.

Victims of an 1800s cholera epidemic that once wiped out Fort Riley's entire chain of command are said to wander the post still.

While everyone involved with the tours tried their best at creating a spooky atmosphere, some of the middle schoolers in the crowd weren't exactly creeped out by stories of specters that moved household items.

"That wasn't scary at all," said one seventh grader.

TOP: Amy Gruber, Fort Riley, tells a ghost story of Quarters 26 Sheridan on Monday evening in front of the quarters in Fort Riley. The tale of the quarters says there is a spirit who has resided there since the building was a hospital many years ago.

BOTTOM: People line up to go on Fort Riley ghost tours Monday evening in Fort Riley. The tours went around buildings at Fort Riley that are believed to be haunted by spirits.

Moore said the tours might have been aimed toward a younger crowd, but history buffs had a chance to hear a great deal about Fort Riley's background.

General George Custer's former residence, the oldest stone church in Kansas and the station that once was the hub of the Manhattan-Riley trolley system are just a few of the stops on the tour.

After last year's record attendance, the Fort Riley Historical Society put the supernatural stories together in the book "Ghosts of Fort Riley." The book details the tales and legends that compose the majority of the ghost tour.

"People kept asking their tours guides last year if the stories were written down anywhere," Moore said.

"Ghosts of Fort Riley" is available in the post's Cavalry Museum; the Trolley Station, a Fort Riley gift shop; and Lee's Book Store in Junction City.

KINGS OF HORROR

Terrifying flicks set mood for Halloween season

By ERIN MCGLINN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Jason Voorhees, Michael Myers, Freddie Krueger — kings of the horror-film industry and stars of some of the most vivid, terrifying Hollywood nightmares. It is the season of Halloween, and they're ready to scare you to death again.

In "Nightmare on Elm Street Part II: Freddy's Revenge," the famous melted-faced, nightmare demon is on the prowl again. He invades his house on Elm Street and the body of the doomed teen, Jesse, who lives there.

As Freddy takes control of Jesse's dreams and eventually his reality, he is enabled to come back from the dead and kill again, ripping through town with his finger blades.

In 1981's "Friday the 13th: Part II,"

Jason Voorhees stalks the Crystal Lake camp area once more. Since Jason's first bloody rampage took place five years prior, no one was expecting his unwelcomed arrival. Disguised by his hockey mask, Jason vengefully punctures through the camp with the assistance of his vicious mother.

Blamed for causing fainting and even causing the institutionalization of an audience member, "The Exorcist" came out with a bang on Christmas Day in 1973 and continues to reign as a top pick. The story is focused on Regan, a young girl possessed by the evil spirit, Captain Howdy. As priests Father Karras and Father Merrin attempt to exorcise the spirit and free Regan's soul, they must contend with nasty green vomit and spinning heads.

Based on a Stephen King novel, one word that comes to mind when thinking of "The Shining" is redrum (murder backwards). Starring Jack Nicholson and Shelly Duvall, this 1980 film takes place in the Overlook Hotel, a lodge in the dead center of the Rocky Mountains.

Their child, Danny, has the ability to see all the past horrors at the hotel. Scenes are adorned with an elevator filled with blood that floods an entire hotel floor and two mysterious, ghostly looking twin girls.

If you are a true horror-movie fan and have seen all of these choices too many times to count, there are some less well-known films out there to check out.

Jack Brown at Video Express in Westloop said his favorite horror film is "House II." He described the title house as one of mysterious capacity. It stood as a shrine to an evil powered skull from the Aztec civilization, and there is a crazed man who wanders the house and digs up nearby graves.

Brown said he thought a horror movie is simply a comedy and has found that some of the best ones are the funniest ones.

"They're all pretty silly if you think about it. A good scary film should incorporate comedy along with the gore," he said.

Cheryl Person at Blockbuster Video said she highly recommends "The Bad Seed" as a good scary movie pick.

"It's an older movie from the '70s," she said. "An 8-year-old girl walks around killing people, and her mother is faced with the dilemma of whether or not to kill her morbid daughter since the bad seed skips every other generation."

Whether you lean toward the most famous names in horror or opt for the less well-known titles, there is something out there on video to give anyone a fright for Halloween.

PETERSON

didn't break any rules, he said.

"The people who know me know that I wouldn't do anything to harm K-State, but when you're a representative of a city that involves a lot of people, you don't know everyone on a personal basis," Peterson said. "They don't know me well enough to say, 'I know Jeff wouldn't do harm to K-State.'"

In his 1996 campaign, Peterson used a photo of then-cornerback Chris Canty in his ads. On Sunday, Brown said Peterson knew this year's ads were in violation because he had been told in 1996 to stop using the Canty ads. Peterson denied ever being told that his 1996 ads broke rules.

On Monday, Brown recanted his Sunday statements and said Peterson was never officially notified in 1996.

"Apparently there was no written notification," Brown said. "Because it happened two years ago, it's hard to remember exactly what happened, but the recollection was that he was told over the phone."

"There was no follow-up letter. Apparently, there was no official notification in the form of a letter."

Peterson said he could understand why students and others would be mad at him if they thought he was running ads that he knew were illegal. But he said he was never notified that the ads were a problem.

"I would've been furious if I had ... thought, 'He went ahead and did it without regard for the public,'" Peterson said. "But that just isn't true, and I want the record to be set straight."

When Peterson was told that the ad might have violated NCAA rules, he said he visited head coach Bill Snyder in his office Sunday night to assure him that he didn't mean to harm the program.

Other newspapers, including the Kansas City Star and the Topeka Capital-Journal, found out about the advertisement before it ran in Sunday's Mercury.

Both newspapers' sports sections included brief stories about the ad that were written on Saturday, before the ad was ever published.

A story in the Star didn't list any K-State sources. The Capital-Journal quoted Jim Epps, associate athletics director, as saying that Peterson was warned in 1996 not to use players in his advertisements.

Reached at home Monday night, Epps would not comment.

A source in the Star's sports department, who would not give his name, said the paper has since run a correction. The Capital-Journal printed Urick's statement in this morning's edition.

Though the ad wasn't an NCAA violation, Urick contended that it was still inappropriate, because it used an athlete's image to endorse Peterson's campaign. Urick said the ad, which Peterson called a "fun, pro-K-State" piece, was exploitation.

"It is an example of a political candidate intentionally exploiting a student athlete's success on the athletic field to achieve public visibility," Urick said in the statement.

FANS

"It allows them to be seen by families who have an interest in volleyball," Decker said.

The marketing department and the team have made a special attempt to reach the youth in the community.

On Sept. 26, they teamed up with the Kaw Valley Girl Scout Council to present Girl Scout Night for the KU match.

More than 200 Girl Scouts attended, and they had the chance to collect autographs from the players after the match.

"That is such a great way for young girls to get to know the players," Decker said.

"The players were wonderful. It's a great way for the young kids to be able to relate to them."

On Oct. 17, K-State volleyball presented Junior Wildcat Night at Ahearn Field House for the Texas Tech match.

The team also has succeeded in connecting with the greek community. At the start of this season, the coaches and players visited fraternities and sororities around campus to increase interest in their sport.

"It's great to get the team out there talking to people," McLaughlin said. "You go out and tell them about your team. I think it's important to do that stuff."

Sept. 25 was Greek Night at Ahearn. The fraternity or sorority with the highest attendance at the match received a free pizza party.

The Delta Delta Delta sorority was the winner.

Another winner was the volleyball public-relations campaign this semester.

"People are really starting to catch on," Decker said. "They're seeing that it's exciting and fun to watch. It's fast-paced, and there's a lot of action."

A successful program has been constructed, and the fans have followed.

Now, it appears as though the sky is the limit for K-State volleyball.

CHIEFS

points for just the third time this year. "But we continue to get better. I think this team has a closeness to it, but we're not going to play pretty games."

Neither did the Chiefs.

"The outcome of the game was driven by our penalties and our turnovers," Chiefs coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "Pittsburgh played well, but the outcome of the game was the result of our mistakes."

It sure was.

In the first quarter, Tony Richardson, wide open in the end zone, fell as Elvis Grbac threw what appeared to be a TD pass, and the Chiefs had to settle for a 20-yard field goal by Pete Stoyanovich.

"It's stupid things like that that just happen," said Grbac, who was 15-of-36 for 224 yards.

On the opening kickoff of the second half, Ted Popson was called for holding on what would have been a 95-yard return for a touchdown. In the fourth quarter, what might have been the tying 43-yard TD pass hit Andre Rison on the helmet and bounced away.

But the biggest mistake was the first, the blocked punt.

Aguiar, who had never had a punt blocked in 587 previous attempts as a pro, never had a chance. Brown broke through and McAfee fell on it among a swarm of Steelers to give Pittsburgh a 7-0 lead less than five minutes into the game.

The Chiefs moved well between the 20s on their next two drives, but had to settle for field goals.

The Steelers added a 34-yarder by Johnson to make it 10-6 at halftime after that 65-yard drive on which McAfee ran three times for 36 yards. Johnson's 22-yarder with 5:30 left in the third quarter made it 13-6.

But on the first play after the kickoff,

Grbac and Derrick Alexander combined on a 65-yard pass play that put the ball on the Pittsburgh 13. Five plays later, Grbac found Rison from the 2 for the TD that tied it at 13.

But the Steelers came right back, going 60 yards in 14 plays capped by the winning TD pass from Stewart to Johnson.

DON REZAC Democrat

Candidate wants to represent voice of Kansas farmer

Don Rezac, Democratic candidate for secretary of state, began his political career as a farmer and rancher. His dedication to put the voice of the Kansas farmer back into politics gave him the motivation to run for a state office.

Rezac, a resident of Emmett, Kan., served in the House of Representatives from 1982 to 1994 as chairman for various committees.

As secretary of state, Rezac said he would work for economic development. The Democratic party is promoting a scholarship for Kansas high school seniors who want to pursue a college education. The money would come from funds previously allotted for economic development.

"Education will provide skilled work forces," Rezac said.

Rezac said he would like to see more solutions dealing with environmental issues. He said he proposes binding county elections in decisions to allow corporate hog farms to move into the community. Rezac said citizens are tired of voting against corporate hog farming only to have the corporate hog farmers come to their counties.

"We need to show people that voting will do some good," Rezac said.

Rezac also said he will work for more economic protection for the people of Kansas. He said he wants to repeal Senate Bill 227, which states that corporations do not have to file a financial statement under the corporate franchise tax.

"Even as a consumer looking at people who shingle your house, you may want to see what's going on with the business," Rezac said.

The state of Kansas used to require a balance sheet as part of an annual report. The balance sheet could be kept confidential for a fee of $20. Because the sheet could be kept confidential and the state didn't have much use for it, the bill was passed and all checks and balances now are completed through the Department of Revenue.

RON THORNBURGH Republican

Incumbent says taxes, spending most important issues

Ron Thornburgh, the incumbent candidate for secretary of state, began his political career in the mailroom. Hard work, dedication and commitment to public service gave him the opportunity to advance to bigger things.

Thornburgh, a Republican from Burlingame, Kan., worked in the mailroom of the secretary of state's office in 1983 while he was a student at Washburn University. He was appointed to the position of assistant secretary of state in 1991 and was elected secretary of state in 1994.

As secretary, Thornburgh said he plans to continue the ideas he brought to office four years ago.

"The main issue is taxes. The secretary of state can't lower or raise taxes, but controls spending," he said.

In the past four years, Thornburgh has decreased general fund spending by 12 percent, reduced employees by eight percent and reduced fees.

He said he plans to continue doing more with less. Kansas is the first state to allow electronic filing in the Uniform Commercial Code division. A process that used to take the banking industry 10 days now takes 10 minutes. When a new corporation comes to Kansas, it has to go to several different offices to write a check and fill out paperwork.

"Different agencies had the same information. We were treating it like nuclear information and weren't sharing," Thornburgh said.

With the new system, which is still a year away from going into effect, businesses can file electronically and send one electronic transfer of funds.

Thornburgh said he also is working to remove the barriers to democracy. He implemented the National Voter Registration Act, allowing people to register to vote when getting a driver's license.

"If you can wander by your mailbox in 20 days, you aren't too busy to vote," he said.

Shuttle service carries 80 to 100 people each day

By SUZANNE WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's shuttle system might be a precursor to an ease in parking problems.

Currently, the Parking Services shuttle carries 80 to 100 faculty, staff and students from the K-State Student Union to Edwards Hall and the Foundation Center each day. Jeff Barnes, safety and security officer, said while Parking Services has more than one shuttle, only one is run throughout the week.

If K-State decides to expand its shuttle service to a campuswide route, parking services will have to get bigger shuttles, and more will run throughout the week.

Darwin Abbott, director of Parking Services, said the number of buses it buys will depend on how long students are willing to wait and the number of stops the shuttles have to make.

John Lambert, director of public safety, said the current shuttles carry 15 people and cost an estimated $30,000. He said the new shuttles, which probably will carry 20 to 25 people, can cost $40,000 to $150,000.

"The cost depends — if we get shuttles with bike racks or something else it will cost more," Lambert said.

People who ride the shuttle now are not charged a fee for the service. "We're sponsoring it out of the parking fees that we generate through parking services," Barnes said.

Lambert said fees would have to change with the new service. He said the cost to run the shuttles is $37 to $40 per hour, per bus. He said it's possible to charge students a fee for each time they get on the bus, but it probably would not work out well. Lambert said most schools charge everyone a fee so that people can use the shuttle free anytime.

Abbott said Parking Services is in the process of looking at feedback from students on campus. He said the answers vary right now. Some students like the idea of having a shuttle service and others want parking garages. Abbott said some students don't think there is a parking problem on campus at all.

Abbott said Parking Services is not sure how the shuttle service would run right now. He said it is possible that if the shuttle service is implemented, the campus might become car-free, much like the University of Kansas campus.

He said it is also possible that shuttles would be connected with a transit system throughout the city of Manhattan, if the city chooses to adopt one.

Abbott said that is all speculation right now, however.

through the project.

If the commission allows Vanier to continue with his proposed plan and it is approved by city agencies, the drive would follow a winding course from Kimball north to Marlatt Avenue and would not function as a west-side arterial road.

But Harden said he and other planners are afraid that Scenic Drive will become a dominant artery no matter what its shape. If that happens, Vanier's plan for Scenic Drive wouldn't allow the road to handle the high-traffic volume. County planners expressed concern that a winding Scenic Drive would create problems for future development of the artery.

Doug De Monbrun, project manager for Grand Mere and Vanier employee, said a north-south arterial would be good for Manhattan. He said the university had approved Vanier's winding concept of the northern Scenic Drive extension.

Krause, who has spearheaded the golf course development for the university and was not in attendance Monday, has been a proponent of the concept of a north-south artery for more than a year.

In 1997, when the county announced plans to apply for a $2 million state grant — which never materialized — to extend Scenic Drive, Krause was optimistic, saying "It's just happening a little sooner than expected."

But some still question whether or not a west-side arterial is even needed. Many residents suggested during the forum that the city has its needed west-side arterial in Seth Child's Road.

Riley County resident Stan Elsea, member of the County Road and Bridge Advisory Committee and associate dean of the College of Business Administration, said there seems to be an effort to spend road money in Manhattan at the expense of the county.

"You guys in the county don't have the money now to maintain the roads you've got," Elsea said.

Health center re-evaluating deal with K-State, Lafene

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A lot of anxious eyes at K-State might be on Mercy Health Center Inc. in the next few months, but they will have to wait before negotiations can continue, Mercy CEO Mike Nunamaker said.

Since last spring, informal talks between Mercy and K-State administration have included the possibility of selling K-State land for Mercy's expansion and relocating Lafene Health Center to the Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

While nothing was set by last summer, university officials had said their most optimistic hopes were to contact the Kansas Board of Regents by this fall to authorize land deals.

Developments toward a new surgical center in Manhattan, however, have required Mercy to re-evaluate its plans, including possible deals with K-State, Nunamaker said.

"We are currently working at the board level to decide where to build or what to build. We are, in effect, back to the drawing board," Nunamaker said.

He said directors hoped to decide within the next six months whether a whole new facility will be built for Mercy or consolidated at one of the existing buildings and renovated, he said. Either way, one building for Mercy will be the end result, he said.

Ongoing talks with the developers and surgeons for the proposed Manhattan Surgical Center, a project unaffiliated with Mercy, will help shape those plans, he said. Efforts by Mercy have been to collaborate with the developers on the center, he said.

In the meantime, Vice President of Administration and Finance Tom Rawson said K-State is waiting for Mercy's next move before establishing its own timetable.

"At this point, it would be premature for us to go into the next phase," Rawson said.

The 22 acres considered as a possible expansion site for Mercy lie about a mile south of Mercy Health Center on College Avenue and include the Kansas Artificial Breeding Service Unit's bull barns and the Kansas Forest Service.

If Mercy decided to move all services to one of the current hospital buildings, the College Avenue site would be the likely choice, Nunamaker said, leaving the building on Sunset Avenue open.

OUR OPINION

The Collegian editorial board says students could benefit from moving Lafene services. See Page 4.

Lafene Director Lannie Zweimiller said he doesn't expect any deals to materialize for some time, but he's planning, just in case.

Zweimiller said the Lafene staff had been reviewing the Sunset Avenue building's floor plan to determine where Lafene's existing services would best fit if a move occurred.

Zweimiller's current estimate assume Lafene would get at least the estimated 36,300 square feet on the main entrance floor of the building if a move happened.

No cost estimates have been made for the possible move, he said, but Lafene funds almost certainly would not be able to cover it. Likely funding sources would be either state funds or university money, avoiding student fees as much as possible, he said.

"My only thought right now is I hope it doesn't come directly from students," Zweimiller said.

The two main concerns the staff has been looking at have been how to serve Lafene's daily patient load of about 300 to 400 students while keeping renovation costs as low as possible, he said.

"All I can do is try to be as prepared as possible so when a move is made, we can maintain a continuity of service. All that's in preparation for something that might not happen, but we can't afford to sit back and do nothing," he said.

While a move likely would alleviate Lafene's current parking constriction of 12 non-handicapped parking spaces, it also would remove the health center from the main campus.

Student input seemed to be mostly positive on the possibility last year, but a student survey this spring by the Student Health Advisory Committee might give more data on what students think this year, Zweimiller said.

Denison Hall will stand until final decision made

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fate of Denison Hall has yet to be decided, and the decision might not come anytime soon.

Increased talks of tearing down Denison began after the completion of Hale Library. Legislative approval was granted several years ago to allow Denison to be torn down whenever the go-ahead decision is made.

Removing Denison from campus, though, would leave the Department of English without a building to call home and more than 100 faculty members without office or classroom space.

One possibility discussed was moving the English department to Lafene Health Center. Talks

FREE FALLING

Before skydiving students can jump, they must practice landing. Students are taught the parachute landing fall where they land on their feet, roll to their knees, then hips and finally to their backs. This landing style is used to protect skydivers from possible injury.

K-State Parachute Club founded in 1960s, geared toward new, experienced jumpers

Weekend getaways for 25 K-State students start at 3,000 feet. Depending mostly on weather, Parachute Club spends each weekend parachuting.

"I would love to jump every day, but I usually make it out to the airport on the weekends and try to fit in as many jumps as I can," Isaac Stauffer, junior in electrical engineering, said. "I carry my homework with me and work on it in between jumps. Weather and school are usually the limiting factors."

Parachute Club was established in the mid-1960s, making it one of the oldest collegiate drop zones in the United States. Members have been making their jumps from the Wamego Airport since it was established.

People can automatically join the club when they enroll in their first jump class. The club has 25 experienced jumpers and trains about 200 jumpers each year, club president Brian Correll, junior in mechanical engineering, said.

"When I first started, I was nervous. Who wouldn't be? You're jumping out of a plane," Stauffer said. "Anyone who claims to not be nervous at first is either lying to you or insane. I tended to get nervous and a little scared on the ground before the jump, but I found that once I'm in the air, I lost most of that fear and just did the jump."

The club consists of all levels of jumpers, from

Police confirm identities in murder-suicide

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student who was killed Monday probably was shot by a Junction City man before the man turned the gun on himself, police said Tuesday.

Riley County Police Department Capt. Steve French said autopsy results indicate Thomas Richardson Jr., 22, freshman in business, was shot by Brent Lawless, 36, Junction City, in Richardson's apartment at about 11:30 a.m. Monday. Lawless then shot himself, French said.

Both were found dead at 2265 Buckingham, Apt. 7, after police responded to a 911 call from Richardson that Lawless was going to commit suicide. When no one answered the door, police entered and found the bodies.

French said the two men had a relationship that could have contributed to the motive.

"The evidence indicates that there was a relationship between the two, and we're not going to go into any depth as to what the relationship was," French said. "But there was a relationship that apparently was not going well."

IFC opens doors for colonization efforts for more fraternities

By JESSE MCCURRY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interfraternity Council has voted in favor of opening K-State's greek community to fraternity expansion. The decision responds to an increasing enrollment and growth in the greek community, Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel said.

Robel said allowing more fraternities the opportunity to colonize at K-State is not a new request, and IFC has denied similar proposals before. However, she said now that recent additions to the greek system have had time to establish themselves, things have changed.

"This year, the issue came up and (IFC) agreed that maybe it was time, partly because of enrollment increases already and expected enrollment increases," she said.

Panhellenic Council already has voted to allow the return of Kappa Delta sorority after it closed with low membership.

"When Kappa Delta closed five years ago, there was an unwritten agreement that when the time was right they'd be the first group contacted," Robel said. "They just accepted an invitation to colonize, and details will be worked out for their return next year."

The fraternity situation is a little different. "National organizations bring representatives to IFC meetings, providing the history and benefits of their fraternity — they market themselves. Chapter presidents then make the decision," IFC president Cade Keenan said.

Keenan said the opportunity is important for K-State's greek community.

"It increases competition among chapters," he said. "It increases the positive aspects of our fraternities and makes them recruit more heavily."

Not everyone is happy with the decision. The vote was by a show of hands, so no role-call vote was taken. "A handful voted no," Robel said. "Smaller chapters may see another group as a challenge to their viability."

Greek Affairs will begin sending letters to fraternities' national offices next week, informing them of the decision and inviting them to IFC to make presentations.

Robel said she expects to see responses by spring.

Blues jazz festival tonight in McCain

The K-State Purple Blues Jazz Festival, a five-year jazz tradition, will be at 7:30 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

Wayne Goins, assistant director of bands and jazz ensembles, said the concert will feature all three of K-State's jazz ensembles: Lab A, Lab B and the Concert Jazz Ensemble. There also will be performances by the Jazz Quintet and Flute Juice, a group of jazz flutists.

Appearing as a special guest for the event will be Greg Carroll, director of education of the International Association of Jazz Educators, who will be featured in a special number with the Jazz Quintet.

Goins said student and community turnout has been successful in the past, and he said he looks forward to having a good audience again this year.

"We usually get a lot of people in attendance, and we hope this year will be the same," he said.

The event is free to students and the public.

Missing person dead from apparent wreck

MOUNT HOPE, Kan. — A body found in a truck that left a dead-end road and crashed down an embankment in northwest Sedgwick County has been identified as that of a Council Grove man missing since early July.

Sedgwick County Sheriff's Capt.

Robert Hinshaw said the body was identified from dental records as that of Quint Scripser, who was 20 at the time he disappeared.

Hinshaw said a Mount Hope area farmer looking for lost cattle discovered the body on Saturday afternoon. He said the truck had gone down a steep, wooded embankment at the end of the road. He said the truck hit a tree branch, which ripped off the top of the cab, and the vehicle landed on its side.

Hinshaw said Scripser was seen last on the morning of July 5, and he had been reported missing to the Morris County Sheriff's Department. Undersheriff Scott Coover said the Kansas Bureau of Investigation had been working on the case.

Hinshaw said while officials were continuing to investigate the circumstances surrounding the death, it appeared that it resulted from traffic accident injuries.

Bomb scare evacuates medical center building

WICHITA — Police evacuated a medical building near Wesley Medical Center on Tuesday after finding a package wrapped in white medical tape with wires inside, a police spokesman said.

The Wichita Police Bomb Squad was called in and detonated the device with only minor damage to some third-floor walls in the Medical Arts Tower.

"Exactly what the device is, we really don't know," said Bob Circle, assistant to the chief of the Wichita Police Department. The box was found in a public area on the building's third floor, he said.

Employees in the Medical Arts Tower offices were allowed to return shortly before 5 p.m., said Steven Perkins, CEO of Wichita Clinic, which has several administrative and physicians' offices in the building.

A spokeswoman for Wesley Medical Center, K.C. Baker, estimated that about 180 people had been evacuated from the six-story complex after a bomb threat was called in to one of the offices.

The building is filled with doctors' offices, laboratories and administrative offices, most of which are associated with the Wichita Clinic and the Wesley Medical Center.

Perkins and Baker said neither the clinic nor the medical center provides abortions there.

Free State coach fired; endangerment cited

LAWRENCE — The cross country coach at Free State High School lost his coaching job for allowing the team to travel to a meet in private cars that were driven too fast by students.

Coach Ward Brethour also was cited for having members of the team run during practice along a dangerous section of highway.

The Lawrence School Board on Monday terminated Brethour's contract to coach boys and girls cross country teams and the girls basketball team. No incidents involving the basketball team were involved.

Brethour will remain a business teacher at the school.

The school board approved a resolution terminating Brethour's coaching contracts because of "a pattern of decision making which places students at risk of harm."

The resolution said on Sept. 12 Brethour showed "poor judgment with regard to the safety of students" by having the cross country team travel to a meet in private vehicles operated by other students that were driven "at an excessive rate of speed."

On Sept. 28, Brethour directed the team to run along a dangerous section of U.S. Highway 40, the board resolution said.

Brethour could not be reached for comment. A message left on his school voice mail was not returned.

The hazards of students' driving to sporting events became an issue in Kansas in April when three 15-year-old members of the Blue Valley High School softball team were killed. One of the girls had been driving her teammates to an event a few miles from school.

The Blue Valley School District now requires that all students under 16 either use district transportation to activities or ride with an adult.

Teens in Kansas can receive restricted licenses at 15 that allow them to drive to and from school or to work by the most direct route. However, teens with restricted licenses are not allowed to have passengers under 18 except for brothers or sisters.

Consumer confidence drops as winter nears

NEW YORK — Consumer confidence has fallen to its lowest level in nearly two years amid the economic turmoil spreading around the globe.

The Conference Board reported Tuesday that its index of consumer confidence fell 9.1 points to 117.3 in October. The last time it was lower was in December 1996.

The decline was the fourth straight month of retreat and was much larger than Wall Street analysts expected. The index now is down 20.9 points from its 29-year high in June.

Consumer sentiment is an important economic indicator since consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

With the Christmas season just getting under way, the decline in confidence might mean trouble for the nation's retailers. Department stores make nearly half their profits in the last three months of the year.

"Growing anxiety about the financial markets, combined with political concerns and recent layoff announcements, have given consumers the jitters," said Lynn Franco, associate director at the Conference Board, a New York-based, business-financed private research group.

The report comes amid increasing evidence that the U.S. economy is slowing because of the financial crisis in Asia and Russia.

Stocks fell Tuesday, with the Dow Jones average dropping 71.32 to 8,360.89 in late afternoon trading. That's nearly 6 percent above where it began the year but 10 percent below its record high of 9,337.97, reached July 17.

The index that measures consumers' expectations for the next six months dropped 10.2 points to 86.6.

Fewer Americans said they would buy a home or major appliance or were planning a vacation. Many consumers said they expect business conditions to worsen, meaning fewer jobs and lower paychecks.

There's already evidence that the consumer is turning cautious. A survey released Tuesday by the International Mass Retail Association found 1,003 respondents planned to spend $828 on holiday gifts this year, up a slim 1.8 percent from their expectations for Christmas 1997.

Anticipating a tough holiday season, many merchants are issuing conservative sales estimates for Christmas. "There's a lot on the plate and there's a lot of reason to be skeptical," said Shawn Kahle, a spokeswoman for Kmart Corp., the third-largest U.S. retailer.

The consumer confidence index, started in 1967, is compiled from responses to questions sent to 5,000 households nationwide. The index compares results to its base year, 1985, when it stood at 100.

K-State returns to state $17 for each $1 received

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State has a $2.4 billion economic effect on Kansas each year, according to a report issued Friday by President Jon Wefald's office.

The report, "Value Added: The Economic Impact of Teaching and Research at Kansas State University," breaks the $2.4 billion into three major sections — direct financial effect, effect on community and value-added financial effect.

It concludes that for every $1 in state funding K-State receives, the school returns $17.

"We set out to measure all of the benefits the university generates for Kansas," said Michael Babcock, professor of economics and member of the Economic Impact Assessment Committee, which prepared the report.

Direct financial effect includes state, federal and tuition money as well as private gifts through the KSU Foundation and other K-State-affiliated agencies. This amounts to $379,760,221 per year.

Community effect — what students and faculty spend in Manhattan and the money and businesses attracted to the city because of K-State — amounts to $147.5 million per year.

By far, the largest financial effect on the state comes from the so-called value-added aspects. These are divided between teaching and research.

The report, available from the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs in Fairchild 103, says K-State graduates living in the state contribute $910.6 million per year more to the tax base. This is money generated because these taxpayers have a college degree from K-State. The report states a person with a bachelor's degree makes $16,582 more per year than someone without one. This increases for advanced degrees. The money also includes current K-State students who teach for free as part of their curriculum.

The financial effect of K-State research on the state amounted to $972,850,000, according to the report.

This money is attributed to such diverse projects from meat processing ($296 million) to soil testing ($1 million) to feedlot performance ($250 million). Of the three largest research colleges, the College of Arts and Sciences is responsible for 37.11 percent of all research; College of Engineering, 23.78 percent; and the College of Agriculture, 19.67 percent.

The report was prepared over the course of a year by the Assessment Committee for the president's office. Committee members represented all nine of the academic colleges and other arms of the university.

"It's something President Wefald can use to tell the public what we do here and what the return on investment is for the money taxpayers give the university," Babcock said.

"WE SET OUT TO MEASURE ALL OF THE BENEFITS THAT THE UNIVERSITY GENERATES FOR KANSAS."

— MICHAEL BABCOCK
PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS AND MEMBER OF THE ECONOMIC IMPACT ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE

The committee members were charged with identifying the research and teaching aspects of their colleges and assigning a dollar figure to them. For example, in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, when a faculty member serves on a state technical board, the committee used conservative estimates of what a professional consultant would earn in a similar situation.

"The $2.4 billion doesn't surprise me," Babcock said.

"The estimates we came up with were very conservative. There are no multipliers to the direct benefits of the report. It's fairly easy to argue the multiplier effects would be at least double that."

R.W. Trewyn, interim vice provost for research and chair of the committee, was not available for comment. Trewyn prepared the report using information collected by the committee.

Ray Weisenburger, associate dean of architecture and committee member, said there is plenty of room for debate as to whether the report is too optimistic.

"I think they were conservative enough that this might have some meaning to the people of the state," Weisenburger said.

NATO extends airstrike threat as Serb forces redeploy in Kosovo

By JEFFREY ULBRICH
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OSTROZUB, Yugoslavia — Serb forces drew back Tuesday from former Kosovo battlefronts, holding off the immediate threat of NATO airstrikes. However, the alliance reserved the right to launch an attack anytime if the situation worsens.

To keep up the pressure on Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic, the 16-nation military alliance decided to maintain more than 400 NATO warplanes on alert but did not set any new deadlines for airstrikes after the previous one expired Tuesday.

That continuing threat should help guarantee the safety of hundreds of thousands of refugees who are terrified of returning home unless government troops and Serb police are kept back.

"We know that President Milosevic only moves when he is presented with the credible threat of force," NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana told a news conference after a 2-1/2 hour meeting of NATO ambassadors in Brussels, Belgium.

More than 4,000 Serb policemen were reported to have pulled out of Kosovo on Monday alone, vacating many villages and dug-in positions. That encouraged a few among the 300,000 displaced people in this largely ethnic Albanian province to take a chance on returning home.

"We have observed what I would consider significant reductions in the Serbian police presence in the field," said Shaun Byrnes, head of the American section of the Kosovo Diplomatic Observer Mission, part of what eventually will be 2,000 ground verifiers who will make sure Milosevic is living up to his promises.

"Last night, we watched convoys of Serbian police leaving Kosovo and going north into Serbia proper," he said. "We estimated that there were roughly 4,100. That's quite a few policemen."

The Clinton administration said observations on the ground indicated Milosevic was in substantial compliance, meaning the threat of allied military intervention has been, at least for the moment, averted.

Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said NATO would move quickly to use force against Yugoslavia if Milosevic sends troops and special police back to Kosovo.

NATO allies were preparing to assemble a rapid-response force in neighboring Macedonia to be ready to intervene if Milosevic sends troops against civilians again, Albright said.

The demands made by American negotiator Richard Holbrooke in his Oct. 12 peace deal with Milosevic included a reduction of troops and police in Kosovo — where ethnic Albanians outnumber Serbs 9-to-1 — to levels of last February when fighting broke out between government forces and the independence-seeking Kosovo Liberation Army.

Neither the diplomatic observers nor The Associated Press reporters saw any roadblocks or checkpoints anywhere they traveled in the province Tuesday.

In Malisevo, a former KLA stronghold 30 miles southwest of Pristina, hundreds of ethnic Albanians filled the streets Tuesday morning, revisiting for the first time the homes and shops they abandoned when Serb forces overran the town July 28.

The top floor of Osman Mazreku's two-story house had been gutted by fire.

"I'm sorry to see my house in this condition, but I'm happy to be alive," he said. "That's all that matters."

No one said they planned to bring their families back, however, until police vacated a building on the village edge.

OUR VIEW

Lafene move could benefit all students

Dissatisfaction with current surgical facilities in the city of Manhattan has prompted some area doctors to look at building a for-profit surgical center.

The center is currently unaffiliated with Manhattan's existing primary medical care providers, Mercy Health Center Inc. Although Mercy is trying to collaborate with the builders of the surgical center, they are being forced to reevaluate their pending development plans.

At one time, those plans involved bargaining with K-State land for Mercy's Sunset facilities and moving Lafene Health Center into the ground floor there.

Lafene, in turn, would be occupied by the Department of English, which currently resides in Denison Hall, and Denison would be razed to reveal Hale Library's south facade.

The deal would open up a great deal of office space for K-State on the upper floor of the Sunset facility, while Lafene could expand to occupy the main floor. In addition, the English department would find the Lafene building to be less constrictive and more inviting than Denison.

The cost for moving Lafene would be funded by K-State or by the state before Lafene administrators would look to tap student fees, so cost accrued by students would be minimal.

There has been some question about whether the Sunset facility is too far from the main campus to be convenient. The university, however, has been looking to begin developing more to the east and west of campus, so moving the health center to the west makes sense. Sunset isn't prohibitively far, and the new facilities have the added advantage of providing more parking spaces.

Additionally, moving Lafene to Sunset would fit well with Manhattan's comprehensive transportation plan, especially if the city decides to make busing a priority. Lafene, by comparison, is difficult to reach from off-campus, unless you are going on foot.

Naturally, we only would endorse moving Lafene if it works out financially. With plans to build the surgical center still pending, it might be a while before Mercy goes anywhere.

If it does, though, expect to see more of the library.

READERS WRITE

Students need to voice opinions on graduate teaching assistants

Editor,

Is there a problem with graduate teaching assistants, as well as faculty, being screened sufficiently when English is their second language? A majority of students would answer 'yes' to this question.

Research has been done on this issue to find out if there is truly a problem. The research has concluded that students are not going to someone who can help with their problem. Our opinions must be expressed if we want things to change.

A few of us went around campus speaking to the departments of mathematics and physics, as well as the English Language Program on this issue. These departments said they felt there is not a big problem. They said they feel the percentages of GTAs who pass the test are high. For example, 85 to 90 percent of the GTAs in the Department of Physics pass the speaking test given by the ELP.

There is a survey given on how well a teacher communicates. This survey should be taken seriously. We know many people are like us and dislike filling out evaluation forms, but if people are having problems in their classes with teachers, this is the time to express their opinions. The survey is for communication problems, not problems with the teacher because one does not like the GTA or because one received a bad grade.

So yes, there is a problem with this issue. It is the students who are not voicing their opinion where it can be heard. If we never let the university know how we feel, how are the GTAs supposed to know what to improve on? Our opinion does count, if there are enough of us to complain. Some GTAs do not communicate effectively for students to understand them. Therefore, it is up to students to voice their opinions in order to better the quality of their education.

K-STATE GOES HOLLYWOOD

How would we be different if we moved campus to LaLa Land?

LOS ANGELES — In his State of the University address last Friday, President Jon Wefald, eschewing such academic topics as library funding, curriculum, or athletics, instead revealed his ongoing negotiations with producer Aaron Spelling for securing the taping of future episodes of "Beverly Hills 90210" at K-State.

"This is going to play big with our midwestern alumni demographic," Wefald said. "I think we can really tap into those waitress moms, and to a lesser extent, those few remaining soccer moms. Forget the Rhodes, Truman and Marshall scholars. I want to see more students on sitcoms, particularly on the UPN and the WB networks. That Felicity, she's a doll."

If Wefald's address was any indication, good old State has witnessed much change since it decided to pick up from its decaying campus two years ago and establish a new campus for its 20,000 students in Los Angeles. Although the city of Manhattan, which now ceases to exist, offered the university $3.6 billion to remain in the city, the allure of the City of Angels was too strong.

Things were bound to change — the campus had no choice in moving after Wefald's administration merged with an arm of the Time-Warner company to become the first public university to be privatized before Microsoft bought Texas and a 56-percent share in the Big 12 Conference.

But, I ask, have things changed for the better? True, there are more convertible automobiles on campus, at least outside of the greek system. The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art was moved into the giant Getty Center with enough room left over for the Los Angeles Dodgers and the Pentagon.

And now when football coach Bill Snyder makes the media mad, they blow him off instead of the other way around.

Actor Estelle Getty, who owns and lives in the Getty Center, said she "would love to do a 'Golden Girls' reunion set at K-State, particularly after I realized your veterinary medicine students were studying the similarities between a horse and my friend Bea Arthur."

Demi Moore seconded the notion, and said, "I didn't get no high school learning, but K-State still 'septed me and gave me a cheerleading scholarship. Go Hawks!"

However, not all is well in Sunshine City. Student Senate was absorbed into the Los Angeles City Commission and now gets as many payoffs as a football player. Troubled athlete O.J. Simpson found a home on the troubled K-State basketball team, returning to college to major in criminal justice in order to aid his tireless search for the real killers.

Call Hall changed its name to Call Girl Hall. The few assorted wannabe leather-and-piercing types of K-State have been absorbed into the West Hollywood alternative culture (Oh ... my ... God, they're no longer relevant! What will they do?). And the new Colbert Hills residential and golf course development slid from its Malibu site into the ocean.

For all the bad, though, students are getting their fair share of studio production deals.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

Student Body President Tracey Mann is set to star in a new adaption of "All the King's Men." Aaron Otto, who was rumored to star along with Leonardo DiCaprio, wasn't available. He was too busy on his as-of-now untitled update of the Billy Wilder satire, "Sunset Boulevard." Guess who plays Norma Desmond?

Liz Smith, consummate Hollywood insider, said, "Tracey, a dear friend of mine, is doing up the town in high style. Last night, dressed in Armani, he whispered there may be the possibility of him co-starring with little Winona Ryder in the movie version of Madonna's song 'Ray of Light' which is so, so brilliant. Kudos to these genius kids."

Smith, commenting on K-State's plans to turn Hale Library into a Gothic theme park, said, "Wefald's A-list turnaround of the university since 1986 screams Oscar, Oscar, Oscar! He's made former K-State president Duane Acker the Julia Phillips of academia! You'll never eat lunch in this town again, Acky!"

While attendance has plummeted at the University of California at Los Angeles and the University of Southern California — all due to the presence of K-State — it was a feisty student's decision to make a movie based on the school's history that has brought K-State the most attention.

The film's title, incidentally, is "Animal House, Too."

Controversy surrounding Endangered Species Act unfair

VIEWPOINT

JASON RUCKER

Extinction. It's kind of an ugly word. It's also the basis for the need and controversy around the Endangered Species Act. Passed in 1973, the Endangered Species Act is designed to keep biodiversity as high as possible by providing legal protection for those species that meet the criteria and become legally listed as endangered.

There was a big discussion on the act in one of my classes last fall. One of the students made a brilliant observation. The Endangered Species Act was totally unnecessary! Why? His example was the white-tailed deer. He pointed out that we have been hunting deer in the United States ever since the first humans crossed the land bridge from Siberia to Alaska. Hunting pressure has increased over the years while the population has increased its range and numbers. His conclusion was that hunting them, and not protecting them, caused the population to grow and spread.

Does anyone else see a bit of a flaw in this logic? The only way I could agree with it would be if by killing a deer and field dressing it, the viscera left in the woods regenerated into new deer. But this is obviously not the case. By nearly eliminating natural predators and planting millions of acres of high-quality food in the form of our agricultural practices, we severely have reduced selection pressures on the population.

Another common argument was that extinction is natural, and we shouldn't interfere. It is true that extinction is natural; however, the rate at which extinctions are occurring is highly accelerated from what is natural. The current rate of extinction is nearly as high as in the mass extinctions of the past. The most recent took place between the Cretaceous and the Tertiary periods, when it is believed a large asteroid struck the Earth.

Many people like to ask the question, "Why are we here?" The way things look, we might be here to bring about the latest mass extinction. I certainly would like to think this isn't the case, but you easily could make a strong argument for it. Luckily we can, to some extent, fix what we've broken.

Opponents of the Endangered Species Act have argued for the past 25 years that it doesn't work. But, in the spring of this year, Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt announced that two dozen plants and animals were going to be removed from the endangered species list, the most well known of which were the gray wolf, bald eagle and peregrine falcon. Some of the animals, including the bald eagle, were upgraded to "threatened," while others were de-listed altogether.

These plants and animals still are protected by other laws from being hunted, collected or harmed, though.

One of the least-popular aspects of the Endangered Species Act, particularly with farmers and landowners, is that it allows the government to restrict the use of land inhabited by endangered species.

The act outlaws the "taking" of an endangered species. Under the act's definition, to take is to "harass, harm, pursue, hunt, shoot, wound, kill, trap, capture, collect or attempt to engage in such conduct." Under this broad definition, the government can prevent landowners from building, farming, hunting or any other such use of their own property. This is done to protect the plants or animals.

The downside for the landowners is that the act doesn't account for any compensation, monetary or otherwise, to be made if endangered species live on their property. In the case of farmers, inability to use their land could result directly in loss of income, and for other landowners it might result in loss of income if they intend to build for commercial reasons.

For this reason, many people purposely will go out and kill endangered species that they find on their land. They do so hoping that if no one ever finds out about the species existing on their land, then they can go about their business. Never mind the fact that it can mean hundreds of thousands of dollars in fines, and possibly jail time, as well as being ignorant and irresponsible.

Due to the abundance of controversy surrounding the Endangered Species Act, it has sat idle for many years. The act does work and new legislation is needed to provide protection for other species, as well as providing compensation to landowners with endangered plants or animals on their property. Whether in the form of monetary compensation, tax-breaks, or the government buying the property, we all should become more aware of the organisms with which we share this world.

To quote a bumper sticker, "People aren't the only ones living on this planet, we just act like it."

Barbara Trent has worn many different shoes in her lifetime.

A Vietnam War activist, welfare mother and controversial documentary filmmaker, Trent said it's important to experience life from others' perspectives.

"It's real important to get inside other people's shoes," Trent said.

Trent spoke Tuesday evening in Union Forum Hall. Her lecture, "A Woman of Courage: From Welfare Mother to Oscar Winning Filmmaker," was the third in the 1998 Lou Douglas Lecture Series.

Trent is the co-founder of the Empowerment Project, a non-profit organization that trains people in documentary filmmaking. With the Empowerment Project, Trent said she makes documentaries with the goal of giving the public the whole story, not just what mainstream media tells them.

Her documentary "The Panama Deception" won her a 1992 Academy Award as producer and director of the film. This documentary looks into the U.S. government's involvement in its 1989 invasion of Panama and how it was presented to citizens by the mainstream news media.

In filming "The Panama Deception," Trent pointed out that President Bush sent 26,000 troops and a Stealth fighter to arrest one man in Panama when there were already about 14,000 U.S. soldiers stationed in the area.

The government and mainstream news media said hundreds of people were killed, but Trent's documentary showed there might have been thousands. She likened what the United States did in Panama to what happened in Oklahoma City, in terms of terrorism.

Throughout the lecture, Trent discussed the news media's coverage of the government's involvement in international affairs.

"Let's demand that media and the government do their part," Trent said.

Lou Douglas Lecture Series coordinator Beverley Earles Law said news is terribly one-sided, and Trent points out that people should watch the news media with questions rather than taking it all in.

"We must inform ourselves first, which is not easy to do," Trent said.

Trent said she has considered herself an activist since the '60s, when she was part of anti-Vietnam protests.

She also said she has tried to change the welfare system, after using it herself in the early '70s, by writing letters and becoming a welfare counselor.

Trent said a lot of what she has done can be attributed to courage.

"The secret to being courageous is to always try to do the right thing," she said. "Try to do something every day to make this consciously a better place."

Continuing Education Web site will help schools gather information

By KELLY EVENSON

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Through the technology of the Internet and the Division of Continuing Education, a Web site has been established to help people find educational material on the World Wide Web.

Midwest Connection's purpose is to provide links to reference pages, search engines and, most importantly, other educational institutions throughout the Midwest.

"The division wanted to create an educational tool for educators, parents and students to find resources about the Web and also to utilize the Web more," said Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for the continuing education division.

The Web site establishes links to different educational organizations such as the National Parent and Teacher Association as well as to other resources and teaching tools.

For example, there is one link to science fair project ideas. This page would assist parents in coming up with ideas that both they and their children could work on together for the science fair.

"Parents can use the website to get more information to supplement their child's education," Sinn said.

Another purpose for Midwest Connection is to have listings of educational institutions in the region. Only 11 schools from Kansas are listed now, but these were added before it became an official site.

Response is growing on a gradual basis as word of the site spreads.

"We want to build a network among educators, schools and school districts so they can learn more about educational resources in the Midwest," said Dave Stewart, associate dean of the continuing education division.

Students also can benefit from Midwest Education Connection. For the younger children, there are kid's links to sites such as those with simple science projects they can do at home.

Links to universities and community colleges are provided so high school students can find information about particular colleges they might be interested in attending.

Through advertising and browsing the Internet, Sinn said she hopes other institutions will add Midwest Education Connection to their Web pages as a resource tool.

"We are hoping to create a network where educators in the Midwest can find ideas about curriculum material and to share ideas about what has worked for them," Sinn said.

Sinn said that in the future, the site could offer chat rooms for teachers, feature information on specific schools and increase the number of schools that are represented on it strict in the Midwest.

Men's rugby team sets goal to move to Western Championship

BY SARAH CRAIG

They play in freezing weather and practice on a field with shards of glass and potholes.

Regardless of these conditions, the members of the K-State men's rugby team have achieved a 3-2 record in regular-season play this fall and compete Saturday against Johnson County and Emporia State at Tuttle Creek State Park at 1 p.m.

The team is focusing on proceeding to the Western Championship in the spring. In order to do so, it must defeat Wichita, a merit-table team.

"We've only lost to them a couple times in the history of K-State," player Matt Truta said. "We should be able to beat them."

The team returned from Benedictine College last weekend, after defeating it 20-5. The victory came at Benedictine's homecoming game.

Daniel Wacker, social chairman, said the numbers have been hurting recently, and more players would enable the team to improve.

"We're going through a restructuring period," Wacker said. "Last year a bunch of good players graduated or moved on."

"In the '80s, we were known for hard-hitting, tough play. We'd like to see that again."

K-State lost in its previous meeting against Wichita this season but hopes for success this time.

"It's a big game for us. It decides if we get to go on into higher-level play next season," player Ryan Martin said.

"We hope to have everyone healthy, and hopefully, this time we'll beat them."

The team plays two seasons each year — one fall and one spring. Wacker said lack of a quality practice field has caused difficulties this season.

The team does not have a field of its own. The team mows and chalks a field at Tuttle Creek prior to each home match.

As a club sport, rugby does not receive sponsorship through K-State. Wacker has been seeking sponsorship from Budweiser, and he said he hoped they would purchase jerseys next season.

"I'm working on a deal where they'll sponsor our jerseys," Wacker said. "I think it'll help improve the look of the team and get us more respect."

In order to make Westerns and in turn achieve higher respect, the team must work on unity, Martin said.

"We need more guys out at practice so we can have better practice," Martin said. "I'd say the main thing we need to improve on is playing as a team."

Cats say Sunflower Showdown still holds some mystique

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

What comes to mind when you think about the 3rd-ranked K-State Wildcats' next game against their intrastate rival, the Kansas Jayhawks? Is it still a significant rivalry, or is it just mean another K-State win?

After all, the Wildcats have defeated their Interstate 70 rival each of the past five seasons, including a 48-16 route last season. The five-game winning streak for the Cats is the longest winning streak in K-State history over Kansas.

Overall, the series belongs to the Jayhawks, who have beaten the Wildcats 61 times in the 95 games played between the two Kansas schools.

"It's still a big game for us," cornerback Lamar Chapman said Tuesday. "We're ranked pretty high at number four and three, and KU

K-State looks to win 6th straight against rival Kansas Jayhawks

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

It's been so long since K-State lost to the Kansas that most current students weren't even enrolled the last time the Wildcats dropped a decision to the Jayhawks.

Of course, there are the 46 Kansas natives on the Wildcat roster who grew up following the Sunflower Showdown and who might remember when K-State fell to the Jayhawks in 1992, 31-7.

K-State has won the past five meetings with the Jayhawks, beginning in 1993 when Coach Bill Snyder notched his second 'W' against Kansas. In his fifth season at the Wildcat helm, Snyder guided the Cats to a 10-9 victory in Manhattan. Later that season, the Wildcats broke into The Associated Press top 25 — a place they've called home ever since.

In 1994, K-State traveled to Lawrence and won in Memorial Stadium for the first time since

Bowl Championship Series ratings leave K-State at 4th, very beatable UCLA at No. 1

SAM FELSENFELD

Who let a UCLA graduate design the Bowl Championship Series ratings formula?

It's tough to tell if the system just is designed poorly or if it's designed to allow the pollsters to squeeze any team in or out of the championship game, but the latter makes more sense.

By publishing the scores, voters wanting to see a certain team rank high enough to play in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl — say, UCLA or Ohio State — can manipulate the BCS rankings by boosting one of those teams or dropping another team — say, K-State — in the polls.

No team has dominated its opponents on a weekly basis like the Wildcats, and UCLA has come dangerously close to losing several times this season. Drop UCLA into the more-appropriate fourth slot and put the Cats at No. 1, where they belong; put Ohio State at No. 2 and set Tennessee third, and the race becomes quite a bit tighter.

Right now, UCLA is first with a rating of 3.04, followed by Ohio State at 4.31, then Tennessee at 6.50 and K-State at 8.79.

Adjust the polls the way they should be, and the standings will be the same, but you're looking at UCLA at 5.04, Ohio State at 5.31, Tennessee at 6.00 and K-State at 6.29 — not quite the runaway it is now.

The rankings are done by a computerized formula but clearly can be controlled by the voters.

K-State figures to gain ground in all the polls as the schedule toughens up with Nebraska and Missouri, but the team playing in the Fiesta Bowl could come down to a sportswriter's second- and third-place votes.

Last year, the media tried vigorously to get UCLA into the Fiesta Bowl, boosting the twice-beaten Bruins up to No. 5 and dropping the Cats from ninth to 11th after their final game — a 28-3 win at Iowa State — even though two teams ranked ahead of K-State lost that same day. The writers followed with the tear-jerking stories about UCLA, the hottest team in the country.

The selection committee saw through it and picked K-State instead. This year, though, the Cats might not be so fortunate.

Also, who decided that the number of losses only affects a quarter of the equation?

Any team that loses a game has no business playing in the Fiesta Bowl. A team that beats you is better than you. If there's a team better than you, you can't be the national champion.

Of course, I'm still trying to figure out why The Seattle Times has any more say in the matter than the Junction City Daily Union.

There's still plenty of time, though, and wins against Nebraska and Missouri surely would help the Cats' cause.

Enough about that — it's time to get down to business. If you read this column on a weekly basis, you know that I go head-to-head with a guest in my column, picking a dozen or so games against the spread.

Last week, I won again, upping my record to 6-2. I've gone 51-33 picking games, while my guests have combined to go 42-42. I must admit, I'm on fire — en fuego, baby.

This week's guest — Jed Spencer, a senior in horticulture — scares me, though. When faced with tough challenges, he's shown the ability to make the correct decision.

He grew up in Lawrence but knew better than to become a bird. His father graduated from Kansas, and he grew up bleeding red and blue, but he saw through the propaganda and made it to safety. A soul saved, hallelujah!

We'll see if he can carry his decision-making skills over into this week's games. I'm ready for the challenge, though.

1. K-State at Kansas. There's no line posted on this game due to the injury situation. Neither of us would pick the Chickenhawks, even if the line was 75 points. For the sake of this column, though, we're setting it at K-State - 21.

And if you've tried this game on the PlayStation at home, you know the Cats have no problem winning easily. My pick: K-State to cover. Guest pick: K-State to cover.

2. Ohio State -22.5 at Indiana. Ohio State will win, but Indiana and Antwan Randle El could give the Buckeyes a run for their money. My pick: Indiana to cover. Guest pick: Ohio State to cover.

3. Texas +16.5 at Nebraska. I like the Huskers to win, but they haven't blown out any Big 12 Conference teams, unless you count Kansas as a team. My pick: Texas to cover. Guest pick: Nebraska to cover.

4. Arkansas -3.5 at Auburn. The only reason this spread is so low is because of the name Auburn. My guest might agree, but he's picking the Tigers. "My mom graduated from there," he said. "So I have to." My pick: Arkansas to cover. Guest pick: Auburn to cover.

5. Missouri +1 at Texas Tech. A Missouri win sure does help out K-State's strength of schedule. Texas Tech plays teams pretty tight, but I'm chalking one up for the Big 12 North. My pick: Missouri to cover. Guest pick: Texas Tech to cover.

6. Iowa State +7.5 at Oklahoma. Could you imagine if Iowa State pulled off the victory in Norman? That would be the sweetest thing since sugar was invented. My pick: Iowa State to cover. Guest pick:

Iowa State to cover.

7. Michigan -12 at Minnesota. It's KU week, so I've got to pull against Glen Mason. My pick: Michigan to cover. Guest pick: Minnesota to cover.

8. Baylor +14.5 at Notre Dame. Imagine what this would do for K-State's strength of schedule. It's kind of gutsy to call for a straight-up Baylor win, but I'm doing it because the Bears play teams close, and the Irish, well, I hate them. My pick: Baylor to cover. Guest pick: Baylor to cover.

9. Texas A&M -4 at Oklahoma State. An OSU win helps K-State's schedule strength, but it won't happen. My pick: Texas A&M to cover. Guest pick: Texas A&M to cover.

10. Georgia -11 at Florida. Florida never beats anybody big, and I'm running out of space in this column to explain things. My pick: Georgia to cover. Guest pick: Florida to cover.

11. Stanford +29 at UCLA. UCLA never covers, and I hate the Bruins. Do I need to explain how a poor showing by UCLA will help the Cats? My pick: Stanford to cover. Guest pick: Stanford to cover.

Schottenheimer, Grbac look for answers to Chiefs slump

By DOUG TUCKER

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — As if they didn't have enough problems, now the Kansas City Chiefs have dissension among the troops to worry about.

Quarterback Elvis Grbac is pointing fingers at teammates, namely Tony Gonzalez, Tony Richardson and Donnell Bennett.

An exasperated coach Marty Schottenheimer is trying to stem that potentially disastrous tide, saying that Grbac was not in fact pointing fingers.

In the meantime, a second-straight loss has plunged the Chiefs to 4-3, tied for third in the AFC West, three games behind Denver.

It's a sad time for a team that had the NFL's best regular-season record two of the previous three seasons and, in the minds of many experts and almost all its fans, went into this season as the Super Bowl favorite.

"I don't know that the word disappointing is strong enough," Schottenheimer said Tuesday, one day after the Pittsburgh Steelers broke Kansas City's 11-game regular-season home winning streak with a 20-13 victory.

It was the second-straight loss for the Chiefs, who once again self-destructed with mistakes and penalties.

Perhaps even more disturbing was the fact the team did not respond to adversity in the same positive way it almost always has during Schottenheimer's 10 years as head coach. After getting clobbered 40-10 by New England, the Chiefs had a bye week and then a full week of practice to get ready for Monday night's home game against the Steelers.

Instead of fixing their problems, they simply repeated them.

The run defense, which had been weak all year, gave up 182 yards, including 119 to Jerome Bettis.

The Chiefs were flagged 10 times for 75 yards. For some of those errors, they paid a big price. A holding call on Ted Popson nullified Joe Horn's 95-yard touchdown return of the second-half kickoff. Defensive holding and offside infractions helped the Steelers keep key drives alive.

"Obviously, the penalty thing has not gotten through. I think that goes without saying," Schottenheimer said Tuesday. "Last week in practice, the players instituted a formula for fouls that occur in practice. We addressed it throughout the course of practice last week."

In the continuation of another season-long problem, the Chiefs also failed to score touchdowns once they reached the 20-yard line.

Twice in the first half they had to settle for field goals, once when a wide-open Richardson slipped down while standing on the goal line waiting for what would have been an easy touchdown pass from Grbac.

Tight end Gonzalez dropped several passes.

"There's only so much a quarterback can do," said Grbac, who hit 15 of 36 passes for 224 yards, with one touchdown and two interceptions.

"I can put guys in certain situations to make plays," Grbac said. "I can't catch the ball. I can throw but I can't catch it. But that's no excuse. There's other balls I wasn't in rhythm with."

Grbac, who fumbled on the final series when the Chiefs were trying to put together a game-tying drive, singled out several players.

"The guys who have to make plays on this team have to start realizing they've got to make plays," he said. "The Tony Gonzalezes, the Tony Richardsons, Donnell Bennett. It just can't be (wide receivers) Andre Rison or Derrick Alexander. It's got to be a combination of guys making plays."

Schottenheimer said he hadn't heard Grbac's remarks but did not believe he was trying to put the blame on anybody.

"I think what Elvis said was the product of his frustration and disappointment," he said. "I don't think he was casting responsibility ... on anybody else. I'm sure there are a number of guys in the locker room that feel the same way."

Kansas City Star columnist set to return to work

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Jason Whitlock returned to work Tuesday as a sports columnist for The Kansas City Star, two weeks after being suspended for an incident at Foxboro, Mass.

Whitlock, 31, attended Tuesday morning's news conference with Kansas City Chiefs' head coach Marty Schottenheimer. His column, absent from The Star since Oct. 12, would resume today, said Rick Vacek, assistant managing editor/sports.

"Our examination of the matter is complete, and we are looking forward to Jason's column being back in The Star," Vacek said Tuesday.

Whitlock was suspended following an incident in the press box after Patriots fans began taunting visiting writers during New England's 40-10 victory over the Chiefs on Oct. 11. Security personnel became involved after Whitlock held up hand-lettered signs for the fans to see, one of which was personally insulting to the Patriots and quarterback Drew Bledsoe.

The Star, in announcing the suspension, also said Whitlock had agreed to give up his weekly radio show.

"I don't want to talk about my suspension," Whitlock said Tuesday. "I want to come back and do what I've always done. I don't think my writing style is going to change."

SHOWDOWN

knows that.

"They're going to do whatever they can to try to knock us off. They probably feel good because they're at home. They'll be ready to play, we know that for sure."

As important as this series might be, just how does the Wildcat/Jayhawk feud stack up against other rivalries in the country?

The rivalry between Tennessee and Florida has been getting a lot of national recognition in the past few years, with UT finally beating the Gators this season.

In the 1970s and 1980s, the Big 8 Conference featured several big rivalries. The Oklahoma/Nebraska game was the top game in the conference each year.

In the 1990s, the Huskers repeatedly have run away with the victory, and Oklahoma has been inconsistent from year to year.

Is the rivalry between the two Kansas schools still a top game, or has the competitiveness dropped off in recent years?

"Not at all," freshman wide receiver Aaron Lockett said. "I think KU has shown tremendous heart this year in college football. They impressed me heavily when I saw them play against Oklahoma State earlier this year, but when I saw them play against Colorado and beat them, I knew they were capable of beating a big-time team."

"It means that we have to have our stuff in order when we go there Saturday, because we played Colorado, and they (KU) exposed a lot of things that we didn't expose when we played them," Lockett said.

With Saturday's Sunflower State Showdown being his first on the field, Lockett said he was ready to experience the rivalry.

"I've watched them before, but I don't think a person fully understands what it means unless you're from the state of Kansas or actually played in those games," Lockett said.

Clements said. "This game means a lot to me. I just get jitters when I think about playing them because I want to win in such a bad way."

Even though K-State has handled the Jayhawks fairly easily in the past few years, the rivalry between the two schools has not lost any of its competitiveness.

"This game means a lot more than just a win or a loss," offensive lineman Jeremy Martin said. "There's a lot of implications involved. It's a recruiting battle, it's pride for all the guys who grew up in Kansas, and there's just a lot of different things involved."

"I'm sure losing the last five years adds a little fuel to their fire," Martin said.

"We just want to keep it alive."

DOMINANCE

1969. The Wildcats pounced on the Jayhawks, winning 23-13, and fans were able to carry parts of the goal posts all the way to the Kansas Turnpike.

In 1995 Kansas came to Manhattan, sporting a No. 6 ranking after beating Colorado in its previous game. K-State dominated that contest, winning 41-7, beating a top-10 team for the first time since 1970.

K-State ran the streak to four-straight wins in 1996 when Brian Kavanagh threw all day on the Jayhawks for 212 yards and four touchdowns to win 38-12. Defensive end Nyle Wren also earned Big 12 player of the week honors in that victory with nine tackles and two quarterback sacks.

Michael Bishop and K-State's return teams stole the show in 1997, when the Wildcats were victorious 48-16. Bishop threw for 218 yards and three touchdowns against the Jayhawks. Gerald Neasman returned a kickoff in the first half for 99 yards, and David Allen returned a punt for 70 yards to open the second half.

The five-game winning streak the Wildcats are riding is not one K-State is taking lightly.

"It does put a little pressure on us, because ever since I've been here at K-State we have not lost to KU, and that's something that I would definitely not want to have during my senior year, going out losing to KU," Joe Bob

Welfare reform package ushers in shift of goals

By NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just inside the door of Manhattan's Social Rehabilitation Services office, the classified section of The Manhattan Mercury is tacked to a bulletin board.

Ads for minimum-wage jobs such as pizza delivery and kitchen help are circled in pen.

Kip Lee and Melinda Sunnenberg work inside the SRS office and see the job listings every day, as do many of their clients. For Lee and Sunnenberg, though, the circled newspaper represents something other than job opportunities.

It symbolizes how the goals and attitudes of SRS have shifted since a welfare reform package was passed nearly two years ago.

Lee, chief of income maintenance at SRS, said these goals and attitudes have changed over the past few years. Now, questions about how hard clients have looked for jobs, not if they qualify for cash assistance, are asked first.

"It used to be that when somebody came in, we first determined that person's eligibility for cash assistance. Now, we find out if they've looked for a job, how hard they've looked, and our goal is to get them in the work force," Lee said.

The change brought a sharp decrease in the number of people receiving cash assistance in Kansas and in Riley County.

The Washington Post reported in September that Kansas has one of the nation's most active diversion programs, and the number of people receiving cash assistance has dropped 44 percent since the new laws went into effect.

Lee said the number of families in Riley County receiving cash assistance has declined comparably, from 288 to 167, a change of 42 percent, between November 1996 and August of this year.

He said there are two reasons welfare recipients in Kansas are dropping from the rolls so quickly.

"Kansas is one of the top states because we really started enacting reform policies two years before '96. Also, in Kansas, the emphasis is on looking for a job first, not job training," he said.

However, Lee said he is concerned, as many economists are, that financial troubles in places such as Asia, Brazil and Russia might reach the United States and affect the local economy. People have been able to move from welfare to work, in part, because of the strength of the U.S. economy. If the unemployment rate climbs, though, Lee said he is confident SRS will be able to deal with the change.

"We try to make sure people have the skills to maneuver in the job market and, if the economy goes bad, we're working on a backup plan to deal with that," Lee said.

Lee said the rate at which people come off the rolls already has begun to slow. It has nothing to do with the economy, he said, but the clients have become more difficult to place.

"For the past couple years, we were mainly helping people who had some job experience find work," Lee said. "Now, we have a segment left that has very few job skills and many times have different barriers to overcome before getting a job. We've had to change our philosophy a bit."

Many clients are challenged by mental or physical disabilities and have relied on assistance for years. Putting these people to work is part of Sunnenberg's job in the income maintenance department at SRS. It is a job she said has changed dramatically the past few years.

Sunnenberg now helps people with some of the little things needed to find work, such as child care, transportation in a community with no public transit, and gas money for those who do have transportation.

She said one problem is that some people don't realize help is available.

"Yes, there are barriers to overcome, but many people don't realize we can help them, and it may not be as bad as it seems," she said.

Sunnenberg said her job now includes being involved in many aspects of a client's life. She interacts with clients from the beginning to the end of their job search. Her job is more extensive but so are the rewards, she said.

"Working here since welfare reform and even a while before that, my responsibilities have increased and in some ways it's like a new job," Sunnenberg said.

"Now, everything is put together in one case. It's more interesting, and there are more things to do. Before, I didn't know things that affected people's daily lives as much, and now I work with the different aspects of a case."

From a management level, Lee said the change has been obvious.

"Before, we had strict guidelines to follow about how to give out the money we received. Now, the feds give us a hunk of money, and we can be more creative with it," Lee said. "Instead of putting people in a box, we are pulling resources together to help people, and we're also working on being more approachable."

Other elderly excited by Glenn's space trip

By JERRY SCHWARTZ
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TITUSVILLE, Fla. — Yes, said Katie Lamb, she would like to go into space like John Glenn. "It would be wonderful to see the Earth from above."

Like Glenn, she's in her 70s, and like the 77-year-old astronaut-turned-senator-turned-shuttle passenger, she sees no reason why age should prevent anyone from reaching for the stars.

"My goodness, younger people think that when you reach a certain age, you're not functional," said Lamb, a 74-year-old former medical secretary from Dansville, N.Y., near Rochester. She says she retired 10 years ago, "before I was ready, but I didn't have much of a choice."

Florida's Space Coast is full of people like Lamb — people who, unlike Glenn, were drawn here by the warm climate and the promise of a comfortable retirement.

Many of them say Glenn will prove that the elderly are capable of great things. Many of them say they would be happy to be in Glenn's place.

"Sure. In a minute," said Dora Buckingham, a retired bookkeeper who was unwilling to give her age. "You don't have to know that."

Buckingham was waiting in the lobby of the Titusville Towers, a home for senior citizens that is across Indian River from Cape Canaveral, within view of Discovery and its launch pad.

Every day, as many as 65 seniors come to the residence's recreation room for lunch. Janice Wiese, director of the program, frets about getting the seniors to lunch and the lunch to seniors on Thursday, launch day.

"It's going to be a tremendous traffic jam," she said.

They're planning to serve early, at 11:30 a.m. instead of noon. Perhaps the daily bingo game will be cut short. And judging from the ardor with which the senior citizens attack the game, this could set off a revolt.

Dolly Dellutri was among those eating Spanish rice and chocolate pudding Monday. She said she was 88, "ready for the pasture," and moved down from New York in 1973.

She said she was all in favor of Glenn's flight.

"Give the old people a break!" she said. "I've still got a shot at going up."

Like Glenn — a former Marine fighter pilot — the men and women who lunched in Titusville are veterans of the World War II era.

"I started out as Rosie the Riveter and ended up as a computer builder," Anna Hertzog, a retired aerospace worker, said.

Some do not have a high opinion of the generations that follow them.

"They don't want to work. They don't have to. It's given to them," said Harry Meech, an 84-year-old retired tool-and-die maker from Kalamazoo, Mich.

Not all of them said they approved of what Glenn is doing. At 76, Warren Lamer said he doesn't think he or anyone else has to prove anything.

"I still ride my big Harley," said Lamer, bearded and wearing a "Florida Lottery" cap. "I just stopped playing softball two years ago."

Glenn, he said, was "just out for the publicity. I mean, he's 77 years old. He has no business being up there. He might die up there, and they might just push him out the window and let him float off."

The elderly cynics, though, appear to be in the minority. Lawrence Alexander, a 72-year-old retired bus driver at Cape Canaveral, said he wished John Glenn Godspeed.

"I want him to go up and make history. Again," he said.

Lamb is not all that fascinated by Glenn's space past. She's more interested in his space future. She is small and frail, though a lung infection prevented her from taking a much-anticipated trip to Ireland two years ago, but she still imagines how wonderful it would be to leave Earth.

Former student body president says K-State is top priority in Legislature

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A few months after Republican Jeff Peterson graduated from K-State in 1996, he was elected to represent Manhattan's 66th district in the Kansas Legislature.

Peterson said he has utilized his position as a member of the House Appropriations Committee to benefit the university and the community. He said being the incumbent candidate gives him an advantage because he is more experienced and knowledgeable of the issues.

"I was more effective in my last term than my first and will be more effective in my next term than this one," he said.

Peterson said his first priority is K-State. One of his biggest accomplishments was working with President Jon Wefald to save $841,000 of university funds that were in jeopardy of being lost.

"I have a firsthand K-State experience as a student and as a representative of the students," he said.

Peterson is the only Republican on the House Appropriations Committee from a Kansas Board of Regents university. In his two terms as student body president at K-State from 1994 to 1996, Peterson said he established a good working relationship with the board members.

"I got some good experience in Topeka, but I didn't have a lot of experience the first time," he said. "Now I've got that."

Peterson said he would like to maintain the base level of funding at K-State, and increase faculty salaries so they are comparable to peer universities. Peterson said salary increases are possible, but the proposal would take a lot of support to get through the Legislature.

"I think by continuing to be reasonable in our policy, if we can increase technology in the classrooms at K-State and increase faculty salaries, that's a huge issue in this district," he said.

Peterson said there needs to be a change in the way higher education is governed in Kansas, and the best solution is coordinated governance of higher education in the state.

In such a system, the 19 community colleges, six regents institutions and other schools in the state would be governed by one board, rather than by separate entities.

"There's a lot of inefficiency in the system now," he said. "We could eliminate a lot of waste."

Peterson said he does not accept money from political action committees. He said this sets him apart from other candidates, because he is one of a very small number of representatives who follows this practice.

"I thought it made sense to raise money from individuals who support me and my candidacy," he said. "I believe that I will be more effective in reaching the goals they have set than my opponent. They would be better off electing me and my ideas in the Legislature."

Former Manhattan mayor wants education supported on all levels

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sydney Carlin first entered politics because she opposed a jail being located in downtown Manhattan. She stayed with the issue for 10 years.

Carlin is now the Democratic candidate to represent Manhattan as representative for the 66th district in the Kansas Legislature. She is a former Manhattan mayor, served on the Manhattan Park and Recreation Advisory Committee and a former city commissioner. She said her experience has given her the opportunity to work with a network of people in many different positions.

"I just want to see that we have an active representative on this side of town," she said.

Education is the most important issue in the election, Carlin said. She said education must be supported at all levels, and everyone needs to benefit from the best education possible.

"If kids get a good education, they aren't going to be trouble growing up," she said. "That environment is what it's all about."

"Tax cuts are wonderful and we all love them, but I think we missed a lot last year for kids and funding education."

Carlin was appointed by Gov. Bill Graves to the State Board of Indigents' Defense Services, which coordinates and provides indigent people accused of a felony with legal representation. She was approved by the Kansas Senate for that position.

Carlin, who is still a member of the board, said she has gained a new network of people with this experience.

"That's the board that has given me a new understanding of state budgeting," she said.

Higher education in Kansas is in need of restructuring, Carlin said.

She would also like to see more need-based scholarships for students and would be very supportive of salary increases for faculty and classified workers.

"I'd like to be a leader and make things happen to benefit a lot of people," she said. "It's hard when you care about a lot of things."

Carlin said job training and retraining would be one of her first priorities in office. She said finding the best way to implement the program will require some research.

"It would be a way to bring in companies that require different labor skills than we have," she said.

Highway improvements, primarily to Kansas Highway 18, are also a priority. She said she has a good record with transportation improvements. Runway improvements at Manhattan Regional Airport were made while she was mayor.

Carlin also would like to expand public transportation so families with one car could qualify to use the transportation. She said such a program would make it easier for people to get around town or for parents to visit their children at school.

"They can't get to their child's school or visit their classroom or visit their teacher," she said.

Carlin said people can find more information about her through radio and television advertisements and door-to-door visits. She said she would not stop until problems are solved in the community.

"When they come to you, that's when something really matters to them," she said. "When they come to you, you better be there."

Hurricane Mitch pummels Honduras, Belize; 2 dead

By VICTOR R. CAIVANO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA CEIBA, Honduras — Hurricane Mitch cut through the western Caribbean on Tuesday, pummeling coastal Honduras and Belize with driving rain and fierce winds that snapped trees and sent thousands of people fleeing for higher ground. Two storm-related deaths were reported.

Honduran President Carlos Flores Facusse declared the highest state of alert and sent in troops to evacuate thousands of people from villages on the sparsely populated coast. Thousands more made their way to safer ground on their own.

Most of the population of Belize City fled inland in cars and government buses, while tourists rushed to find ways out of the Mexican resorts of Cancun and Cozumel, where the storm is expected to hit by the end of the week.

Late Monday afternoon, Mitch was about 60 miles north of Honduras and moving west-southwest — roughly parallel to the coast — at 6 mph. Its winds dropped from 180 mph to near 155 mph, reducing Mitch to a Category 4 hurricane, one category below the most powerful. But the 350-mile-wide storm remained very powerful — and dangerous.

Mitch's slow speed made the hurricane's path especially unpredictable, forecasters said.

Earlier in the day, when Mitch's 180 mph winds made it a Category 5 storm, the U.S. National Weather Service said only three Atlantic storms were stronger — Gilbert in 1988, Allen in 1980 and the Labor Day hurricane of 1935.

Democrat says trust, efficiency important issues

By ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An efficient government, under which people can sleep at night knowing someone they trust is keeping a watchful eye, is what Jim Clark said he envisions for the country. Clark said he plans to be that trusted someone.

Clark, the democratic candidate for Kansas' 2nd District House of Representatives seat, said he is bothered by the lack of efficiency and wastefulness in the government.

"I'm a businessman. Waste offends me," Clark said.

Clark is focusing his campaign on improving health care, especially restoring retired veterans' health benefits.

"Our health care system needs a major overhaul," Clark said. "We need to start working toward a long-term solution and not just a quick fix."

Clark, a veteran of the U.S. Navy, said he is concerned with the reduction of military treatment facilities and limited access for veterans needing medical care.

"There's no space available to treat these people," Clark said.

On the subject of higher education, Clark said he would like to see more government grants available, instead of student loans.

"I don't want people to leave school with huge loans," Clark said. "Once you get your foot stuck in the bucket, you can't get it out."

He said, however, the schools that receive these grants should be reputable institutions. The grants should be awarded to students based on academic achievement, he said.

Clark also supports increased funding for research in the education system. He said research is a basic foundation for improving society.

"I don't think we're spending enough on primary research," Clark said. "We can't advance without it."

Clark said there is a problem with government-funded social programs, such as welfare, as well. He said he does not believe the 'Welfare to Work' program has improved the system, but rather it has caused further problems.

The current system, which cuts benefits completely after a recipient has been on the program for a certain length of time, causes people to sink to a lower poverty level, Clark said.

"We need to graduate their benefits," Clark said.

Incumbent focuses reelection campaign on continuing success

By ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A balanced budget, a 'Welfare to Work' program, enough social security funding for the next 10 years and tax relief due to a budget surplus are what Republican incumbent Congressman Jim Ryun describes as the successes in his term of office.

Ryun is running for reelection to the 2nd District House of Representatives seat from Kansas.

Ryun is calling the balanced budget a major accomplishment as well as drawing attention to the budget surplus that returns dollars to citizens' pockets. This also helps protect social security and raise the income level of seniors, he said.

"There are enough dollars there to fund social security for the next 10 years," Ryun said.

The implementation of the 'Welfare to Work' program in Kansas also gave more control to the local level, Ryun said.

"It was a major change that was very successful," he said.

In his reelection campaign, Ryun is emphasizing the successful changes during his term as well as finishing what he started.

KANSAS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ryun said he is focused on continuing to provide tax relief to the working class. He is working to change policies such as the marriage penalty, which occurs if a married couple's income, when combined, puts them in a higher tax bracket making their taxes higher.

"We want to eliminate the marriage penalty," Ryun said. "We worked on it this year, and we will work on it next year."

Among the other items Ryun said he would like to improve, if elected to another term, is education. Ryun said he wants to return resources and decisions back to the teachers, parents and school boards.

"We're trying to return those dollars back to the classroom," Ryun said.

Ryun said he also is concerned with higher education. He supported an increase in the Pell Grant level and lowering interest rates on student loans.

"We're looking for a way to make college more affordable," Ryun said.

Ryun said strengthening national defense is another pressing issue. The declining military budget cannot support the number of deployments, he said.

"It's now at a weak state," Ryun said. "We have to build our forces back up."

Ryun stressed that to have an effective military and to retain military personnel, the funds must be made available to meet needs.

"We've got to provide the kind of equipment they need," Ryun said.

The congressman also said, in regard to military funding, he has been and will continue to work on restoring benefits to military retirees. Currently, a pilot program that gives extra health benefits to veterans is under way to help the government determine if it would be effective.

Retail sales are up in Manhattan. That's good news. Rising retail sales mean Manhattan folks have better jobs, and more spendable income. ☒ That's because in 1994 Manhattan voted to invest in creating new jobs. Already, 650 new jobs have been created in Manhattan. ☒ The 1/2¢ economic development sales tax ends this year. Let's sustain our controlled growth. ## "Vampires"

to be shown at K-State

Students get opportunity to see advanced screening of new movie

By JEFF ELLIOTT

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Vampires have taken the K-State Student Union by storm.

John Carpenter's "Vampires" will premiere at 8 tonight in Forum Hall. The event is sponsored by Union Program Council in connection with Network Event Theater Inc.

"Vampires" stars James Woods ("Contact") as Jack Crow, the leader of a team of Vatican mercenaries in pursuit of Valek (Thomas Ian Griffith), a vicious 600-year-old vampire.

With most of his crew wiped out, Crow must find and kill Valek before he obtains the "Berziers Cross" — the item that can give him, and all vampires succeeding him, the omnipotent power to walk in the daylight.

Members of the cast, including Woods and director Carpenter, will be on hand live from the University of California at Los Angeles to answer students' questions via satellite following the showing.

Network Event Theater Inc. premieres major motion pictures at a number of selected college campuses across the nation.

The campuses are satellite-linked to allow simultaneous showings of new films. Earlier this year, the company premiered "Urban Legend." Last year the Gwyneth Paltrow romance "Sliding Doors" and the popular thriller

"I Know What You Did Last Summer" made their debuts at K-State and the other universities across the country.

"Very Bad Things," starring Cameron Diaz and Christian Slater, will premiere at K-State on Nov. 18.

Students can pick up passes to the free screening at the UPC office on the third floor of the Union.

According to Kelley, 700 tickets were handed out.

She said Forum Hall only seats 575 people, so seats will be given on a first-come first-serve basis.

"Vampires" will be shown in theaters all over the country starting Friday.

The film is rated R.

'Lost in Space' leaves audience wishing film was never found

By RYAN DOOM

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It seems Hollywood's well of original ideas finally is starting to run dry. Yet another old TV series has been put up on the silver screen. This time, it is the campy and, dare I say, "classic" sci-fi family drama, "Lost in Space." While some shows, such as "Mission Impossible," "Star Trek" and "The Addams Family," successfully made the transformation into film, "Lost in Space" joins the ranks of those films that could not.

The story begins with a brief explanation that the earth will be dead in two decades and the only hope for humankind is to colonize a new planet known as Alpha Prime. In order to get across the galaxy quickly, a hypergate must be set up near both worlds. It is up to the space family Robinson to save the day and make it to Alpha Prime in time.

The entire family is on board: the father, John Robinson (William Hurt), the mother, Maureen (Mimi Rogers), the scientist daughter, Judy (Heather Graham) and the two young children, Penny (Lacey Chabert) and Will (Jack Johnson). Pilot Major West, hired to navigate the ship, is played by "Friends" star, Matt LeBlanc.

As soon as their ship leaves the atmosphere, it is thrown off course when a stowaway is discovered on board. It is the evil Dr. Smith (Gary Oldman), who was supposed to sabotage the mission but got stuck in the hull. When his reprogrammed robot tries to destroy the ship, Dr. Smith has no choice but to warn the family. Their vessel is forced to engage its hyperdrive to go through the sun in order to avoid being charcoaled. When they finally stop, they find they are in unexplored territory and are lost in space.

The movie is filled to the brim with tacky one-liners and obvious statements. Some plot holes are so big they could have flown their ship through them.

"Lost in Space" could have been an exciting space adventure. They had the special effects and even managed to assemble a superb cast. But the film has way too much silver lining and nothing inside the package. Of course, when I look at the old show, I'm surprised the movie was made at all.

'Halloween Hootenanny' gives music to October holiday season

By SARAH FLORIE

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Halloween often conjures up images of candy, costumes, partying and drinking a little of the special witches' brew.

People tend to think these ingredients will make the perfect social gathering. However, there is another essential component that can make your ghoulish gathering horrifically haunting—the perfect music.

In this light, Zombie A Go-Go Records and Rob Zombie of White Zombie fame introduce their compilation of spooky Halloween tunes, entitled "Halloween Hootenanny."

This album merges such acts as Reverend Horton Heat, Rocket From the Crypt and Zacherle.

This disc is far from the traditional cheesy "Monster Mash." Most of the songs are reminiscent of the 1950s, actually.

Songs such as "The Creature Stole My Surfboard," by Dead Elvi and

"Banshee Beach," by The Ghastly Ones, remind me of the old surfer tunes.

As always, Reverend Horton Heat gives a great performance with the song "The Halloween Dance," which should become a new Halloween classic.

Another creepy song is an interesting rendition of the theme to "The Munsters" by Los Straitjackets.

This album could be the perfect way to keep your Halloween guests from disappearing like ghosts. Although the songs are fun for putting your party in the Halloween spirit, you probably won't be listening to this album all year.

Luckily, for those wanting to have a complete selection of suspenseful Halloween songs to spin this year, Zombie A Go-Go Records has two other classic monster discs: "A Haunting We Will Go-Go," by The Ghastly Ones, and "Head Shrinkin' Fun," by The Bomboras. Instead of opting for the traditional bump-and-grind party favorites, try these on for size.

FAA says Viagra may impair pilots' vision

By GLEN JOHNSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Add another line to a pilot's preflight checklist: No Viagra.

The Federal Aviation Administration is recommending pilots not take the impotence drug within six hours of flying because it could make it tough to distinguish between the blues and greens found in cockpit instruments and runway lights.

So far the drug doesn't seem to be a problem for other transportation workers.

"For the above reasons, 'Six hours from Viagra to throttle' is recommended," wrote Dr. Donato J. Borrillo, a flight surgeon who issued the warning in the most recent issue of the Federal Air Surgeon's Medical Bulletin. Studies show it takes that long for Viagra to leave the bloodstream.

The phrase mimics the abstinence rule for pilots who drink alcohol: "Eight hours from bottle to throttle."

In clinical studies of Viagra, 3 percent of patients reported seeing a bluish haze. Others taking higher-than-recommended doses had trouble telling the difference between blue and green.

Both conditions are troublesome for pilots, since blue and green lights are used to outline taxiways and illuminate digital instrument panels.

Borrillo, who is commander of flight medicine at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, issued his vision warning in a bulletin to flight surgeons. They are the doctors who must certify that pilots are healthy enough to fly.

He noted that Viagra inhibits the action of an enzyme that contributes to impotence. But that same enzyme, phosphodiesterase, is also present in the eye and is critical for cells to change light into brain signals.

Borrillo warned that "full attention to the instrument scan and the task at hand may be compromised" by Viagra.

He also wrote that because Viagra can cause "confusion" for pilots, "it is the author's view that a minimum of six hours should pass from 'as needed' dosing and flying."

Furthermore, the continued (daily) use of sildenafil is incompatible with safe flying. Sildenafil is the chemical name for Viagra.

While no accidents have been linked to Viagra use, the FAA decided to recommend it not be used within six hours of flying, agency spokeswoman Kathryn Creedy said.

She said the agency would continue to monitor the drug.

Northwest Airlines instituted a policy earlier this year requiring its pilots who take Viagra to wait 24 hours before flying, said company spokesman Jon Austin.

Pilots, particularly those who fly commercial aircraft, are some of the most medically restricted transportation workers.

They must have a physical at least every year, and they must tell their doctor every six months what medications they are taking. In addition, they are limited to flying 100 hours a month.

John Mazor, spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association, said the restriction is actually less severe than the one pilots face when taking antihistamines. Federal law prohibits pilots from flying before more than twice an antihistamine's effective time has elapsed — eight hours in the case of a tablet that is effective for four hours.

"Usually the FAA doesn't deal with a drug until it's been on the market a year or more," Mazor said.

"It probably comes under the heading of the FAA being a little more cautious."

Court of appeals rules public access video bizarre, disgusting but not legally obscene

By SCOTT BAUER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — A video that aired on public-access television showing a naked man in clown makeup masturbating in front of the camera was "bizarre and disgusting" but not obscene, the Nebraska Court of Appeals said Tuesday.

The court dismissed the case against Scott Harrold, who had been convicted by a jury in January 1997 of a misdemeanor count of distributing pornography and fined $1,000.

"This lowers the bar for public access programming," Beth Scarborough, president of Cablevision, said. That company aired the show in question two nights in a row in 1995 on a Lincoln public-access cable channel.

"While the adjectives strange, weird, graphic, unnecessary, distasteful, indecent and offensive are all applicable to Harrold's videotape, it is not legally obscene," Judge Richard Sievers wrote in a ruling supported by two of the three judges on the appeals panel. The third judge said she thought that four minutes of credits the court did not view should have been included before any ruling was made on whether the video was obscene.

Marilyn Hutchinson, the prosecuting attorney, said the state will appeal to the Nebraska Supreme Court. Harrold's attorney was in court Tuesday and unavailable for comment.

The court's decision might embolden people who now feel like their programming can get on the air, Scarborough said.

Group, state disagree about status of children on welfare

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A lot of children are living in poverty, and the state welfare agency isn't doing enough to let parents know what services are available to them, a child advocacy group said Tuesday.

However, the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services said the allegation simply isn't true, because it is spending record amounts for children needing state assistance and making an effort to follow up on those no longer getting cash assistance.

"I categorically disagree that we aren't doing enough for kids," said SRS spokesman John Garlinger.

He said SRS is spending $471 million in state and federal funds for children this fiscal year, and that number will increase to $519 million in the next budget year, beginning July 1, 1999.

Kansas Action for Children issued a report in which it said 23,212 children in the state lost their cash assistance from July 1996 to July 1998 as part of the welfare reform program.

"A lot of people aren't getting aid," said Gary Brunk, executive director for the Kansas Action group, during a Statehouse news conference. "I suspect not a serious effort is being done to let them know what benefits are available."

He said the group can't tell whether those no longer receiving cash assistance are living with families whose basic needs are being met, and suggested the state institute a better way to track the children.

"We're not saying that horrible things are happening, but can you say you are making progress when you don't know what's happening to the kids?" Brunk said.

The group said the number of children receiving cash assistance went from 45,553 in 1996 to 22,341 this year, while the number of children receiving free school lunches went from 118,921 to 117,565 for the same period.

Also at the news conference was Paul Johnson, director of the Public Assistance Coalition of Kansas. He said the state should do more to provide job training to people getting off welfare.

"I think it's a harsher, colder attitude that has taken over at SRS," Johnson said. "That attitude has permeated to the front-line level."

Brunk said SRS should do more to promote what services are available to people getting off cash assistance, such as Medicaid for children and food stamps.

"A brochure in various offices that explains benefits available to folks in the state would be good. I'm not aware of any such effort in the state," Brunk said.

But Garlinger said he disagreed with Brunk's assessment.

"We always make people aware of benefits," Garlinger said. "For the past six months, we have been doing surveys of former cash assistance recipients. We are in the process of trying to find out."

He said overall cash assistance since January 1995 has dropped by 61 percent to the current level of 28,770 people, and food-stamp recipients have decreased by 40 percent to 97,759.

Zoo doesn't shut down for winter

By JAMI STUMP

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With winter approaching, Manhattan residents will have a prime opportunity to visit the Sunset Zoological Park. In fact, it might be a better time to view the animals than summer.

"Winter is not a bad time to view the animals," Ryan Gulker, Sunset Zoo general curator, said.

"They are much more active now than when it is hot, and all they want to do is nap. Winter really is a great time to visit the zoo."

Gulker said most of the animals have the option of staying in their permanent shelters or going outside during the winter. Some of the tropical birds are placed inside heated barns for the winter.

"The zoo purposely picks animals that can physically handle the cold weather and fit well with our facilities," Gulker said. "If the animal has the choice, normally it will stay outside."

The animals have a heating unit and extra hay for insulation inside the permanent shelters during the winter.

Gulker said they normally don't worry about losing animals during the winter.

"We haven't lost an animal to the cold since I have been here-at least not to my knowledge," Gulker said.

Electrical power outages that prevent the buildings from being heated are a problem.

Gulker said each facility has a system to warn zoo staff if the electricity fails.

The animals at the zoo receive constant care. This includes clean facilities and food, said Nicole Caraway, junior in pre-veterinary medicine.

Caraway is also a docent at the zoo. A docent is a volunteer who works with the animals that are used for educational purposes.

Docents visit schools to display animals and talk about what happens at the zoo. Their jobs do not focus on taking care of the animals, but they are an extension of the zoo's educational department.

"Even when the zoo has been shut down because of the winter weather, zoo staff still takes care of the animals," Caraway said.

"The animals must stay warm and should not be bothered by the weather."

Some of the animals have their feeding rations increased during the winter season, Gulker said.

"Normally, we increase the diets of the hoof animals by 25 percent," Gulker said.

"The majority of the animals stay the same. We just like to put a little more fat on the hoof animals."

Gulker said the cold weather does not seem to affect the animals as much as the heat.

"The animals can get out of the cold, but it is harder to escape the heat," Gulker said. "It is a psychological thing during the winter, because they see snow on the ground and think that they should run back inside."

Russian president enters rest home

By GREG MYRE

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Russian President Boris Yeltsin sought sanctuary Tuesday at a rest home outside Moscow, retreating further from the political spotlight and leaving the country guessing about the exact nature of his illness.

The Russian leader, who has been an infrequent visitor to the Kremlin in recent months, checked into the Barvikha sanitarium for an open-ended stay to recover from what's been described as high blood pressure and exhaustion.

Yeltsin has played only a marginal role in dealing with the country's painful economic crisis, and some analysts say the country is being guided mostly by Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov, who has been in office less than two months.

"Ever since he was appointed, Primakov has been acting more as a president than as a chairman of the government," said Nikolai Petrov, a political analyst with the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace in Moscow.

Primakov traveled Tuesday to Vienna, Austria, to fill in for Yeltsin at a summit between Russia and the European Union. Yeltsin called off the trip Monday due to his illness, the latest in a string of maladies that have dogged him for years.

Primakov and Yeltsin met early Tuesday at the president's country residence outside Moscow, before Yeltsin moved to the sanitarium.

Russian television broadcast pictures of Yeltsin sitting in a chair behind a small table and talking to Primakov. Yeltsin was not visibly ill. He nodded in response to Primakov's comments, but their words were not broadcast.

Dr. Michael DeBakey, the American cardiologist who consulted with Yeltsin's doctors before and after his 1996 heart-bypass surgery, predicted Tuesday it would take Yeltsin more than a week to recover.

"He'll recover from all this, and he'll be back at work," DeBakey said from his Houston office.

He said he has not been approached about Yeltsin's latest illness. "I have not had any requests from his medical team to come over," DeBakey said.

The president and his doctors say Yeltsin has no crippling illness and will serve out his term that lasts until mid-2000.

Still, few people in Russia said they believe that Yeltsin, 67, will ever again be the robust, reform-minded leader he was during his early years in power.

Richardson, who French said apparently lived alone, had been a student at K-State since August 1997. K-State records list Richardson's hometown as Lawrence, but family members could not be reached for comment.

Lawless worked as a parole officer in Junction City. Department of Corrections spokesman Bill Miskell said Lawless had worked in the Junction City office since 1995, previously working in facilities in Norton and Ellsworth, Kan., since 1987. No other information about Lawless' family was available at press time.

Shawnee County coroner Erik Mitchell performed autopsies late Monday but could not release any other results. French would not say how many times the men were shot or if a suicide note was found in the apartment, which is in the Westchester Park complex, near Candlewood Shopping Center.

There was no indication that alcohol or drugs played any role in the shooting, French said, and no evidence of other suspects was found at the scene. Police found a handgun in the apartment but would not release its caliber.

French said investigators continue to tie up loose ends in the case and said he hoped to release more information — including a definite motive — sometime today. He said the department's resources have been heavily devoted to solving the case quickly, including six detectives from the Investigations Division and other RCPD supervisors.

Associate Dean of Student Life Carla Jones said a campus memorial service has not yet been planned for Richardson. Normally, services are organized only if friends and family members are interested in participating. Jones said she hadn't heard from anyone yet who knew Richardson, but a service could be planned if students come forward.

She also said Richardson's death — Manhattan's first homicide since January 1997 — does not have broad safety implications for students. She said circumstances that contributed to Richardson's death are different from those that affect general student safety.

"I would not stretch it that far," Jones said, of connecting Richardson's death to general student safety. "I would not say that because I think our students, for the most part, make pretty good judgments. We're here to help and respond, and that's what we do."

Jones said University Counseling Services and the Office of Student Life are available to counsel students who want help coping with Richardson's death.

A spokesman for Rumsey-Yost Funeral Home in Lawrence said the home is handling Richardson's arrangements but would not release any other information until after meeting with family members.

since we have qualified people now," Correll said.

The feel of falling with the only support coming from the air can bring on a sense of freedom.

"When you first let go of the airplane, you feel a sense of freedom," Stauffer said.

"You can feel the air rushing at you. You don't feel that gut feeling like on a roller coaster. It is a totally different experience."

DENISON

with Mercy Health Center, Inc. have focused on the possibility of moving Lafene to the Mercy building on Sunset Avenue. Mercy was considering buying property from K-State at the intersection of Claflin and College avenues and locating a new health center there.

However, Julie Lea, director of community relations at Mercy, said she didn't think that discussion was still ongoing. She said Mercy is weighing many options, that might or might not make space available at the Sunset location.

"We are evaluating our options and needs relative to building a new building or remodeling," Lea said. "But we are six months away from a decision related to that."

While Mercy makes its final decision, K-State only can wait to decide how to handle the need for better facilities in Denison. Inadequate spaces and structural conditions are problems with the building that are causing concern.

Gerald Carter, director of university planning and university architect, said discussion is ongoing as to what will best accommodate everyone, but many possibilities are still in the speculation stage.

Larry Rodgers, head of the Department of English, said his concern is keeping the English faculty members together.

"The issue is where the dominoes fall so that the English department can get a better space to handle the large number of faculty," Rodgers said.

Carter said Denison's design is not efficient for classroom use.

"There are problems in its internal layout," Carter said. "The classrooms aren't efficiently laid out for teaching as it's done now."

Denison also has dated mechanical systems, a lack of general access for students with disabilities and a lack of appropriate office space. Carter said Denison is a safe building, though.

"It's annoying to use for people in there, but it's a reasonable building," Carter said.

With K-State's current enrollment exceeding 20,000 students, Denison no longer fulfills the need for up-to-date space and technology. Until further decisions can be made, however, it will continue to serve its current purpose.

"We'd like to see it come down as soon as possible," Carter said. "But for now, things stay as they are."

first-timers to experienced jumpers.

"I began jumping in March of 1996 and have over 300 jumps now," Correll said.

Skydivers in the club start with jumps of 3,000 feet and move up.

"The experienced skydivers can choose to jump from up to 10,000 feet," club secretary Cathy Williams, senior in political science, said.

In years past, the club has jumped at K-State football games. The skydivers would jump from a plane thousands of feet in the sky and land inside the stadium.

"We do a lot of demos each year, but last year we were unable to jump into the stadium because of new rules being enforced by the USPA (United States Parachute Association). We hope to get a few jumpers into the stadium this year

Spaceflight chief extra jittery as Glenn's launch nears

By MARCIA DUNN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Television coverage

Television network coverage plans for John Glenn's space launch on Thursday:

ABC — 12:30 p.m., anchored by Peter Jennings with Wally Schirra and Gene Cernan. "Good Morning America" broadcasts live from Cape Canaveral, 6-8 a.m.
CBS — 12:30 p.m., anchored by Dan Rather with Gordon Cooper and Bill Harwood. "This Morning" broadcasts live from Cape Canaveral, 6-8 a.m., "CBS Evening News" live from Cape, 5:30 p.m.
NBC — 12 p.m., anchored by Tom Brokaw with Scott Carpenter and Bob Hager. "Today" broadcasts live from Cape Canaveral, 6-8 a.m., "Nightly News" live from Cape, 5:30 p.m.
CNN — 12 p.m., anchored by Miles O'Brien and Walter Cronkite. Periodic reports from Cape Canaveral starting at 6 a.m.
Fox News Channel — 8 a.m., anchored by Jon Scott with James Lovell.
MSNBC — 8 a.m., with Tom Brokaw, Brian Williams, Katie Couric and Matt Lauer. "The News with Brian Williams" live from Cape Canaveral, 8 p.m.
Discovery — 12:30 p.m., anchored by Steve Aveson with Jerry Linenger and Blaine Hammond.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The stakes are higher than ever for NASA as it counts down the final hours to John Glenn's heralded return to orbit on Thursday, and the man in charge of spaceflight knows it.

"As a person responsible for this mission, I feel an awesome responsibility and apprehension that everything goes well. This is special," Joe Rothenberg said after having lunch with the 77-year-old Glenn on Wednesday.

As always, Rothenberg said, NASA has done everything possible to ensure the safety of space shuttle Discovery and its seven-member crew. But the fact that one of them is Glenn, the first American to orbit the Earth and a senator for the past 24 years, has upped the ante if anything goes wrong.

"Would it be any different from any mission? Sure," Rothenberg said. "Because like having a teacher on board, it really has got very high visibility and an awful lot of people would look at it as something happening to an American hero and we were part of the process. There's no question about that."

Glenn was so beloved by America after his 1962 flight, in fact, that President Kennedy reportedly instructed NASA not to fly him again — he didn't want to risk the astronaut's life. Glenn never got to ask Kennedy if this was true; the president was dead by the time Glenn heard about it.

Schoolchildren around the country will be watching Glenn's return to space, just as youngsters watched on Jan. 28, 1966, when schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe soared aboard Challenger. She and the six others on board were killed when the shuttle blew up 73 seconds into flight.

Up to a quarter-million people are expected to converge on the area for a glimpse of the launch. That doesn't count the 3,800 reporters expected for liftoff, or the 70 members of Congress, or President Clinton and his entourage.

Everything seemed to be in NASA's favor heading into the final hours — the countdown was humming along and perfect launch weather was forecast.

"It looks like Mother Nature wants John Glenn to return to space as much as the rest of us," said Air Force Capt. Cliff Stargardt, a meteorologist.

Glenn spent Wednesday, his last day on Earth for the next 1 1/2 weeks, reviewing flight plans and greeting well-wishers from afar.

The seven astronauts stood near their launch pad, waving and shouting to relatives and friends kept 20 feet away to prevent the crew from catching a cold.

"A little different trip this time," Glenn called out in response to a question. Then: "Oh, don't worry, I'll get some window time." On his five-hour Mercury flight, Glenn had almost no time for sightseeing.

Fourteen busloads of people traveled to the pad to wave goodbye and take pictures of the crew. It took longer than planned to get all those people where they needed to be, and it delayed the crew's training-jet session. Glenn opted out of the jet flight once it was postponed.

Glenn left the crowd in the front passenger seat of a sporty convertible driven by his commander, Curtis Brown Jr. "Hey, buckle up!" Brown shouted, and everyone did.

Rothenberg said Glenn is excited about returning to orbit after 36 1/2 years, but "totally composed."

"He's treating it like a professional, like a fighter pilot getting ready to fly," Rothenberg said.

At Tuesday night's beach barbecue, Glenn showed off a photo of himself with his World War II squadron. One of the men in the photo, or his family, sent Glenn the picture so he could autograph it.

"He shared that with the whole crew," said Charles Precourt, a space shuttle commander who is assisting Discovery's crew. "Since a lot of us are aviators and buffs of history and whatnot, that was quite a thing to be able to share with him."

DB92 records to be audited

■ Financial records to be reviewed by university office, privilege fee review moved to spring semester.

By ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The financial records of KSDB-FM 91.9 will be reviewed by the University Office of Internal Audits before the station requests a renewal of its student privilege fee.

The Privilege Fee Committee has referred the station's budget problems to the auditing office. Due to the lack of solid financial information, the fee review scheduled for Nov. 1 has been moved to the spring semester.

DB92 is funded through the university, student privilege fees and on-air underwriting announcements. Barbara Dethloff, vice chair of Privilege Fee Committee, said it was important for the committee to know how student fee money has been used in the past before it decides what the station should receive next year.

"The Privilege Fee Committee would feel more comfortable with the budget request and allocating funds if the audit was done this semester and reviewed in the spring semester," Dethloff said. "That way, all the bases are covered, and everyone knows what's going on."

Station manager Len Potillo was placed on admin-

6,000 thank-yous given to Snyder

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Asante Sana."
"Muchas, muchas gracias."
"You're the Man."

Whether the thanks were expressed in Swahili, Spanish, Chinese, Korean or English, the messages were the same.

Thank you, Bill Snyder.
More than 6,000 signatures filled a 50-foot-long thank-you card for Snyder's $19,000 donation to Hale Library. The donation was the net profit of the 1998 spring scrimmage football game.

The thank-you card, which hung two stories from the library's fourth-floor balcony, was presented Wednesday to Coach Snyder by Brice Hobrock, dean of KSU Libraries; Don Rathbone, president of the Friends of the Library; and Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean of KSU Libraries.

Ryun to visit K-State

Republican incumbent Jim Ryun will visit K-State today to talk with students about his record and hopes for re-election.

Ryun, the 2nd District Representative to the United States House of Representatives, will make a brief campaign presentation at 1:30 p.m. in the Union Sunflower Room. After the presentation, he will take questions from students interested in learning more about the Nov. 3 elections.

Mark Kelly, Ryun's campaign manager, said Ryun's visit is part of a road trip through the 25 counties that make up the 2nd district. The trip began last Wednesday and concludes on Friday. Ryun is running against democratic challenger Jim Clark.

CANINES ON THE CATWALK

The 4-H Kennel Club held a Halloween party Wednesday night at Pottorf Hall for various dogs and their owners. The costumes ranged from K-State cheerleader outfits to a dog dressed up as Superman.

Stormy, a yellow lab owned by Jessica Boatwright, was dressed up as a clown for the annual 4-H Kennel Club Halloween party.

From Superman to Tweety bird, Manhattan dogs, owners get in full spirit of Halloween season

TRICK-OR-TREATING

isn't just for kids anymore. Members of the 4-H Kennel Club in Manhattan dressed their dogs and themselves up for their annual Halloween party Wednesday evening in Pottorf Hall at Cico Park.

Pet costumes included a Kansas City Chief, complete with shoulder pads; a biker wearing a denim Harley-Davidson jacket; a couple of K-State cheerleaders and one dog dressed as a bag of bird seed for his owner who was dressed as Tweety bird.

Emily Jardine, club member from Manhattan, dressed her dog up as a ballerina.

Her mother, Anne Jardine, said they went through the dress-up box for costume ideas.

"My mom gave me the idea," Jardine said.

Sarah Buseman, club member from Riley County, said the Halloween party is her favorite meeting of the year. She dressed her dog Abby as a gypsy.

"She was going to be Air Bud, but I didn't have a jersey," Buseman said.

There were also the traditional witches, ghosts and jack-o'-lantern costumes.

Judy Pageant, club leader, said the Halloween party has been going on since she became leader seven years ago.

Halloween is not the only time members get to dress up their dogs. They can also decorate their dog for Christmas, wear green on St. Patrick's Day or participate in a swimsuit pageant in the summer, Pageant said.

She said for one swimsuit pageant, a member tied string around her dog and told everyone she was wearing a string bikini.

The 4-H Kennel Club is one of the few 4-H clubs in Riley County that focuses on a specific project, in this case, the dog project.

"It is specifically a dog club," said Dan Rogers, father of eight-year member Ashleigh Rogers and a biological and agricultural engineering professor at K-State.

The club has two 10-week classes, one in the fall and one in the spring, Pageant said.

They also have a few tune-up sessions in the summer to prepare for the dog show at the Riley County Fair, Rogers said.

Members work on showmanship, obedience and agility, Ashleigh Rogers said.

Showmanship judges how the handler shows off the dog; obedience deals with teaching the dog to follow commands such as "sit," "stay" and "heel," and agility is having the dog negotiate an obstacle course, Rogers said.

Rogers' dog, Buster, has been county champion in the agility class several times.

After a costume parade, club members received candy for their participation, and the dogs received dog biscuits. Pageant said she prefers not to give out awards.

"I don't pick winners," Pageant said.

Ogden boy killed in weekend car accident

KINGDOM CITY, Mo. — A 5-year-old boy is the fourth passenger to die from injuries after a car overturned on Interstate 70 near Kingdom City on Saturday, the Missouri State Highway Patrol said.

Melvon Steele died Monday at University of Missouri Hospital in Columbia. His mother, Helena Cangieter, remains hospitalized in serious condition. Both are from Arlington, Texas.

Three others in the vehicle — Elizabeth McKenna, 19; Edsel Cangieter, 27, and his son Edsel Cangieter, 5, all of Ogden, Kan. — were pronounced dead at the scene.

The car, driven by Helena Cangieter, hit a median two miles east of Kingdom City and overturned, ejecting the passengers, the patrol said. Another car then hit the first vehicle. The driver of that car suffered moderate injuries.

AIDS virus sensitive to daily medications

Two experimental attempts to reduce the 15 to 20 pills a day that HIV-infected people must take to keep AIDS at bay failed when the virus bounced back quickly in many patients.

Over the past few years, the three-drug AIDS "cocktail" has turned AIDS from a death sentence to a manageable illness. However, patients must take their pills on an excruciatingly precise schedule. Some pills must be taken with a quart of water, some on an empty stomach, some only after eating. Missing a few lets the virus mutate into forms resistant to the drugs.

In two studies published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine, researchers tried to find out what would happen if they cut back on patients' medication once the drugs had reduced the virus to almost undetectable levels. It is the way doctors treat cancer: Hit it hard and fast at the start, then follow up with easier-to-take maintenance therapy.

Doctors in France and the United States took different approaches but got results so disappointing, they ended both studies early.

In the United States, virus levels shot up rapidly in nearly one-quarter of the patients whose medication was cut back to just one or two of the drugs.

"Most failed in the first couple of weeks," said Dr. Diane Havir of the University of California at San Diego, lead author of the U.S. study, which treated 316 people at 27 centers.

Dr. Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said it is too early to assume that people must stay on the drug cocktail for the rest of their lives.

While these studies show that patients cannot be put on fewer drugs after three or six months, Fauci said a year might do the job.

Republicans criticized for new ad campaign

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Democrats lashed out Wednesday against a $10-million Republican ad campaign that makes an issue out of the Monica Lewinsky scandal, even as party leaders struggled to raise money for a counter-punch.

Undeterred and flush with cash, Republicans planned to add another TV spot to their arsenal, this one accusing President Clinton of hiding behind "legal mumbo jumbo" in the Lewinsky case.

Clinton complained at a news conference that Democrats are "being very badly outspent" by Republicans, but he passed up a chance to criticize their strategy. Republicans can "make the election about whatever they want to make the election about," he said.

Vice President Al Gore said, "Attacking the president and investigating the president has apparently become an obsession with the Republicans."

House Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, D-Mo., called the ads "a sign of what they intend to do if we leave them in charge of the Congress and that is continue an open-ended, non-ending impeachment investigation."

Boy dies from aerosol deodorant inhalation

MANCHESTER, England — A 16-year-old boy obsessed with smelling nice died after months of repeatedly spraying his entire body with deodorant, a coroner ruled Wednesday.

Jonathan Capewell had 10 times the lethal dosage of propane and butane in his blood when he suffered a heart attack and died July 29, coroner Barrie Williams said.

It is believed the fumes built up in his body following months of "high" deodorant use, Williams said.

"His personal hygiene led him to use more than was normal in a confined space, which limits ventilation," said the coroner, who recorded the death as accidental.

Jonathan's father, Keith Capewell, said his son would cover his entire body with deodorant at least twice a day.

"When we told him he was using too much, he said he just wanted to smell good," Capewell said.

"Even when we were in a room downstairs, we couldn't just smell it, we could taste it," the father said. "You wouldn't have thought that could have been the cause for someone to die. What a price to pay for smelling nice."

Sue Rogers of the British Aerosol Manufacturing Association said she had never heard of a similar incident.

"It is extraordinarily unusual and terribly tragic," she said. "The aerosols have warnings about spraying in confined areas and well-ventilated places, but these are for flammability risks, not about accidental inhalation."

The boy's mother, Louise, called for better warnings on deodorant cans.

"You just get up in the morning and spray it on, but who expects it to kill you?" she said.

Moceanu declared adult in settlement

HOUSTON — Olympic gymnast Dominique Moceanu was declared an adult Wednesday in a settlement giving her financial independence from her parents.

The 17-year-old high school senior, a gold medalist at the 1996 Atlanta Games, has been trying to find out where all her earnings have gone. She claims her father squandered the money.

Her parents, Dumitru and Camelia Moceanu, changed their minds and chose not to challenge their daughter's bid to become a legal adult. State District Judge John Montgomery approved the arrangement.

Jimmy Phillips Jr., a lawyer for the gymnast's parents, declined to comment on their actions.

Moceanu ran away from home more than a week ago and filed a request to be declared an adult.

She said earnings in her trust fund bankrolled unauthorized risky investments and a $4 million gym bearing her name. Her lawyers believe the trust is structured so she won't obtain control over the assets until she turns 35, lawyer Roy Moore said.

As a legal adult, the gymnast can begin to demand information about the trust, including records of expenditures. It's unclear how much money, if any, remains in the trust.

Her parents withdrew their opposition to their daughter's request on Tuesday after meeting with her in a deposition.

"The parties have met amongst themselves and as a family unit have resolved their differences," the family said in a statement Tuesday.

Moceanu ran away Oct. 18, a day after her father threatened to have her coach deported to Romania. She said her flight was the result of months of arguments sparked by questions about her earnings.

"I want whatever I have earned to be under my control so I know how my earnings are being used, and I want to be able to train and compete in the sport I love for the right reason — because I love it, not because my father tells me I have to make more money," she said last week.

Her parents said in court documents their daughter's coaches and a friend had convinced her to run away.

Honduras blasted by deadly Hurricane Mitch

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LA CEIBA, Honduras — Hurricane Mitch paused in its whirl through the western Caribbean on Wednesday to punish Honduras with 120 mph winds, sweeping away bridges, flooding neighborhoods and killing at least 32 people.

Mitch was drifting west at only 2 mph over the Bay Islands, a Honduras tourist area popular with American scuba divers and beachcombers.

The storm was only 30 miles off the coast, and hurricane-force winds stretched 105 miles from the storm's center.

That meant the Honduran coast and a good portion of the interior was under hurricane conditions for more than a day.

"The hurricane has destroyed almost everything," said Mike Brown, a resident of Guanaja Island who was within miles of the eye of the hurricane. "Few houses have remained standing."

At its peak Tuesday, Mitch was classified as the fourth-strongest Caribbean hurricane this century with 180 mph winds. By Wednesday afternoon, the 350-mile-wide storm still packed a punch, but its sustained winds were down to 120 mph.

The U.S. National Weather Service said only three Atlantic storms were stronger than Mitch at its peak: Gilbert in 1988, Allen in 1980 and the Labor Day hurricane of 1935.

The rainfall — up to 25 inches in mountain areas — began to take a toll. More than 50 rivers had overrun their banks, and the government evacuated more than 45,000 people from low-lying areas, according to Col. Guillermo Pinel, chief of the National Emergency Committee.

Many towns were cut off by washed-out roads and downed bridges, and severed phone lines on the Bay Islands, making it difficult to gauge the extent of the damage. The government said 72,000 people were forced to flee their homes.

President Carlos Flores Facusse declared the Caribbean coast a disaster zone, and officials said 23 people had died in Honduras alone, including 14 on Guanaja.

Five people were killed in La Ceiba, including three police officers swept into a river in their car, said regional police chief Maria Lisa Borjas.

The Red Cross in neighboring Nicaragua said eight people died there in flooding from Mitch's rains. In a statement, the organization blamed the deaths on the government, saying it "hasn't adopted the safety measures necessary for people to cross rivers."

Mexican officials said a wave kicked up by the storm washed a Connecticut man off a catamaran south of Cancun on Monday, and he was presumed dead. He was identified as Robert Gates, 55, of Niantic.

Both highways out of La Ceiba, a city of 40,000 people, were cut Wednesday. To the east, the Saopin bridge sagged into the water as the swollen river weakened its pillars. To the west, the Pico Bonito bridge was entirely washed away.

Electricity was out in the entire town, and the sea moved a half-block inland in some places.

Waves crashed against the walls of seafront discos, and people waded through knee-deep water with furniture on their backs to flee flooded houses. In the Barrio Ingles shantytown, the ground was entirely covered in white foam from the surf, making it look like it had snowed.

Mario Hernandez was moving his chickens from his flooded shack to a friend's house on higher ground. One of the 10 chickens had already drowned, and he planned to take it to a shelter to see if he could cook the bird.

"My little son didn't let us sleep all night because he was so hungry," Hernandez said, gesturing toward 9-month-old Eugenio.

Mexico declared an alert throughout the Yucatan Peninsula, evacuating thousands of residents and tourists from vulnerable beach resorts and cutting back on pumping oil from wells in the Gulf of Mexico.

In the Mexican resort of Cancun, 375 miles north of Honduras, American and other tourists formed long lines at the airport trying to leave before the storm arrived.

But as Mitch inched south, Cancun mayor Rafael Lara Lara canceled the city's emergency alert.

Murder victim's mother supports suspected killer

■ Mother's boyfriend had been investigated by the state on abuse charges.

COUNCIL GROVE, Kan. — Jessica McAuley Post's little boy is dead, and her boyfriend — who recently completed parole for manslaughter — is charged with killing the child.

But Post says she still loves Scotty R. Adam, who was charged Monday with felony murder and felony child abuse in the beating death last week of 16-month-old Timothy Post.

"The whole world has called me a murderer too, because I still love him," Post said.

"All both of us ever wanted was a family."

Adam remains in the Morris County Jail on $250,000 bond.

"The kids called him Daddy. They loved him," Post said.

"I don't believe in my heart he did this on purpose."

Post, 21, said even though an earlier incident of suspected abuse of Timothy had prompted an investigation by the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, she didn't believe Adam was capable of hurting Timothy or her two daughters, Angela, 3, and Kelly, 2.

"They were here twice a week," Post said of the SRS caseworkers. "Scott said he needed help, and he was getting help. He said he would never kill a child."

Adam, who was not the children's biological father, referred to Post as his fiancée in court documents.

Morris County Attorney Matthew Oleen declined to comment on the SRS investigation or whether the agency had ever sought to remove the children from the home.

Stressing that the investigation was continuing, Oleen said: "It's a bad situation. It really is. And there is a lot to it."

By all accounts, Post had a troubled upbringing.

"She was raised like a coyote in the wild," said Phyllis Kerns, a cousin who works as a nurse at a Junction City teen clinic. "This is a child that the system forgot about."

"Nothing has ever been normal for her. Nothing, nothing, nothing. Nobody ever fixed her hair and sent her off to a dance. That never happened for her."

Adam, who has a preliminary hearing Nov. 4, was arrested in 1993 after he fatally stabbed a K-State freshman, Scott O. Sanders, 19.

A Morris County jury convicted him of second-degree murder and aggravated robbery.

However, the Kansas Supreme Court reversed his conviction due to legal technicalities.

A new trial was in Marion County, where a jury convicted him of a lesser charge of involuntary manslaughter.

Adam spent about three years in prison and a year on parole after the Sanders killing.

He had been off parole for about six months when Timothy Post was killed.

Post said she objected to media reports that have focused on Adam's past.

"I don't think this has anything to do with his previous conviction," she said, gently rubbing a tattoo on her forearm of an eagle breaking free of prison bars. She said she got the tattoo "in honor of Scott breaking free of his past."

"We're not here for the past. We're here for today and the future," she said. "Only God can judge him."

OUR VIEW

Fright Night misses enthusiasm, flavor of midnight practice

Few of the undergraduates reading this will remember a time when Fright Night, the basketball team's annual kickoff, actually took place on the first night the team was allowed to practice, at 12:01 a.m., amidst thousands of screaming students.

That was a time when Fright Night was actually called Midnight Madness. Times change, however. Midnight Madness is now trademarked by a guy named Bernard L. Morgan of Shawnee Mission, Kan. Morgan is the founder of Morgan Inc., a licensing firm that handles authorization of many sports-related phrases on clothing. He was making clothing with Midnight Madness printed on it more than 14 years ago, including everything from T-shirts to sweatshirts to shoes. At that time, one of his employees at the original Morgan Inc., Tom Jones, went to school with football coach Bill Snyder.

Like the phrase Midnight Madness, Morgan has a long history associated with basketball.

"I'm not that good," Morgan said. "My relatives all were." His brother-in-law is Charlie Black, the four-time All-American from the University of Kansas. Black's jersey hangs at one end of Allen Fieldhouse along with Wilt Chamberlain's. That's why his wife and he support the Jayhawks, although Morgan admits to being a K-State football fan.

When K-State used to have Midnight Madness, it was the first chance for students to see the basketball team play. People would cheer and scream and get really excited about the coming season. It had finesse. It had flair. It had a mystique that would penetrate your soul and make you realize that no matter who the guy was screaming next to you, he supported the same Wildcats you did, and that was all that mattered.

"There's something magic about the words 'midnight madness,'" Morgan said.

The demise of our own Midnight Madness was in October 1996, when the first day of practices fell on a Monday. Concerned about poor attendance, Department of Intercollegiate Athletics officials decided to schedule it earlier in the evening in the hopes of making the event more family-oriented.

That move was partly successful. More of the community was able to attend an earlier event, and more of the attendees were children who enjoyed the carnival-like atmosphere in the concourse. Associating the event with Halloween made it even more fun for children, as they had the opportunity to move from booth to booth to collect goodies.

The only problem then, to be frank, is that it is really hard to recreate the same obnoxious atmosphere of unadulterated K-State pride with so many normal Manhattanites milling about. Instead of being amongst screaming fans, you are around very small children and older people, which makes it tough to act like a proper college basketball devotee.

What we propose, then, is that the basketball teams should bring back Midnight Madness, (provided Morgan doesn't have a problem with us using that name) and use it for the students. When Halloween rolls around a few weeks after the basketball season starts, we can continue the Fright Night tradition for the community. That way, we get the madness and the fright, and if that doesn't intimidate our opponents, nothing will.

WHAT THE HALE'S GOING ON?

Answer to squirrel conspiracy lurks within K-State library

VIEWPOINT
KEN WELLS

The laws of space and time stop at the front door of Hale Library. Somehow, this building has managed to enclose a flux of reality, a unity between different eras and locales.

Maybe you think that's a bit of a reach. That doesn't change the fact that when I went thumbing through critical texts on Henry James, Henry James ran into me. He picked up my notebook, handed it to me with an apologetic look and scampered toward the elevators.

Keep your eyes open in Hale. Its more exotic visitors tend to elude the sight of the more jaded patron. But if you sneak in when you're not thoroughly worn by the tedium of classes and pop quizzes, look closely. You'll be able to pick out Zog, the Cro-Magnon grad student working on his thesis in club physics (excerpt: "Me swing, me hit you, you hurt!"). You might see Darloph Bilzo, formless shapeshifting freshling from the planet Durla, currently studying biology, ascertaining which parts of the student body are most edible.

You just thought it was a library. Under the right light, it makes the cantina scene in "Star Wars" look like the Kansas Board of Regents. And it holds the most intriguing of secrets.

I was kind of sleepy when I crowded onto the elevator last weekend. Sigmund Freud held the door open for me. I nearly stepped on someone's tail. I got out on the seventh floor. (Don't tell me there is no seventh floor to Hale Library; you haven't been looking close enough.) I maneuvered my way between the Tesla coils and the oscillation overthruster — apparently they've not cleaned the upstairs in awhile. There weren't many books, but a lot of cages that smelled of cedar chips and an entire wall of computer monitors. I tracked my eyes across the computers along the desk from the TRS-80, the Commodore 64, the 386 PC, a few Pentiums, past some I couldn't recognize to a black slab of metal with a few blinking lights on it.

"No Mac?" I asked aloud, if rhetorically.

"It's on fire," the man in the shadows answered. He had Gene Wilder hair and a Marilyn Manson complexion. His lab coat looked as if the sleeves were meant to be wrapped around the torso and buckled closed. "Do you like my laboratory?"

I had to be honest. "It's picturesque."

He took it with a nod and a salivating grin.

"Yes, well, it's the only proper place for my ..."

He choked on a laugh. "Research."

I looked at the monitors. They were all of very different perspectives, some were buried in the grass, some looking up or down the trunks of trees, at least one of each of the main sidewalks on campus. "And this is ...?"

"This is squirrel-vision," the good (if mad) doctor explained. "Squirrel, derived from the Greek 'skia' for 'shadow' and 'oura' for 'tail.' 'Shadowtail.' Beautiful, isn't it? The squirrels running amok and lurking in the shadows of this campus are my genetic constructs. Their vision is transmitted here, to the library, to properly monitor the events on this campus." He smiled and stroked the back of his chair. "Welcome to the nerve center of campus."

"Have you seen 'Sliver'?" I asked. I really should think before talking sometimes.

"Twelve times."

I nodded. "So you built a lab to just monitor campus ...?"

He sighed. "Well, I attempted once to create the master race, to fuse human DNA with that of a squirrel."

"And?"

He pointed to a broken cage. "It escaped. Perhaps I shouldn't have used a blood sample from Frank Lloyd Wright."

This explained why I'd seen a bunch of blueberry muffins stuffed in a mailbox at the newspaper. Someone was stocking up for winter.

The doctor choked on a cough. "But I should get back to work — I have office hours. Here," he beckoned, "watch the squirrels for me, will you? Don't let them stay inactive; an idle hand is the devil's workshop."

Maybe my hearing's going. I was wondering why it was relevant that an idle hand is the devil's pork chop. I didn't have much time myself. I had enough time to type eight characters, "OBEY KEN," before catching the down-elevator and running to class.

I haven't been able to find my way back to the seventh floor. The information desk, obviously, won't confess to its existence, and you can't blame them. You've probably met the good doctor. I think he has tenure, but the squirrels cower before me now, finally. And sometimes I think I see a bespectacled form leaping tree to tree, cheeks filled with bursting with hamburgers. Then with a chatter and flourish of a very short tail, he is gone.

Keep watching the trees, bushes and assorted shrubbery. The truth is in there.

Apathy looks to be big election winner this time around

VIEWPOINT
SAM SACKETT

Next Tuesday is election day. For many people, that means absolutely nothing. It means a day for people to do what they ordinarily do. For a few individuals, however, Nov. 3 means opportunity.

Having the privilege to vote is no new concept, but for most college students, it is a new responsibility. To be informed of the candidates and issues requires taking initiative.

Considering most K-State students are not registered to vote in Manhattan, the likelihood that they will know the candidates in their home districts is next to none. Returning home or requesting an absentee ballot seems, to most, a difficulty not worth the hassle, and so continues the apathy.

Apathy looks to win again on the first Tuesday in November. Much of the reason is found in the fact that few people care enough to take action. It is no doubt many are dissatisfied by a lot of things in our government. But babbling words about how unfair things are has not brought about reform or change. It always takes action on the part of someone. Talking about something is a beginning, but until words materialize into action, they remain only words.

A low voter turnout is only part of the problem. Individuals on a personal level have to be apathetic before we as a nation can be apathetic. If a low voter turnout was only that — not many people voting — there exists little threat. But when people don't vote because they don't feel like it — or worse yet, because they don't care — the threat to our free society becomes even greater.

A lack of voters often reveals a lack of care for the direction in which our government is heading, both on a local and national level. This is not to say that people who don't vote don't care.

I've known many caring 17-year-olds that have been frustrated because they couldn't vote.

Aside from not meeting the age requirement, does a person of action have the same care as one who merely thinks about it? This is difficult to decide, because I know many concerned people who believe they are unable to correct problems that surround them. The problems just seem too large. Yet these same people seem to be the ones that are most caring toward people in general.

A person takes to action based on the degree that they truly care. If a person can do little to correct a problem yet chooses to do what little good they can, that person has demonstrated care. This is unlike the person who takes the same action as the first person, but who has the means by which to make a greater difference. The healthy and competent person who does not vote, but who voices a concern, has shown less care than the 17-year-old who says the same things.

The question remains of those who do not even voice a concern: Why the apathetic attitude?

If a person is concerned about something, action must follow in some fashion or else the concern is nothing more than good intentions. Good intentions have one of the greatest threats to destroy us, because they remain just that — good intentions.

If we are to make change with our good thoughts and words, we must fertilize them with action.

To do otherwise is pure stolidity. For what proof is there that a person cares if even the most basic action, voting, is neglected? We are left with no choice but to conclude that the person did not mean what was said.

Opportunity does not always make itself available.

Next week is an exception. Let us make that opportunity worth the price that already has been paid, and let us remember that the very privilege of voting is a responsibility on which our freedom hinges.

READERS WRITE

Enrollment changes hurt KSU sophomore

Editor,

I just would like to know who came up with the new scheduling for enrollment.

I am just three credits shy of being a junior. By your system, I am one of the last sophomores to register. I have spent the last two years here at K-State waiting to take classes. Finally, last semester I was able to get into most of the classes that I should have taken my freshman and sophomore years.

Now I am going to have the same problems as before, and I probably will not be able to graduate on time, because people who need the classes less than me will be getting them while I have to wait, because my last name starts with an H. Forget that I probably have spent $2,000 more on tuition than the rest of these sophomores.

I just would like to say I hope whoever came up with this system realizes how bad it is and changes it before it happens again for next fall.

Columnist tackled tough issues head-on

Editor,

I was impressed to see the column "Confusion about Christianity needs to be cleared up" in the Oct. 15 Collegian. Most (school) papers, I noticed, are too afraid to talk about religion so openly. I think this was a needed column, because I think people, the government and media have made religion a problem instead of something you perhaps live your life by. This column should have cleared any misconceptions that people might have had.

Not all Christians are closed-minded, cold

Editor,

First and foremost, I want to thank Sam Sackett for furthering the stereotype that Christians are closed-minded. I realize this is his viewpoint, but I am also a Christian, so here is mine.

God is love, Sam. This halo you place above your head is slowly becoming a noose. People are not taking you seriously anymore. You are cutting off the possibility of spreading the peaceful and hopeful word of the Lord.

It would be wise for you to pull your head out (of your Bible) and read things from other perspectives from time to time. Without the understanding of another's point of view, it is difficult to be strong in your own faith. And, if need be, it often is difficult to defend one's beliefs.

Your article touched on proposed hate-crime legislation. Before you delve into the world of law, first evaluate the precedence you're setting for other Christians. You made a broad statement in last Thursday's column: "They already have equal rights." First of all, you must realize that freedom of religion also implies freedom from religion.

Please, let go of judgment, "lest ye be judged." Legal marriage, for instance, is a matter of civil law, a contract that involves legal obligations. Religious bodies such as the Quakers, Unity Church, Universalist-Unitarian, Buddhist, Dignity US and the Metropolitan Community Church, often provide ceremonial services that do not carry the weight of the law. These ceremonial marriages provide spiritual and social benefits but have little to no long-term effect on the couple's economics, the couple's ability to cope with a catastrophe or the way a couple is viewed by society.

No matter how much love exists in a same-sex relationship, nor how deep the commitments, as long as same-sex couples are unable to marry, they will be seen as legal strangers under the law. By denying homosexuals the right to marry, the government denies a whole list of benefits: family-insurance coverage, tax breaks, special rates on joint credit and banking accounts, the ability to visit an ailing partner in the intensive-care ward or emergency room, child custody and inheritance, and immigration privileges — the kinds of rights many take for granted.

You said liberals are hypocritical, but what makes you think they are all Christian? The vigil held in remembrance of Matthew Shepard was not so much to remember this man that the majority of us did not know. Rather, it was a time that the community could come together to show support for equality.

Yes, Sam, hate does exist and is often perpetuated by "Christians." Had you attended the vigil Monday night, not only would you have seen gays men, lesbians and bisexuals, you may have seen an angel or two. They are among us, and hopefully, they and others will help us realize that hate is a mind-set that shouldn't be had by anyone. Not even by Christians.

secondary education

Sackett in fortunate position of privilege

Editor,

In response to the piece of propaganda Sam Sackett wrote last Thursday, I would like to bring up an issue he has probably never thought of — his position of privilege. I have been following his columns and think the Collegian is being used as a tool to promote the radical Christian right's agenda to discredit multiculturalism and diversity. Sackett has been steadily following its agenda in his columns.

Sackett, I assure you are a good Kansas farm boy, just like myself, who has done farm chores and played sports, gone to church every Sunday and believed in the "American Dream." You are a privileged individual, just as I was, enjoying the benefits of being white and belonging to "Middle America."

However, you also enjoy the privilege of being a heterosexual in a heterosexual world and have never had to endure the demeaning jokes I had to endure, nor deal with the threats and acts of physical violence. In short, you, like almost every heterosexual, never has to think about, face, confront, engage in or cope with anything that follows.

For example, you can be employed as a teacher in preschool through high school without fear of being fired any day because you are assumed to corrupt children. You can date the person of your desire in your teenage years. You can live with your partner and do so openly, in front of everyone, in any place. You receive social acceptance from neighbors, colleagues and friends.

You can show affection for the person you love wherever and whenever you choose without threat or punishment. By marrying, you get rights and privileges such as recognition and support from the state for your relationship with tax breaks and employment benefits. You can have "joint policies" for health, auto and homeowners' insurance at reduced rates. You can raise children without threats of state intervention, without the children worrying which of their friends might reject them because of their parents' sexuality and culture. You do not have to hide and lie about social activities with coworkers.

These are just a few of the rights you have that I do not. So who has "special rights?"

I believe firmly that people are basically good and, when given the opportunity, do good unto others. I would like to invite Sackett to dinner at my home in Manhattan. At this dinner, there will be lesbian and gay and bisexual people, but there also will be people who represent the Hispanic, African-American and Asian-American communities. There will be folks from the immigrant communities around you. There will be ministers from mainline churches, mothers, fathers and children.

Our purpose for coming together is to give you an opportunity to see that the Kansas family is more than the limited vision you speak about in your columns. There will be Christians, Jews, Muslims, Buddhists and nonbelievers. Our purpose will be to achieve what Gandhi said: "Real peace will only come about when we know the other and understand that he is the same as me."

So Sackett, will you accept?

Patterson, players discuss upcoming women's season

BY JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Deb Patterson had to deal with adversity in her first two years as the K-State women's basketball coach. This season is no different.

Patterson, who now has the unenviable task of patching up a gaping hole left at the point guard position by two injuries, talked about the challenge at the Big 12 Conference women's basketball Media Day yesterday in Kansas City, Mo.

Sophomore Dee DeShay, whom Patterson had hoped would fill the position this year, will sit out the entire 1998-99 season, recuperating from a torn anterior cruciate ligament.

Sophomore Kim Woodlee, who carried most of K-State's point guard duties as a freshman, also has been sidelined with knee surgery in the off-season but should return in two to three weeks.

While Patterson waits for Woodlee's return, freshman Essence Perry has been asked to step in as K-State's general on the court. Perry, a 5-foot-6-inch Lawton, Okla., native, averaged 19.6 points per game her senior year of high school, along with 6.4 rebounds and 6.8 assists per contest.

"She is a penetrator and has a real strong right and left hand," Patterson said. "She just has a lot of quickness, and I think she will be one of the best defensive guards in the league, even as a freshman."

"Essence is the first player we've had in our program with what I would call sound handles, both right and left hands. Now we're not limited as to who has to bring the ball up the court, and it just expands so many different aspects of our game."

But junior-transfer center Olga Firsova was what Patterson wanted to talk about most. Firsova is a transfer from Weatherford Junior College in Texas, where she averaged 14.5 points a game as a sophomore, along with 13.5 rebounds and 7.3 blocks per game. Standing at 6 feet 6 inches, she is the tallest player in school history and the third-tallest player in the Big 12 this season.

Firsova will play in K-State's five spot, moving Angie Finkes, K-State's leading scorer from last season, to the four spot. Firsova's presence will bring balance to K-State's front line, Patterson said.

"Olga has more of a flowing aspect to her game rather than a power aspect to her game," Patterson said. "It's neat to see that kind of dimension out on the floor, especially from a player in the five spot. Then when you combine that with an Angie Finkes, who is a power player, and a Nicky Ramage, who is a great athlete, it really helps the versatility of your front court."

Finkes said she concurred with Patterson's views.

"Olga is going to be awesome not only for me, but for our program," Finkes said. "She brings so many different aspects to our team."

"Everyone on our team is totally into the power style of basketball. She brings in these moves and we're like, 'Man, where did you get that stuff?' and 'Man, how did you do that?' She just brings in a lot of new and different things that everybody can learn from."

Cat basketball fans ready for Fright Night

■ Doors open at 6 p.m. for trick-or-treating, followed by basketball scrimmages.

BY NICK BRATKOVIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State basketball fans, Fright Night III is here. The event, which is being called "A hoopin' howlin' purple prowlin' good time" by organizers this year, provides the fans with the opportunity to see the 1998-99 men's and women's basketball teams.

The fans will have a chance to witness scrimmages, one by the men's team, which returns six seniors, and another by the women's team, which returns almost the entire team from last year.

Doors open at 6 p.m. to the public. The first 750 fans will receive a commemorative Fright Night T-shirt.

Organizers said the event is comparable to late night season-opening practices at other universities. However, Cindy Fox, assistant director for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, said she believed the Fright Night event is a better fit for K-State fans.

"We tailored our event to the community and the students," Fox said. "Our event gives the community one more day to trick-or-treat."

Trick-or-treating will take place in the Bramlage Coliseum concourse from 6 to 7 p.m. Greek houses, residence halls and K-State basketball players will take part in the trick-or-treating activities. Fox said the players enjoy the night.

"The student athletes love it and see it as a way to get personal with the fans," Fox said. "They have fun with the skits and create themselves and then play a little basketball."

The show begins at 7 p.m. Both the men's and women's teams will practice and perform skits.

The teams will start with warm-ups and then scrimmage.

Willie the Wildcat and a host of other mascots will play at halftime. Other activities planned are an airplane toss and a greek house shoot-out.

Fox said a few other surprises are planned for the night, but she declined to mention what they were.

Mike O'Brien, associate director of development for the athletic department, said each of K-State's basketball teams have high expectations entering the season.

"There is a great deal of excitement surrounding both basketball teams," O'Brien said.

The event, which was organized to give fans a sneak peek at the two teams' practices, also will be helping a local charity. Event organizers are asking each person in attendance to bring one non-perishable food item. They will be donated to the Flint Hills Breadbasket, a local food collection agency.

HIT THE ROAD, CATS

In a tradition as old as the rivalry itself, K-Staters prepare for the hike down I-70 to Lawrence's Memorial Stadium

As long as KU and K-State have battled on the gridiron, students have traveled to cheer on their teams.

This year will be no exception, as the No. 3-ranked K-State Wildcats charge into Lawrence for the annual Sunflower Showdown. Hundreds of Wildcat faithful will travel down Interstate 70 to yell for purple pride.

"The KU/K-State game is always a good game. It's awesome," Eric Payne, sophomore in information systems said. "It's great that we're all going down there to cheer on the Wildcats."

"After the game, the players would always thank us for supporting them at an away game," he said.

For the third straight year, Lucky BrewGrille will sponsor a bus ride to the game. A $65 fee will cover bus transportation, the ticket and food and beverages for tailgating.

"In years past, we found a bar and set up to tailgate there before and after the game," Jason Haremza, Lucky BrewGrille employee, said.

Band member Jennifer Claybrook, freshman in elementary education, said she hoped K-State would rule the crowd in Lawrence.

"The band will play our in-state rivals in a battle of the bands," she said. "I'm real excited about being loud and taking over the stadium. We want it to be K-State instead of KU."

The band will travel to Kansas City, Mo., afterward to play at halftime during the Kansas City Chiefs game Sunday.

Several fraternities also will take the road trip to Lawrence for the game.

"I'll probably ride with a bunch of guys, tailgate, and then have an after-hours party with the Sigma Chi at KU after the game," Payne said.

Besides watching the game, the road trip to Lawrence can spur other fun activities.

"Lawrence is an awesome college town," Matt Waldo, freshman in engineering, said. "There is always something there to distract you from your studies. You got the Granada to dance at, you can cruise Massachusetts Street until your car runs out of gas and you can eat as much Mexican food as you want at Border Bandidos," he said.

Overall, Payne said the trip to Lawrence will be fun.

"Lawrence has all sorts of bars, and all the fraternities have real nice parties," he said.

"I might see some of my friends as well."

K-State fans also can cheer on the volleyball team as they take on the Jayhawks on Friday in Lawrence.

BY FRANK FLATON

An open, not-so-nice, trash-talking letter to Kansas Jayhawk quarterback Zac Wegner

Dear Zac,

As Lawrence rides high in a state of euphoria this week after the biggest victory in the history of Kansas football, sources tell me that you, on the other hand, have been sick to your stomach since snapping out of that concussion you suffered on your first drive against Colorado.

That quiver in your midsection began Sunday, when you realized why your coaching staff was in a tizzy, pale like ghosts and had the shakes so bad they could hardly stand. After reviewing K-State's seven R-rated game films of the season, it has become clear: This is going to be the scariest Halloween the Jayhawks have seen.

Scary because the Wildcats bring the nation's No. 1 scoring defense into the game, allowing only 8.1 points a game. Scary, because when the defense is on the sideline, the most potent part of the K-State attack is on the field in Michael Bishop and Frank Murphy.

And the Jayhawks can't even catch a break during the few snaps of a football game when K-State's special teams are on the field. No, Martin Gramatica and David Allen will not allow the Hawks to catch their breath.

Gramatica is, far and away, the nation's most thrilling field-goal kicker, already owning a 65-yarder. Allen, well, he's the nation's top punt-returner with three returns for touchdowns in K-State's first three games, averaging 22.5 yards a return.

But Zac, what's on your mind most this week is the K-State defensive line, which outmatches your blockers in both speed and smarts. Nightmares of a Darren Howard sandwich or a Joe Bob Clements shotgun blast have given you many flashbacks of the beatings you suffered against Colorado, except the flashbacks only look kinder than the beating that could be dealt to you Saturday.

Zac, you realize that you won't be able to get away with those errant passes you are so accustomed to throwing. There isn't a place where you can dump the ball off when facing pressure from K-State, as 10 Wildcats have interceptions this season.

Interceptions seem to be a chronic problem for you, with seven on the season, especially in big-game situations. Two have hurt your team's chances of winning a game come to mind.

The first was that ill-advised throw in the fourth quarter against Missouri. Sure, there was a little interference on the play but surrounding your receiver were three Tigers, all licking their chops for a game-breaker.

The referee was so dumbfounded you were stupid enough to throw the pass, he decided he couldn't penalize the defense for what was really your mistake.

Or what about your first play from scrimmage against Texas A&M, when you threw that interception to Dat Nguyen and there wasn't a receiver within 20 yards? I guess one could interpret that play two ways: 1) You're color blind, but I've heard they've come up with glasses that can help correct that problem. 2) It just proves you're capable of making mistakes anytime in a game, even during the first play when you should be at the top of your focus.

The only advice I can offer you is to take advantage of your game against the Wildcats when you're on the sideline. Watch a real quarterback and notice how, even when he's at the bottom of his game, he doesn't make many mistakes. If I'm losing you, just watch No. 7 perform.

I warn you to be careful when you're watching K-State's No. 1-in-the-nation scoring offense.

Don't catch yourself fantasizing about what it must be like to orchestrate an offense with so many weapons that even Saddam Hussein is jealous when comparing arsenals.

Try not to dream of having a guy like Murphy, who is so fast out of the backfield that he'll leave the turf at Memorial Stadium on fire. At the same time, he can line up as a receiver, causing defenses to take antacids intravenously when trying to figure out a scheme that fits the situation when he's in the game.

Oh, and there's more than Murphy. Watch Aaron Lockett as he blazes by your cornerbacks and gets so deep into your secondary that he hits pay dirt every time. The list goes on, as I'm sure your defense has whimpered many times this week in preparation.

No, Zac, it's pretty evident that the 30-or-so Jayhawk fans in attendance (including band members and cheerleaders) will have to wait until basketball season for a legitimate shot at beating the Wildcats.

Even then, however, things look kind of sketchy.

I've heard you still haven't figured out what to be for Halloween.

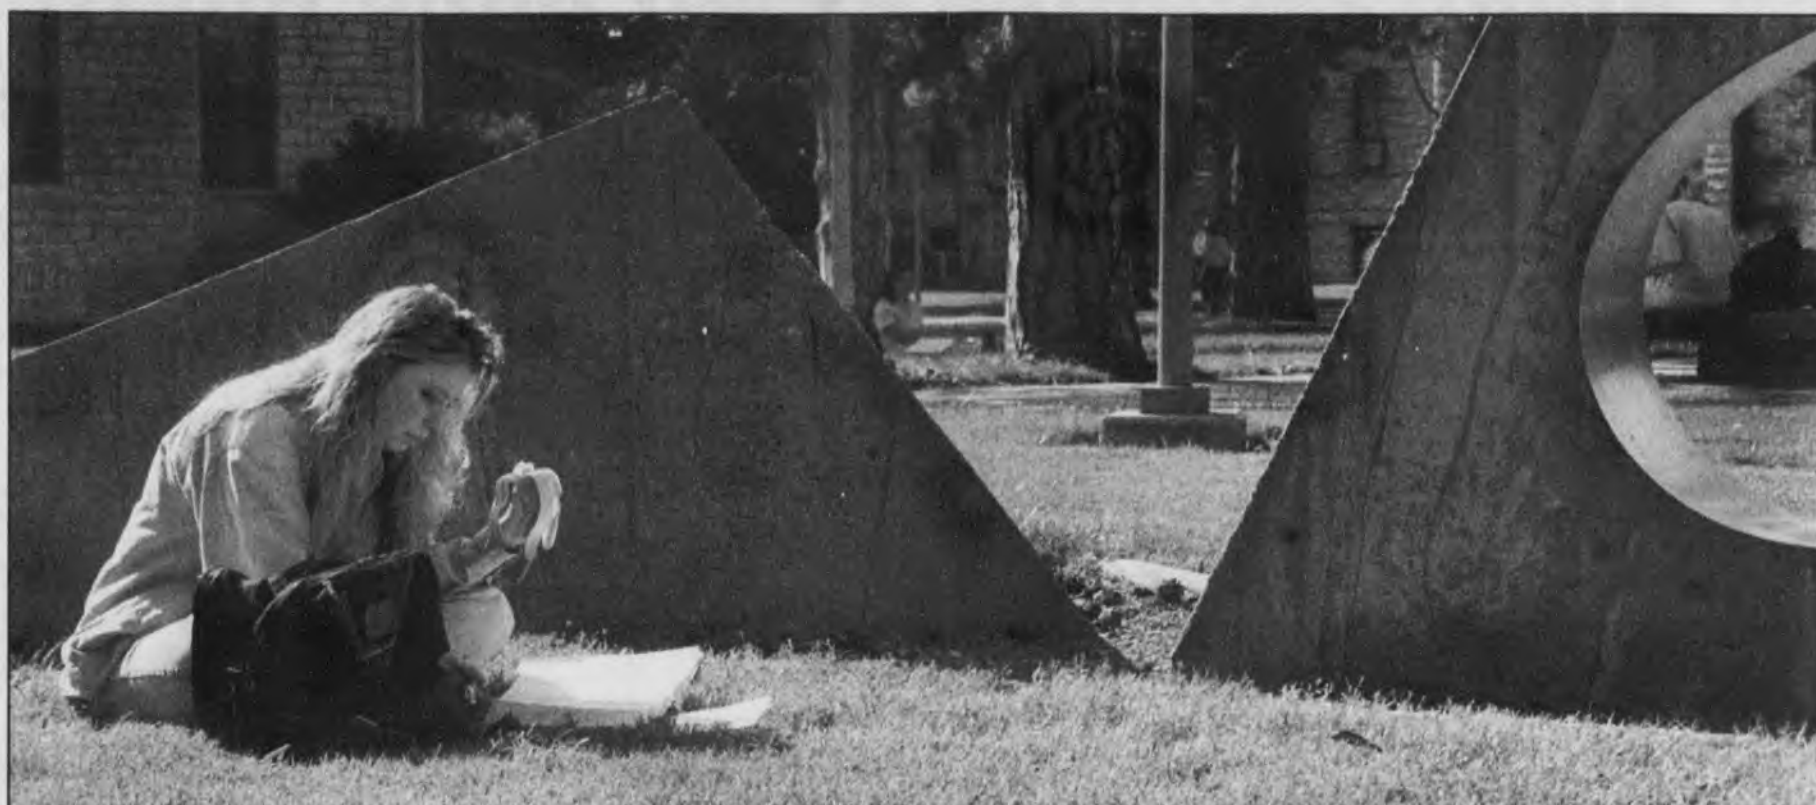

Maybe you just should do what seems to come naturally. Be an athlete who is capable of doing only one thing — playing quarterback for the University of Kansas.

Grbac apologizes for comments made after loss

By DOUG TUCKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Quarterback Elvis Grbac apologized to the Kansas City Chiefs on Wednesday for criticizing teammates by name and promised, "This will never happen again."

"I think I disappointed the entire organization and probably the community," Grbac said following the Chiefs' first practice since their 20-13 loss to the Steelers on Monday night. "I feel sorry for that."

An angry and frustrated Grbac, 0-2 after coming back from a shoulder injury, had singled out tight end Tony Gonzalez and running backs Tony Richardson and Donnell Bennett in his post-game comments.

"The guys who have to make plays on this team have to start realizing they've got to make plays," he had said in part. "The Tony Gonzalezes, the Tony Richardsons, Donnell Bennett. It's got to be a combination of guys making plays."

Grbac, who threw two interceptions and lost a fumble in the game, had also faulted himself. But he came under intense news media and fan criticism on Tuesday.

"I didn't sleep at all last night. It was eating at me," he said. "I was in bed after watching the news about 12 o'clock and I wanted to start calling the guys at home."

He said he spoke individually with the players he named and then had a clear-the-air meeting with the entire team.

"It was something Elvis had to discuss with people," said center Tim Grunhard. "But this team has a lot of maturity and it's the job of the leaders on this team to make sure it doesn't cause any strife, and I don't think it will."

NBA lockout forces commissioner to cancel all November games

By CHRIS SHERIDAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — David Stern cut two more weeks off the NBA schedule, debated the finer points of the lockout with Michael Jordan and then met with the players to see if the sides could compromise on the "guts" of a new deal.

"I feel neither optimism nor pessimism. I just think that we've got to talk," the NBA commissioner said. "We may have the skeleton of a deal, but in terms of a hard negotiation on the guts of this deal, I would say we're no place yet."

The cancellations, which wiped out the rest of the November schedule, came after a meeting of the league's Board of Governors at which some owners asked when the "drop dead" date would be for losing the entire regular season.

Stern said he did not want to set a deadline.

"One, we want to be ready to be imaginative," he said. "Two, we don't want to make threats; we want to make a deal."

With that, he and the owners' negotiating committee walked out of their news conference, took an elevator three flights up and went into a conference room where about 100 players had been meeting.

According to several sources who were in the room and spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, Jordan, Washington Wizards owners Abe Pollin and Stern had one of the most heated exchanges after Jordan asked why increases in franchise values were not being figured into profitability calculations.

After that 90-minute question-and-answer meeting, the sides were to resume formal negotiations at 5 p.m. EST.

Assistance helps resident make ends meet

■ Service mandates she find steady employment.

By NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Karen Hughes moved from Florida in 1996 to leave an abusive husband and live with her daughter in Ogden, Kan., she found herself isolated, financially strapped and emotionally drained.

Two months after Hughes made the move, her situation got worse. Her belongings were stolen, and shortly after, her daughter moved to Washington, D.C.

Hughes said she felt that she had hit a new low.

"It was rough," she said. "I didn't know anybody in this town and couldn't find a good job."

Hughes went to the Social Rehabilitation Services office in Manhattan. It approved her to receive temporary cash assistance. One of the stipulations was that she find a job, so Hughes began working as a playground supervisor in Ogden.

Hughes was making money, but said it wasn't enough to pay the bills or break from the welfare roll.

"I didn't want to be on welfare assistance, but I'm glad it was there," Hughes said. "It was a depressing time for me, especially because I knew that all I really needed was to take a class to brush up on some of my computer skills."

Hughes got her chance.

She was attending a local crisis center for abused women when one of the employees told her about New Directions, a local job-service program.

She called New Directions and talked to the director, Cynthia Shanley. Shanley is the only full-time employee on a staff with two volunteers and one work-study student, and a woman Hughes gives credit to for helping put her life on track.

"Cynthia helps you. Anything that will prepare you for a job, she will do without question," Hughes said.

Shanley and New Directions enrolled Hughes in a class at Manhattan Area Technical College so she could improve her computer skills. Though she worked for Trans World Airlines for 13 years and knew some basics, it had been six years since she left her job at the airline to follow her husband.

New Directions paid Hughes' tuition, bought her textbooks, paid for child care and provided gas money for traveling to and from school.

Hughes, who had moved from Ogden to Manhattan and was working at a local hotel during the day, went to class at night. Before long, the class began to pay off.

In December 1997, she quit the hotel job and began working as a receptionist at a local doctor's office.

The job allowed Hughes to end her stint on welfare.

"Two years ago, I wouldn't have talked about any of this because I didn't have any confidence in myself," Hughes said. "Now, the job I have, I love it."

Shanley said most of her clients — about 90 percent — are single women, and many of them are referred to New Directions by SRS. She is able to help her clients through a federal grant from the state Board of Education. Shanley isn't guaranteed the grant every year, though, and must reapply for it and compete with other organizations for the funds.

"There really aren't enough dollars to go around," Shanley said. "I help about 200 clients a year, which doesn't sound like a lot unless you consider the work involved in helping just one person."

On the average, Shanley said, she spends a minimum of 10 hours helping each client. Those hours don't include the actual job training at an outside source.

Instead, Shanley said she helps people write résumés, gives tips on how to interview and dress for a job and, primarily, as in Hughes' case, finds and pays for the job training people need to achieve their goals.

The work load is increasing, she said, and it has been especially noticeable the last six months.

"In the last six months, I've seen a dramatic increase in the number of people who want help," she said. "We've really had to be on our toes."

Shanley said she couldn't attribute the increase to one specific reason, but said she is worried that state and federal governments are too concerned with getting people off of cash assistance quickly.

That push to get people off the assistance roles is not necessarily the same goal that New Directions uses to evaluate its success.

"The success of New Directions is measured on an individual basis, and the success of policy makers is based on how many and how quickly people stop receiving welfare payments," she said. "I really don't feel like, at the federal level, they are in touch with what is going on in the front lines."

Shanley said on the local level, people are doing the best they can.

"We have a cordial relationship with the Manhattan SRS office," Shanley said. "Everybody is doing the two-step shuffle now, and the learning curve is pretty big. Fortunately, I really believe Manhattan is a pro-active community."

Scientists say global warming leads list of environmental concerns

By JOSEPH B. VERRENGIA
THE ASSOCIATE PRESS

NEW YORK — On the eve of global warming negotiations, scientists from several Western nations are clamoring for a crash program to develop clean energy that would rival the Manhattan Project and the Apollo mission to the moon.

Writing in Thursday's issue of the journal Nature, scientists from North America and Europe predicted that global warming soon will become the environmental equivalent of the Cold War as the world's increasing reliance on fossil fuels releases more carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping pollutants into the atmosphere.

The 11 scientists urged negotiators at environmental talks scheduled to begin Nov. 2 in Buenos Aires, Argentina, to push for a mobilization of scientific resources to develop alternative forms of energy, such as solar, wind and nuclear power.

"Developing and commercializing carbon-free power technologies by the mid-21st century could require efforts, perhaps international, pursued with the urgency of the Manhattan Project or the Apollo space program," said Martin Hoffert, a physicist at New York University.

Only 20 percent or less of today's energy use comes from carbon-free sources.

The Nature paper is unusual because it contains broad policy recommendations. Normally, the journal publishes straightforward scientific studies.

Last year, governments meeting in Kyoto, Japan, agreed to emission reductions by the United States, Japan, the 15-nation European Union and 21 other industrial nations. The nations are to cut their output of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases to 5-percent below their 1990 levels by 2012.

This year, negotiators for 166 nations are meeting to determine how each country will achieve the reductions.

To some, rising annual average temperatures in the 1990s amount to early proof that global warming has arrived and that the current treaty won't protect nations from climatic upheaval during the 21st century.

Some scientists said global warming was inevitable and no amount of effort — not even a crash program — would prevent it.

"We will experience a substantial amount of further climate change even if we make huge cuts in emissions," said Martin Parry of University College in London.

Others said there were many ways of reducing global warming without mobilizing scientists worldwide.

Energy conservation and efficiency, such as greater use of cleaner-burning natural gas and nuclear power, might be a cheaper solution, they said. Smokestack and tailpipe controls, as well as planting trees, can reduce pollution, too.

'Bedroom FARCE'

Comedy celebrates trials of newlyweds

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Manhattan Arts Center's season opener, "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," welcomed community theater fans back with one of Neil Simon's most popular productions.

The center keeps the ball rolling with "Bedroom Farce," a free-spirited comedy by Alan Ayckbourn and directed by Kay Deever, which opens at 8 p.m. Friday.

At the center of the play, four couples struggle to celebrate an anniversary and a housewarming, all while trying to ignore some fairly important marital problems.

Unfortunately, Trevor and Susannah, the couple under pressure, are completely oblivious to the fact that their bickering is causing problems among their friends.

"They're so self-involved, they have no idea that they are affecting the other couples," said Andi Washburn, graduate student in secondary education. Washburn, a Manhattan community theater veteran, plays Kate, a newlywed trying to start her new life as a wife.

"There is a lot of tension that has built up to ruin the party," said Ben Hanne, freshman in psychology and the production's stage manager.

However, being a comedy, the eight actors are sure to find marital bliss before the final curtain.

"I've seen this played over and over for a month, and I'm still not sick of it," Hanne said.

"This is just a hilarious show."

While the Gosh Performance Hall at the arts center is well equipped, "Farce" set designers had initial problems with construction. While most playwrights include suggestions for stage setting, Gosh's dimensions would not allow for certain setups. Audience members should expect new and interesting design ideas for this show.

"Bedroom Farce" runs October 30 and 31, November 1 and November 5-8. Thursday, Friday and Saturday shows begin at 8 p.m., while Sunday matinee shows start at 2 p.m.

Tickets are $9 for adults and seniors and $4 for children under 12. Student tickets are normally $7, but they may be purchased for $5 for Thursday and Sunday performances.

Prominent literary talents to read from works involving man, nature

By KELLY LYNN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The second annual Flint Hills Literary Festival, "Writing from the Land," will celebrate the genre of nature writing on Friday and Saturday.

"We intend 'Writing from the Land' to include fiction and poetry that examines or explores the relationship between people and the natural environment," said Elizabeth Dodd, associate professor of English and director of the Creative Writing Program.

Dodd said nature writing is typically nonfiction about the natural world and includes writers such as Henry David Thoreau and John Muir.

"Nature writing is often engaged in an investigation into place and the environment or the organization of a specific place," she said.

All events will take place in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art auditorium and are free and open to the public.

Prominent writers this year include Barry Lopez, Tom Averill and Pattiann Rogers, who will speak about their recent publications.

About 100 people attended the first festival last year, and more are expected to attend this year, Dodd said.

She said this was a great opportunity for K-State's Department of English.

"We're hoping this will become a real showcase event for the English department and an opportunity to celebrate the literary arts," Dodd said.

Events will begin at 7:30 p.m. on Friday with a reading by nonfiction and fiction writer Lopez.

"Barry Lopez has been an important voice for two decades in both fiction and nonfiction about people in the natural world," Dodd said.

Lopez will come to K-State from Oregon to discuss his nature writing as seen in his most recent book, "About This Life: Journeys on the Threshold of Memory."

"All of Lopez's works are very much based on the world around him and a sense of place," said Kathrine Schlageck, education and public programs coordinator of the Beach art museum.

Other works by Lopez include "Arctic Dreams: Imagination and Desire in a Northern Landscape" and "Of Wolves and Men."

Nonfiction writer Averill will read from and discuss his own work, including his latest book, "What Kansas Means to Me," Saturday morning. Averill teaches at Washburn University and has a radio commentary from Lawrence on KANU-FM 91.5.

"His work is specifically about Kansas," Schlageck said.

Other works by Averill include "Passes at the Moon: Stories from Kansas" and "Seeing Mona Naked."

Rogers will read poetry and discuss her most recent work, "Eating Bread and Honey." Rogers is a faculty member at Vermont College and has traveled nationwide to speak about her work.

"She writes about creation, the mystery and majesty of space, the beauty in science and the relationship between what people choose to call sacred and what they investigate through the scientific method," Dodd said.

Other works by Rogers include "Firekeeper: New and Selected Poems" and "Legendary Performance."

Lopez, Averill and Rogers will be available for signing books from 1:15 p.m. to 1:45 p.m. Saturday. Copies of their most recent publications can be purchased at the Museum Shop during the signing or at the K-State Student Union.

Saturday afternoon, eight visiting speakers each will give 10-15 minute presentations on writers such as Linda Hogan, Meridel Le Seuer and Steven Hind. Two speakers also will address the works of Lopez and Averill.

Events will conclude with a reception that is open to the public at the home of Mary Heller, professor of elementary education, and Steve Heller, professor of English, at 311 N. 14th St.

The festival is sponsored by the English department's Creative Writing Program and the Fine Arts Council.

Eels' unique sound reflects raw emotion in new album

By SARAH FLORIE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Just when it seemed this band had disappeared off the face of the planet, the Eels finally came out with an answer to its 1996 album "Beautiful Freak" by releasing its new compact disc "Electro-Shock Blues."

This new compilation provides a real insight on the tragic life of the band's lead singer and founder, Mark Oliver Everett, who prefers to be called just "E." It has been said that E is possibly the most troubled singer/songwriter since Kurt Cobain.

By listening to this new album, you definitely get a sense of a person who's really trying to deal with the trials and tribulations of personal tragedy.

Throughout this CD, certain songs such as "Going to Your Funeral Part I" present the dark, dismal and melancholy side of the band. Songs like this are answered by tunes like "Going to Your Funeral Part II," which responds to the darkness with a more mellow, yet uplifting message.

Although there are many new sides to the Eels in this album, you still get a lingering of vintage Eels in songs like "Last Stop: This Town," which proves to be the Eels' classic mix of indie-rock and pop with a driving baseline.

At first, it seemed almost monotonous, but after listening to it three or four times, it really grows on you. I began to understand their musical genius and was able to pick out some of the more interesting qualities.

No matter what song you are listening to on this album, though, you've got to come to the conclusion that the Eels make beautiful music. The band's truly combination of instruments includes not only the basic guitars and drums, but violins, saxophones, flutes and even an abundance of xylophone-sounding bells.

Combine the beautiful score with E's almost aromatherapeutic voice and you've got "Electro-Shock Blues."

$70 billion budget surplus could quickly evaporate

By DAVE SKIDMORE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Even as President Clinton triumphantly confirmed the first budget surplus in 29 years on Wednesday, economists began warning the ever-better news will fade along with the economy and the stock market.

"Today we learn, after decades of deficit, that this past year we had a surplus of exactly $70 billion," Clinton said at the White House.

It's the first since 1969 and represents a remarkable turnaround from the record $290 billion deficit in 1992 and even from 1997's $22 billion in red ink.

Both the Clinton administration and Congress began the year predicting a small deficit. And just three years ago, the Democratic president and the Republican-majority Congress shut down the government in a bitter dispute over whether balancing the budget by 2002 represented too abrupt a shift.

Exceeding that goal four years early proved surprisingly easy — mostly because a booming stock market flooded the government with a 12-percent increase in income-tax receipts.

And strong job growth increased payroll-tax revenue and reduced the government's spending on welfare and unemployment benefits.

But now, world financial turmoil is expected to cut in half the rate of U.S. economic growth to a lackluster 2 percent most of this year and next. And the stock market, after plunging from mid-summer highs, doesn't appear likely to return to double-digit percentage gains anytime soon.

It's not that the budget will lapse into deficit anytime soon, most economists believe. But they caution that the trend will probably be down. Many predict next year's surplus will be smaller than this year's — in the range of $50 billion to $60 billion.

"I don't see how you can avoid it. A slowing economy just naturally causes revenue to decline," said economist Tim O'Neill of Harris Bank in Chicago.

That compares to the $80 billion surplus for next year — and black ink far into the future — that congressional budget analysts projected this summer.

Some are even more pessimistic. Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa., says the principal factors that led to the surplus are gone or going.

Not only have economic and market growth slowed, but a period of lower health-care inflation — which held down Medicare spending — appears to be ending. And military spending, which edged lower this year on top of post-Cold War declines, probably will start increasing.

"The surplus is going to vanish almost as quickly as it appeared," Zandi said. "We'll probably run surpluses in 1999 and 2000, but after that, we're going to return to the red ink."

In a sign of things to come, perhaps, the Treasury Department said this week that it will need to borrow $30 billion during the October-December quarter, roughly double its projection of two months ago.

Assistant Secretary Gary Gensler blamed part of that on a drop in corporate-tax receipts. Most, however, came from a shift in interest rates, which caused state and local governments to buy fewer privately-placed federal securities, and a change in the timing of excise-tax collections, he said.

But even economists optimistic about the short-term warn that policy-makers shouldn't feel a false sense of complacency about the long term.

In a $520 billion election-year spending package adopted this month, Clinton insisted that Congress spend $21 billion of the surplus on U.S. peacekeepers in Bosnia, aid to farmers and other programs. With a veto threat, he blocked a Republican plan to cut taxes by $700 billion over the next decade, saying the surplus should be for Social Security.

A $99-billion surplus in the Social Security trust fund this year masked the fact that the rest of the budget actually remained in deficit by $29 billion, said economist Allen Sinai of Primark Decision Economics in Boston.

Families of victims concerned about inmates' Internet sites

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LENEXA, Kan. — Richard Grissom Jr. skipped a few details in his Web-site pleas for a pen pal, and the families of the women he murdered fear it will lead to a new set of victims.

"The monster Grissom forgot to mention a few of his other hobbies: bludgeoning old ladies with railroad spikes and killing and torturing innocent young women," Tim Butler wrote in a letter to Web-site operators who have posted Grissom's pages.

Butler's sister, Joan Butler, was one of three Lenexa women Grissom was convicted of killing in the summer of 1989.

While inmates don't have access to computers in Kansas prisons, prison officials can't stop them from finding others to set up Web sites for them.

Grissom's two Internet sites are run by women in Pennsylvania and Cameron, Mo., who also feature hundreds of other prison inmates on Web sites. Butler has written letters to both asking them to shut them down.

Most of the pages don't say why the men are in prison. For Grissom, there is no mention of Joan Butler nor the elderly Leavenworth County woman Grissom was convicted of killing in the 1970s when he was a teen.

Instead, Grissom's Web page features a smiling photograph, biographical information and a statement that he likes letters "filled with humor, tenderness and heated passion."

"We don't think he should have any contact with the outside world," said Bobby Brown, whose daughter, Theresa Brown, was among Grissom's victims.

Truck loses tax-exempt status

Religious purpose doesn't include picketing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Shawnee County District judge has ruled that the pickup truck Westboro Baptist Church members use to haul their signs between picket sites isn't tax exempt.

But the church has reapplied to the county appraiser to get tax exemption for the vehicle, church spokeswoman Margie Jean Phelps said Tuesday.

The Rev. Fred W. Phelps Sr., pastor of Westboro Baptist Church, often drives the blue 1995 Ford F-150 pickup when taking picket signs to various sites.

In a written opinion, Judge Marla Luckert said she "agrees with the ultimate conclusion reached by the Kansas Board of Tax Appeals: Westboro had the burden of proof and did not meet the burden of proving that the truck was utilized exclusively for a religious purpose."

During testimony by church member Chris Davis and in court filings, the religious basis for some signs is explained, such as speaking out about the perceived misconduct of leaders, including political figures. BOTA had contended those signs had no religious purpose.

The church didn't explain other signs, Luckert wrote.

In opposing the tax exemption, the county appraiser presented 14 photographs of specific signs, which the appraiser said didn't have religious messages.

"For example, one of the signs which appears in the pictures reads: 'Bare Butt Jan,'" Luckert wrote. The sign is a reference to a counter picketer who defiantly mooned Westboro Baptist picketers several years ago.

"Despite the opportunity, Westboro never explained who Jan was, the meaning of the sign or its religious connotation," Luckert wrote.

Lung-transplant recipient to run New York City Marathon

By RAVI NESSMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Ketil Moe is not sure he'll make it to the finish line of the New York City Marathon. Simply making it to the starting line will be a huge accomplishment.

He is, after all, running with a new set of lungs.

Moe is one of six transplant recipients who plan to run the marathon on Sunday, and he most likely is the first lung recipient to tackle a course this long, according to Dick Traum, president of the Achilles Track Club for disabled athletes. Moe, a 31-year-old diabetic, had to suck oxygen and use a wheelchair before his double lung transplant in the summer of 1997.

"If I can get through the race, I know that I have my disease under control," Moe said.

Speaking from his home in Kreteasand, Norway, Moe worried that a lingering bacterial infection might prevent him from running.

His doctors warned him not to do it, but they also warned him about many of the 12 marathons he had run before his transplant, races he sometimes entered with bleeding lungs.

This time he plans to run slowly, with his doctor, his physical therapist and two Norwegian champions — former marathoner Grete Waitz and Johann Olav Koss, an Olympic gold medalist speed-skater.

"I hope I will survive," Moe said with a slightly wheezing laugh. "It will be the toughest race ever."

Running a marathon is not a good idea for most transplant patients, said Dr. Niloo Edwards, surgical director of heart transplants at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital in New York. But those healthy enough to do it are a symbol of hope for sick people leery of the surgery.

"It's a testament to how well transplantation works in the 1990s and to really how much quality of life ... the gift of these organs brings to these patients," Dr. Edwards said.

For Donald Arthur, the transplant itself led him to the marathon. He began race walking to counter the bone atrophy resulting from his antirejection drugs.

Traum quickly persuaded him to enter last year's marathon, an event he never cared about before his heart transplant two years ago.

"The only thing I used to do with a marathon was sit in my chair with a beer and a cigarette and the remote control and change the channel because I didn't want to see anyone in that pain and agony," the 54-year-old New Yorker said.

Smoking and drinking, combined with a cocaine habit, made Arthur's already diseased heart grow monstrously large and nearly shut it down.

"I couldn't talk anymore because I was gasping for air," he said. "It took over half an hour for me to walk a city block."

LIBRARY

"It's hard to say enough about Bill Snyder," Hobrock said. "I'd just like to say thanks for being such a good friend to the library."

The donation will be pooled in investments that are part of the library's endowment fund. Hobrock said the donation won't be spent immediately on such items as journals or furnishings, but it will be used to fund future purchases.

This is not the first donation Snyder has made to the library. He has donated the gate receipts from spring games for the past three to four years and has donated personal money as well, McCulloh said.

"This kind of cooperation between athletics and academics unites the university on a common course," McCulloh said. "This makes us a more unified group."

Giving thanks for cooperation between athletics and academics was a common theme in many of the personal messages that students, faculty and even parents wrote on the card.

"Bravo, Bill! It is good to see a coach standing up for academics," one message said. "Thank you for giving so much of yourself to the University and the future."

"My daughter (20 months) will appreciate in 2018 what you have done for our library in 1998," another message said.

Snyder said the words of thanks helped to fortify his belief that students and faculty appreciate the library and all it does for them.

"It says that there are a lot of people that need that facility and what it houses," Snyder said.

"We need to do what we can, and more, to put the right things in that building."

istrative leave as of Sept. 25.

Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said he did not know if Potillo would resume his duties after the audit was complete.

"I'm not the person making that decision," Simon said.

Arts and Sciences Dean Peter Nicholls will have the final authority on Potillo's review. Nicholls has refused to comment about Potillo's status because it is a personnel issue; Simon also declined comment.

Simon said what he found in the financial records for the station were invoices and receipts but no complete bookkeeping.

"We had lots of raw record keeping," Simon said.

Simon said a DB92 audit was inevitable, as it is for every campus entity.

He did not directly correlate the audit with the station's record-keeping problems.

"At some point, we had to come to an audit," Simon said.

Dethloff is acting as the liaison between the committee and DB92. She said questions that arose about the records prompted the committee to suggest an audit to Simon. Simon said he agreed doing the audit now and delaying the presentation until spring was a good idea.

"It was more of a mutual thing," Dethloff said. "We thought, 'Let's wait until we get things straightened out.

Glenn's liftoff successful, he's 'feeling fine'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Still the hero and still making history, John Glenn roared back into space Thursday, retracing the trail he blazed for America's astronauts 36 years ago.

"Boy, enjoying the show," Glenn said as Discovery soared 340 miles over Hawaii three hours into the flight. "This is beautiful. It's still a trite old statement: Zero-g and I feel fine," he added, repeating the words of his first flight.

His commander, Curtis Brown Jr., said, "Let the record show that John has a smile on his face, and it goes from one ear to the other one, and we haven't been able to remove it yet."

Glenn, the first American in orbit on Feb. 20, 1962, became at age 77 the world's oldest space traveler when he and six crewmates lifted off aboard the shuttle Discovery at 2:19 p.m. EST.

"Liftoff of Discovery with six astronaut heroes and one American legend," launch commentator Lisa Malone said.

It was a space sequel with all the right stuff. Discovery's departure a mere 19 1/2 minutes late

Students cram into Union to watch launch of Discovery space shuttle

BY SARA MARTIN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The usual silence of the K-State Student Union TV room was broken Thursday as about 100 students crammed inside and stood to watch the launch of the Discovery space shuttle.

Chatter filled the air and students were heard debating which channel would have the best coverage of 77-year-old John Glenn's return to space.

"I just wanted to be able to witness this," said David McAnerney, senior in construction science management. "I wasn't around when he went up the first time but after listening to my parents and everyone else talk about it, I realized the historic value of it."

Amy Blackwelder, junior in graphic design, said she wanted to watch the launch at home, just to be able to say she watched it, but had to be on campus over the noon hour. However, she still was able to tune in.

"I stopped in just to watch the launch," Blackwelder said. "I saw it on the TV downstairs, and I thought I'd come up here to watch. I'll probably remember where I was at when it happened. It's a fairly historical moment."

The opinions of those in attendance differed pose no risk to the crew when the shuttle returns to Earth on Nov. 7 after the nine-day flight.

"Let the winds of Discovery lift us on to the future," launch control said in its final words to the astronauts.

about NASA's motivations to put Glenn back into space.

"The official part is medical research, but it's a publicity stunt, too," said Hermann Donert, professor emeritus of mechanical engineering.

McAnerney said he thinks the publicity will have the most significant effect on NASA.

"It will definitely better the public view and opinion of NASA," McAnerney said. "For the last 10 years or so, people have questioned the spending that goes on and the merits of the program. It will definitely revive the spirit of NASA."

In taking the second spaceflight of his life, Glenn realized a dream that he never thought possible. His return to space as the first orbiting geriatric test subject captured the American imagination, so much so that hundreds of thousands of people jammed the area to see the retiring senator off.

President Clinton, the first president to witness a shuttle liftoff, pronounced Glenn's flight "a great day for America and a great day for our senior citizens."

As the low man on Discovery's crew, the Democratic senator from Ohio — riding as a mere Payload Specialist No. 2 — sat in the middle seat of the windowless bottom deck for launch, staring at a row of metal lockers. He wore a baggy orange suit with a U.S. flag stitched to his left shoulder, a contrast to his sleek silver suit from Mercury.

Soon after reaching orbit, however, Glenn unstrapped himself and for the first time ever, floated free and weightless. Back in 1962, he never got out of the seat of his cramped Friendship 7 Mercury capsule during his five-hour, three-orbit flight and had little time for sightseeing.

"First report is great. I don't know what hap-

Candidates want more affordable government

BY MATT KREPS

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

State Representative Jim Ryun and Republican candidate for Commissioner of Insurance Bryan Riley stopped by K-State on Thursday to talk with students and Manhattan residents about how they can make government more affordable and efficient.

Ryun, a Republican representing the 2nd District, used his time to focus on budget issues and national security. "We balanced the budget this year, but if we don't continue to do that, it won't mean much," he said.

RYUN

Ryun said that while the budget surplus this year and projected surpluses over the next 10 years are great accomplishments, Congress has to be wary of additional spending programs or the budget once again will be in the red. Congress needs representatives wary of entitlement programs and increased spending in other sectors that can mitigate budget savings elsewhere, he said.

Specifically, Ryun said Social Security needs careful planning and a bipartisan approach.

"I believe we can fully fund Social Security and continue its existence, but we have to look at genuine solutions," Ryun said.

Other issues Ryun has worked on during his term include a health care proposal to give citizens more control over health care that is still in progress. Ryun said, if re-elected, he would continue to work on making decisions about health care local.

Ryun said he believed in putting decisions in the hands of local governments rather than issuing binding programs from the capitol.

He said spending plans need to allow local governments to decide how they best can use the funds rather than federal mandates putting money into places where it is not as useful.

"Let the people make these decisions," Ryun said.

Ryun said he also has concerns about the status of the nation's military readiness.

Ryun said the military has gone from 18 divisions to 10 divisions since Desert Storm. Moreover, the number of soldiers in a division has fallen.

The low number of troops means the United States is not ready to deploy as it did for Desert Storm.

Military members also are leaving the service to take jobs with better pay and better benefits in the private sector.

Troops aren't Ryun's only concern with the military.

Aging equipment and maintenance problems also are hampering the military's ability to defend American interests, Ryun said.

"The Marines are operating with Vietnam helicopters 30 years old," he said.

Riley, a K-State graduate, began the session with a brief introduction about his background and a few key issues in the commissioner race.

"Our insurance department is the ninth biggest in the country if you factor in our population," he said. "I think we can do a lot better job of producing more bang for the taxpayer's buck."

He said other states, such as Oklahoma, have larger populations, more insurance companies and more efficient departments. Kansas needs to look for ways to become more efficient and reduce the cost of insurance regulation, he said.

Riley said he wanted to use the office to reduce hidden taxes, reduce bureaucracy and limit the amount of litigation in the state.

Vet Med college plans to expand facility; possibility to build not yet set in stone

BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the past few months, the College of Veterinary Medicine quietly has been looking at plans for a future facility expansion north of its present complex.

The land, on the east side of Denison Avenue, extends from the Veterinary Medicine Complex north to Kimball Avenue. The proposed project is in the feasibility stages, meaning there is no definite answer as to whether it will be built.

Ralph Richardson, dean of the college, said the building plans would not occur, if at all, for a few years.

"We're working toward the possibility of a new building," Richardson said. "We're looking at a building that would increase research capability."

Jerry Carter, university architect and director of facilities planning, said he is not ready to present the project concept to the Campus Development Committee, the administrative committee that advises on university building.

Carter, who described the project as "intriguing" and requiring "significant dollar amounts," said he is giving Richardson time to flesh out the project before moving forward within the campus planning structure.

He said if the project comes to fruition, it probably would go in a five- or 10-year plan.

It is not unusual for academic deans and department heads to look into the feasibility of a project with facilities planning long before any concrete work has been attempted on an actual plan for a new facility.

Some projects may come and go without ever receiving public attention.

Carter said the land to the east and north of the Veterinary Medicine Complex always has been planned for future expansion of the complex.

The project was discussed, without referring to specifics or to the fact that it's a Veterinary Medicine project, at the last Campus Development Committee meeting.

Carrie Andrade, 6, looks over at the pumpkin T.J. Andrade, 7, decorated Thursday night in Bramlage Coliseum during Fright Night III. Between 6 and 7 p.m., children went to different tables throughout the Bramlage concourse, collecting candy and playing games.

Willie the Wildcat holds up a stuffed toy Chihuahua before throwing it in a box of dynamite Thursday evening at Bramlage Coliseum. Besides a routine performed by Willie, area mascots played a short game of basketball and the K-State basketball teams performed.

Fright Night brings basketball, skits to area fans

Fright Night III gave fans a chance to see their two basketball teams practice and perform skits Thursday, and little Wildcat fans got to fill their candy bags.

Several greek houses handed out candy on the concourse and basketball players signed autographs for pint-size ghosts and goblins at Bramlage Coliseum.

Tony Kitt, junior forward, said he enjoyed the time spent with the trick-or-treaters and said it's something he is used to.

"Coming from a family of nine, it's a lot about kids all the time, so it's the usual," Kitt said.

Vicky Shimp, mother and Manhattan resident, brought her 12-month-old baby and other children trick-or-treating. Shimp said she is an annual visitor to Fright Night.

"We come here and take them to grandparents' houses and close friends," Shimp said. "But we don't let them go door to door. This is a safe, nice place to be."

Andrea Kruse said it was fun to trick-or-treat at Fright Night, because she got twice as much candy.

After the trick-or-treating was over, the action moved off the concourse and onto the basketball court. Willie the Wildcat led a group of other mascots in a basketball game officiated by people impersonating President Clinton and first lady Hillary Clinton.

Fans watched as the women's basketball team did a spoof of the movie "Scream." Angie Finkes, junior center, said the team had difficulty deciding on a skit to perform.

"It took us a while, we were all like 'Man what are we gonna do?'" Finkes said. "We didn't want to dance again, so we thought a spoof on a movie would be good."

The men's basketball teams performed a "Homey the Clown" skit, in which Kitt played the role of Homey the Clown.

"It was fun, I guess I am the mouth of the team," Kitt said.

When the skits were over and the introductions were made, the real practice started.

The women's team played two five-minute halves. The scrimmage split the Cats into white and purple teams. The white team, led by Finkes and sophomore forward Brandy Harris, defeated the purple squad, led by Olga Firsova, junior center, 19-12.

The men's scrimmage lasted ten minutes and ended in a 20-20 tie.

Kitt said although he enjoyed Fright Night III and the interaction with the fans, he was ready for the season to start.

"I can't wait," Kitt said. "Next Tuesday is our first exhibition, and it is time to play."

Women's basketball player Jenny Coalson, senior guard and forward, said she was ready for the season.

"We did a lot of hard work this summer," Coalson said. "This season, I think we are ready to roll."

"WE COME HERE AND TAKE THEM TO GRANDPARENTS' HOUSES AND CLOSE FRIENDS, BUT WE DON'T LET THEM GO DOOR TO DOOR. THIS IS A SAFE, NICE PLACE TO BE."

Safety rules given to all trick-or-treaters

The annual night of trick-or-treating, costumes and getting enough candy to guarantee future trips to the dentist is fun for kids of all ages.

However, there are some safety precautions that should be taken before running amok with the devils, hobgoblins and princesses.

Karolyn Tacha, media specialist at Bluemont Elementary School, recently talked to kindergartners to inform them about rules they should follow before going out for the night of fun.

She said children should eat before they go trick-or-treating, so they won't be tempted to eat candy before their parents check it. She also said parents should be the ones to take their children trick-or-treating.

"If there's a problem, then the parents will be right there," Tacha said.

Tacha also said it's a good idea for children to trick-or-treat only in their immediate neighborhood.

"I live in an older part of town, and some of the bricks push up and children might trip over them," Tacha said.

Tacha said children should not run in their costumes or wear masks with small openings.

Stephanie Ross, freshman in Spanish, works at the Halloween Boutique at Manhattan Town Center. She said the popular "Scream" mask has not been a problem for children.

"It doesn't cover the entire face, and it's not very heavy. It is designed so children can take it off easily," Ross said.

Ross also said lighter costumes would be helpful for children to wear, but if they are wearing a darker costume they could wear a lighted necklace or a bright wrist bracelet. Another alternative is to put runner's strips on the clothing so the children can be seen easily from the street.

Tacha said the most important thing is keeping children safe.

"Our children are very precious to us, and we want them back safe on Monday at school," Tacha said.

KSU horse judging team goes undefeated

The football team is not the only team on campus with an undefeated season.

The 1998 horse judging team went 3-0 with its win at the 1998 All-American Quarter Horse Congress on Oct. 16 in Columbus, Ohio. It beat 23 other teams to give K-State its first victory at the contest.

"We put in lots of hours of preparation, usually around 20 a week," Coach Julie Wolf said.

"Judging is a mental game — more than what you know — it is how you get through the contest and survive."

The team's next competition is the World Championship Quarter Horse Show, which will be Nov. 18 in Oklahoma City.

"The congress and the world are the two most prestigious contests," said Wolf, senior in animal sciences and industry. "They are tough to win."

Judging teaches the team members valuable skills, Wolf said, including public speaking and decision making. Team members judge halter classes, performance classes and provide reasons for their judgments at contests.

"In placing halter classes, we look for quality, balance, volume, muscle, size, profile and structural correctness. We also look for breed and sex character," said Teresa Douthit, senior in animal sciences and industry.

Douthit said she gains more from the contests than just judging skills.

"I like seeing lots of high-quality horses and seeing what it takes to win," Douthit said. "It is always exciting to see a world champion."

The team also placed first at the Southwest Regional in New Mexico and at Equifest in Wichita.

Voter turnout might be lowest since 1966

TOPEKA — Satisfaction with the status quo and the lack of any contentious statewide campaigns portend what Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh says might be the lowest voter turnout in Kansas since 1966.

"I hope Kansas voters will prove me wrong and turn out in droves on election day," Thornburgh told reporters Thursday. "Unfortunately, the traditional factors to indicate heavy turnout are just not present this time."

Thornburgh, the state's chief election official and a Republican, said he expects 735,000 of the state's 1.5 million voters — about 49 percent — will cast ballots in Tuesday's general election.

Voter turnout hasn't been that low since 1966, when just 692,955 Kansans voted. It's not possible to say what percentage that was, because the state didn't start registering voters until April 1968.

Thornburgh said his projection includes advance voting — with 60,000 to 65,000 advanced voting ballots distributed about the same as for the 1996 general election.

On the ballot are statewide races for U.S. Senate, governor, secretary of state, attorney general, state treasurer and insurance commissioner. Also, there are four U.S. House seats, all 125 state House seats, two state Senate and five of the 10 State Board of Education seats, plus scattered local ballot issues.

"People generally vote their pocket-book, and right now Kansans are pretty pleased with the economy and the way state government is handling it," Thornburgh said.

"Voters say 'I'm bored, there's nothing exciting in these campaigns, so I'm going to stay home,'" Thornburgh said.

He said the GOP primary in August — when moderate Gov. Bill Graves thrashed conservative challenger David Miller — was viewed as the significant event of the political season.

"It was as high a profile race as any we've seen in many years and many may have the feeling that was the real vote," said Thornburgh.

Farmers to receive emergency payments

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Farmers next week will begin getting $2.8 billion in emergency-assistance payments mandated under the relief package passed by Congress.

The payments, aimed to compensate for low grain prices, will be issued starting Tuesday to nearly 2 million farms eligible for market transition payments from the government each year under 1996 farm legislation.

The $2.8 billion means a 49.7-percent increase in the annual payments farmers would have received, department officials said. Before the additional money, annual payments were capped at $40,000.

"This administration fought for and won a final package that will get out some real help to farmers whose livelihoods are on the line," Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman said.

Glickman said that because of the payments, "many family farmers are now planning for a spring crop instead of a spring auction."

Glickman said farmers still will need help next year.

"Even with these payments and other assistance we are providing, there remain serious, long-term structural problems in American agriculture," he said.

Farm income is expected to drop 16 percent this year nationwide because of low grain and livestock prices and weather-related crop failures.

The money was included in a $7 billion aid package for farmers that was attached to the overall agriculture spending bill signed by President Clinton last week.

About $1 billion of that amount comes in the form of tax relief. The legislation designates $1.5 billion for this year's disaster-related losses, $875 million to cover losses over the past five years and $200 million in livestock feed assistance. About $200 million will go to assist dairy farmers.

Issues of last 4 years continue in campaign

BY NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly four years ago, Gov. Bill Graves was sworn into office as Kansas' 43rd governor. Leading up to Tuesday's election, the moderate Republican said he is letting his record since 1994 speak for itself.

Providing tax relief for Kansans, bringing more jobs into the state and continuing the effort to restructure higher education governance are issues Graves has focused on while serving as governor and in this year's campaign.

Earlier this year, Graves signed into law a $250 million tax-relief package that included cuts in property taxes, some low-income tax relief and removal of several sales taxes.

Graves' campaign manager, Mike Matson, said lowering taxes is a trademark of Graves' term.

"He is the only governor in the history of Kansas to enact four-straight years of tax relief, and it's not just for businesses," he said. "People who earn less than $25,000 a year are eligible for a tax cut."

One part of Graves' tax plan is to eliminate the sales tax on cars. Since 1994 the tax has decreased by 50 percent, and his plan is to eventually phase the tax out completely.

While Graves' opponent, Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he wants to use a large portion of the state's lottery income for student scholarships in his STARS program, Matson said Graves wants to continue to use it for economic development.

"For Sawyer to use the money for tuition, he would totally pull the plug on economic development plans," Matson said. "The economic-development programs the money is used for now include new business attraction and existing business expansion.

"Also, the biggest need in Kansas is skilled, trained workers, especially in Wichita and any businessman will tell you that," he said. "A lot of the lotto money goes to training."

While Graves supports reforms in higher education, he said he does not support free education.

"I have some disagreement with the notion that every student needs to get a free education," he said in an article from The Associated Press.

In a written response to a question about the post-secondary education system in Kansas posed by the League of Women Voters, Graves said tuition in the state is reasonable and the quality of instruction is excellent.

One element of post-secondary education Graves said he does want to modify is the way it is governed.

Last year, Graves appointed a task force to look at how the state's community colleges, vocational schools and universities could be governed by a coordinated, umbrella organization. The state's public schools and community colleges are overseen by the State Board of Education, while state universities are governed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

State politicians, including representatives to the State House of Representatives, candidates for the House and Sawyer himself have said they thought the governance system needs restructuring.

Matson said it is a high priority for Graves.

"The governor places a lot of stock in this task force," he said. "Many people want the Board of Regents to work closer with community colleges and technical schools."

Matson also said Graves supports local governments working closely with their communities.

"The governor is a big believer in local control. If a community votes not to have something like a hog farm, they won't have it. The people know best," he said.

GRAVES

SAWYER

Sawyer says being underdog doesn't scare him

BY NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some people don't feel comfortable being the underdog, especially when it comes to politics.

However, for Tom Sawyer, Kansas' Democratic gubernatorial candidate, it's a natural position.

During an Oct. 19 visit to K-State, Sawyer, one who has spent the past 10 years in the Republican-dominated Kansas House of Representatives as a representative for Wichita, said he is used to House Republicans asking him to cede to Republican-backed legislation, but that his policy is never give in.

"I'll fight battles they tell me I'll never win," Sawyer said, "but I always keep fighting, and sometimes we win some of those battles."

The battle for governor is one of the biggest of his political career. Sawyer said he doesn't plan to back down from this one, either.

During his visit to K-State, Sawyer said that if he gains the highest elected position in Kansas, it will be due to the vision he has for Kansas' future.

"I have an agenda and a vision for the state, and frankly, the governor doesn't," Sawyer said.

Guaranteeing the state's top scholars free education once they leave high school, giving tax cuts that could affect the poor directly and slowing the spread of corporate hog farms are a few of the issues on Sawyer's agenda.

Modeled after the HOPE program in Georgia, Sawyer's Student Tuition Assistance

Recognition Scholarship, STARS, would make high school seniors with at least a 2.75 grade point average eligible to receive $1,300 a semester to pay for a four-year college education. Students would have five years to use the scholarship and would be able to use it to attend any of Kansas' community colleges and vocational schools as well. College students also would be eligible to receive the money.

About $40 million of the estimated $60 million the state receives annually from lottery tickets would pay for the scholarship. Most of that money now is used for economic development.

Sawyer said money spent on education won't detract from the state's economic development, it would encourage it.

"We need a higher-trained workforce in Kansas to keep companies here and bring more in," Sawyer said during his visit to K-State. "We've had problems with companies moving to states that have more skilled workers."

"STARS opens more doors than what we've had up to now," he said. "For the last 12 years, Kansas has used lottery dollars to fund economic development, but it's time to do something different."

Sawyer also said he wants to do something different with the tax system in Kansas.

"We need to get rid of the sales tax on food, where it will help mothers, working people and the poor," Sawyer said.

It's part of Sawyer's "Fit & Trim" plan which also includes simplifying tax forms so citizens could file their state income taxes on a post card.

Another important issue to Sawyer is one that has generated controversy across the state — corporate hog farming.

"If they are polluting the water and air, then maybe we don't need them," Sawyer said. "If I'm elected governor, I won't issue permits for them for a couple years."

A member of the National Association of Latino Elected Officials, Sawyer said, during his visit, he is a strong supporter of bilingual education in Kansas and that maintaining it is an almost constant struggle.

"Since 1992, the state has helped fund bilingual education, but there has been a wave by an organization called U.S. English, and they have fought it on different fronts."

Issues of last 4 years continue in campaign

By NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly four years ago, Gov. Bill Graves was sworn into office as Kansas' 43rd governor. Leading up to Tuesday's election, the moderate Republican said he is letting his record since 1994 speak for itself.

Providing tax relief for Kansans, bringing more jobs into the state and continuing the effort to restructure higher education governance are issues Graves has focused on while serving as governor and in this year's campaign.

Earlier this year, Graves signed into law a $250 million tax-relief package that included cuts in property taxes, some low-income tax relief and removal of several sales taxes.

Graves' campaign manager, Mike Matson, said lowering taxes is a trademark of Graves' term.

"He is the only governor in the history of Kansas to enact four-straight years of tax relief, and it's not just for businesses," he said. "People who earn less than $25,000 a year are eligible for a tax cut."

One part of Graves' tax plan is to eliminate the sales tax on cars. Since 1994 the tax has decreased by 50 percent, and his plan is to eventually phase the tax out completely.

While Graves' opponent, Rep. Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said he wants to use a large portion of the state's lottery income for student scholarships in his STARS program, Matson said Graves wants to continue to use it for economic development.

"For Sawyer to use the money for tuition, he would totally pull the plug on economic development plans," Matson said. "The economic-development programs the money is used for now include new business attraction and existing business expansion.

"Also, the biggest need in Kansas is skilled, trained workers, especially in Wichita and any businessman will tell you that," he said. "A lot of the lotto money goes to training."

While Graves supports reforms in higher education, he said he does not support free education.

"I have some disagreement with the notion that every student needs to get a free education," he said in an article from The Associated Press.

In a written response to a question about the post-secondary education system in Kansas posed by the League of Women Voters, Graves said tuition in the state is reasonable and the quality of instruction is excellent.

One element of post-secondary education Graves said he does want to modify is the way it is governed.

Last year, Graves appointed a task force to look at how the state's community colleges, vocational schools and universities could be governed by a coordinated, umbrella organization. The state's public schools and community colleges are overseen by the State Board of Education, while state universities are governed by the Kansas Board of Regents.

State politicians, including representatives to the State House of Representatives, candidates for the House and Sawyer himself have said they thought the governance system needs restructuring.

Matson said it is a high priority for Graves.

"The governor places a lot of stock in this task force," he said. "Many people want the Board of Regents to work closer with community colleges and technical schools."

Matson also said Graves supports local governments working closely with their communities.

"The governor is a big believer in local control. If a community votes not to have something like a hog farm, they won't have it. The people know best," he said.

SAWYER

Sawyer says being underdog doesn't scare him

By NATE JENKINS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some people don't feel comfortable being the underdog, especially when it comes to politics.

However, for Tom Sawyer, Kansas' Democratic gubernatorial candidate, it's a natural position.

During an Oct. 19 visit to K-State, Sawyer, one who has spent the past 10 years in the Republican-dominated Kansas House of Representatives as a representative for Wichita, said he is used to House Republicans asking him to cede to Republican-backed legislation, but that his policy is never give in.

"I'll fight battles they tell me I'll never win," Sawyer said, "but I always keep fighting, and sometimes we win some of those battles."

The battle for governor is one of the biggest of his political career. Sawyer said he doesn't plan to back down from this one, either.

During his visit to K-State, Sawyer said that if he gains the highest elected position in Kansas, it will be due to the vision he has for Kansas' future.

"I have an agenda and a vision for the state, and frankly, the governor doesn't," Sawyer said.

Guaranteeing the state's top scholars free education once they leave high school, giving tax cuts that could affect the poor directly and slowing the spread of corporate hog farms are a few of the issues on Sawyer's agenda.

Modeled after the HOPE program in Georgia, Sawyer's Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship, STARS, would make high school seniors with at least a 2.75 grade point average eligible to receive $1,300 a semester to pay for a four-year college education. Students would have five years to use the scholarship and would be able to use it to attend any of Kansas' community colleges and vocational schools as well. College students also would be eligible to receive the money.

About $40 million of the estimated $60 million the state receives annually from lottery tickets would pay for the scholarship. Most of that money now is used for economic development.

Sawyer said money spent on education won't detract from the state's economic development, it would encourage it.

"We need a higher-trained workforce in Kansas to keep companies here and bring more in," Sawyer said during his visit to K-State. "We've had problems with companies moving to states that have more skilled workers."

"STARS opens more doors than what we've had up to now," he said. "For the last 12 years, Kansas has used lottery dollars to fund economic development, but it's time to do something different."

Sawyer also said he wants to do something different with the tax system in Kansas.

"We need to get rid of the sales tax on food, where it will help mothers, working people and the poor," Sawyer said.

It's part of Sawyer's "Fit & Trim" plan which also includes simplifying tax forms so citizens could file their state income taxes on a post card.

Another important issue to Sawyer is one that has generated controversy across the state — corporate hog farming.

"If they are polluting the water and air, then maybe we don't need them," Sawyer said. "If I'm elected governor, I won't issue permits for them for a couple years."

A member of the National Association of Latino Elected Officials, Sawyer said, during his visit, he is a strong supporter of bilingual education in Kansas and that maintaining it is an almost constant struggle.

"Since 1992, the state has helped fund bilingual education, but there has been a wave by an organization called U.S. English, and they have fought it on different fronts."

OUR VIEW

KSU, KU rivalry should now be taken seriously

The University of Kansas never has considered K-State to be a big rival. It never felt the need to give us that satisfaction; to acknowledge K-State as competition would indicate we're on its level, and KU would rather swallow rocks than acknowledge that.

The reality, of course, is that KU knew it stood little chance of upsetting its now-strong intrastate rival. The fact that K-State football is nothing short of a miracle should be apparent to all. KU wouldn't want to draw too much attention to a contest it wouldn't stand a chance of winning, so it choose to be rivals with the University of Missouri, which, until recently, was not a bad match.

Last weekend, however, in a fit of absurdity that could only happen at a school like KU, the Jayhawks managed to beat — no, smash — no, obliterate — formidable Colorado.

Not since Black Sabbath got back together has there been a clearer sign of the apocalypse. KU clearly is capable of providing an upset.

This realization also energized the 31,000 KU fans who were watching, awestruck. Perhaps their down-and-out football team had a few surprises in store for its opponents. Fans were so enraptured by this fact, they tore down the goalposts in Memorial Stadium and abandoned them only when they realized how far Lawrence is from Aggieville.

This should be a head's up to Wildcat fans everywhere. The KU/K-State basketball games always have been close, even when KU was good. We need to go to Lawrence and absolutely dominate the town. Even if you don't have football tickets, you still can sit on the hill. Go to Lawrence to support women's volleyball Friday night, or watch the women's crew team in their regatta Saturday morning before the game.

And please, please, please, wear purple. We need Wildcat fans in purple. The fact that blue and red make purple does not cut it. The fact that our other color is white does not give you license to don it on gameday. Wear purple so we can make a statement. After all, the game is going to be televised.

Keep in mind the fact it's supposed to rain, too, when you are planning your colors, and bring those tailgate grills — Jayhawks, we're told, taste like chicken.

'Routine move' gives student chance to decide programming

Editor,

The Collegian has reported on the new KSDB-FM 91.9 program director position twice recently. Each time, the article implied the position was created to solve problems at the station. Readers might think this is a drastic move. It actually is a rather routine move.

What I told both reporters is that having a student program director who runs the programming side of the station will make KSDB just like most all the other student-staffed stations in the country. The model used for student stations is the same as for student newspapers — students, not faculty or staff, should be making the content decisions.

In each interview, I compared the program director job to that of the Collegian editor-in-chief. The KSDB Advisory Board will be interviewing candidates for program director in November, just like the Board of Directors of Student Publications will be interviewing editor-in-chief candidates.

We've simply changed our station manual to be in step with standard practice.

Spring enrollment is finally upon us

Columnist has his own ideas on handling enrollment process

Ahhh, enrollment. The glorious days of picking your classes for next semester are upon us. Students furiously search for open sections of classes they need, and advisers steer students away from classes they don't need.

Every day during this wonderful time, I hear my fellow students complain about how they can't get into the classes they need. They vent about how people with fewer credit hours than they have get to enroll before they do or how the only class they need to graduate filled up before they could get it.

Everyone is complaining about the system, including myself. I don't like to have to wait an extra semester to graduate any more than anyone else.

How do we fix the problem? Nobody ever has an answer to this question. Although the current system of enrollment might be flawed, nobody has any better ideas.

Except me. I think there are quite a few changes we could make to the system so it would be more fair to students.

First of all, freshmen should never get to enroll. Instead, they should wander the campus on the first day of the semester, looking for open seats in classrooms. Also, if upperclassmen need to get into a class, underclassmen should have to give up their place in that class for the junior or senior.

Next, students who have been on campus the longest should get to enroll first. Those folks who have been here since 1982 and are working on their third doctorate degree always should have preference over us "underachievers" who want to get a diploma and move on with our lives.

When it comes time to enroll, students with the same number of hours as others in their college should be forced to enroll by the position of their name in the alphabet, instead of by something frivolous, like their GPA or how involved they are on campus.

Colleges and departments also should see that the class everyone in that department needs to graduate is offered only at 7:30 a.m. five days a week, with only 15 open spots. That almost would guarantee students would have to stay an additional semester against their will.

Advisers should not begin making advising appointments until the closed class list is at least two pages long, and even then they should only meet with the freshmen who aren't allowed to enroll, anyway. If they do eventually get to the upperclassmen, they must make sure that, no matter what classes they take, every senior will be exactly one credit hour short of graduation.

Lastly, nobody should get to enroll before me. I should get every class I want, every semester, because I can find all kinds of reasons why I "deserve" to enroll before everyone else. All those other people who feel the same way and have just as many excuses should just have to wait.

If K-State would implement these enrollment tactics on campus, I am positive nobody would have any complaints.

Or at least they would realize the old system was as fair as possible when trying to accommodate the needs of 20,000 students.

Halloween brings back memories of childhood

Acting like a mature adult can be a bore

With another of America's holidays-for-profit happening tomorrow, I am reminded of my childhood.

Actually, I don't remember much of it. However, what I lack in memory I am making up for in the present. What I do remember growing up is my dad, sleeping on the couch, coming home with candy, refusing to eat his vegetables and having Mountain Dew for dinner.

Yeah, we know you ate your peas and drank your milk for lunch at work so you don't have to have them for dinner.

I used to laugh at him, but secretly, I was jealous. Basically, I didn't want to eat my peas. As I have matured, I have matured, for lack of a better word, with him. A lot of the things for which I mocked him, I am now pleasurably guilty of myself.

There is a certain unexplainable joy you get when you fall asleep on your couch.

I've already told you one of my mottos I live by — it's the Golden Rule, for those of you playing at home. The second is to simply have fun, always keeping the first motto in mind.

In the Halloween spirit, smashing pumpkins is OK, but starting a band from it is too much.

My dad and I are not alone in this ideology. America is starting to cater to the needs of the immature mature, from television shows to casual days at the office to even politics.

If you can't do it for the kids, what good is it?

Our former president refused to eat his broccoli. Our current president didn't want to tell the whole truth. His investigator wanted only the steamy sexual details.

When he is not impeached, would cigars be a faux pas for celebration?

Apart from the sensationalism of the news, television also is catering to the kid in all of us. The number of animated shows aimed at adults is increasing. Cartoons always have been a little suspicious in their messages, but now it is more in the open.

The Mystery Van, the Scooby Snacks and a talking dog, for instance.

Apart from the pioneering "The Simpsons," we have the foul-mouthed kids of "South Park," the therapy of "Dr. Katz" and the bluntness of "Bob and Margaret."

Actually, we don't have any of those latest cartoon forays in Manhattan.

We do have "The Simpsons" once a day, finally, plus one channel recently devoted to a full 24 hours of cartoons, featuring none other than "Space Ghost Coast to Coast." Also, the networks are starting to add more cartoons to the lineups.

The point isn't what I watch.

The point is you don't have to grow up, at least not completely. I am not asking you to be immature. I'm not asking you to do anything. This simply is a reminder that you don't have to act like an adult.

What is acting like an adult anyway? I've been told to do it so many times.

Just because you're about to enter, dun dun duh, the real world, does not mean you have to leave the kiddie world. No one likes a total bore. Maybe they do, but I don't have the time to find out. Enjoy life, because that might be all you get, unless you make it to the so-called bonus round, whatever that is.

But don't try to play in the play areas at fast-food places. They will kick you out faster than you can say, "Would you like fries with that?"

These have been the ramblings of a 21-year-old kid living the rock 'n' roll lifestyle in a corporate world.

Aging study might make elderly capable of anything

Unless you really are dedicated to your schoolwork, you've heard about 77-year-old John Glenn's return flight into space to study the effects of aging in outer space. Now Glenn is an American hero more than ever.

Am I the only one who sees the long-term effects of this?

Let's say 79-year-old Sir Edmund Hillary, the first man to climb Mount Everest, watched the proceedings, then decided he wanted to climb Mount Everest again to study the effects of aging while on the side of a mountain. I'm 20 years old, and I doubt I could climb 30 feet without rupturing something essential. Mount Everest is 29,028 feet high, give or take ten feet due to snow. Poor Sir Edmund wouldn't stand a chance.

Glenn has $800 bazillion worth of technology aiding him, while Hillary had a couple cans of Spam, a pocketknife and some dry socks. Then, say Evel Knievel decided he wanted to try to jump the Grand Canyon again. I don't know if he's still alive, but if he's not, that would make his attempt all the more impressive.

Then, maybe Roger Staubach notices Troy Aikman is hurt, so he decides to make a return to football to quarterback the Cowboys. It would be entertaining to see him try to hold up under the Broncos pass rush. I hope they've got a sponge in the ambulance.

Even more painful, what if 69-year-old Roger Bannister tried to run a sub-four minute mile again? That would be scary to watch.

So, are you starting to understand the implications of yesterday's flight yet? The elderly people who look up to Glenn will see him revered by the American public as a hero, worthy of having the retired Walter Cronkite broadcast his flight, so they'll want to relive their greatest moments, too.

What we are looking at here is the gradual annihilation of the elderly in America, and the instigator of the elderly armageddon is Glenn. We'll have 94-year-old people going over Niagara Falls in a barrel, 88-year-old people bungee jumping, and George Foreman boxing Lennox Lewis. It'll be awful.

If you keep up with the NFL, you'll notice my theory is true. Steve DeBerg already has come out of retirement and is playing for the Atlanta Falcons. What the heck, let's go ahead and coax George Brett out of retirement and see if he can lead my beloved Royals back to the World Series. Oh, I hope, I hope, I hope.

What we'll soon have is a planet full of 0- to 40-year-olds, with no elderly people to keep us young'uns in line. Now I've said it. My parents will phone me in about fifteen minutes to ask me why I think they're old.

They'll cry and disown me and never send me another Christmas present again, but they'll get over it. Quoting Gloria Gaynor, I will survive. Serves them right, what they've tried to keep me from doing all these years eventually will wipe them all off the planet. Thank you, John Glenn. Party at my grandma's house!

Protest of Shepard's murder was only 'politically correct'

Editor,

A young man was murdered in the fields of Wyoming. A young girl was murdered on the streets of Kansas City, Mo. The former created a nationwide sensation, the latter, a collective shrug of the shoulder.

His murder made the evening news on all the main TV networks; her murder made the local TV news in Kansas City. His murder made the front page of every prominent newspaper across the nation; her murder made The Kansas City Star and the papers of nearby cities.

Ministers across the nation mounted their pulpits and decried his murder; her murder, most likely, was mentioned only by the minister of her church. On campuses across the nation, teary-eyed students had candlelight vigils to protest his murder; for her, there was not one tear shed nor one candle lit, a total blackout for her.

Did people actually care more for the young man than the young girl? Most likely not. To protest the murder of the young man was the politically correct thing to do. His murder was used as a tool to advance a political agenda. Nothing more.

It appears that political correctness has turned us into a nation of hypocrites. For this, we all should be red-faced with shame.

Accessibility of computers unacceptable at K-State

Editor,

We all share the benefits and drawbacks of social, educational and athletic college life. As good as things might seem, K-State has a variety of spoken and unspoken problems, one of which is the availability of public computers to students.

Through our studies concerning this subject, we have discovered K-State has an insufficient number of computers that students can access. Computers are extremely important in education; some colleges even have a requirement for its students to own a computer before enrollment.

We conducted a poll to see how the rest of the student body felt about this issue. In polling 466 students, we found that 47.4 percent use K-State's public computer labs two to four times a week or daily. A majority of these students said they had to wait an average of 10 minutes to even sit at a computer.

Important here is the opportunity cost of waiting. This isn't even taking into consideration the times during which term papers are due, and everyone is rushing for a computer.

K-State could put more computers in Hale Library, the K-State Student Union, the new engineering building and other locations.

Yet another possibility could be to adopt a system similar to that of Oklahoma State University. There, students pay $5 per credit hour, which goes toward maintenance and a three-year rotation program.

Finally, there is the idea to place more computers in the library and set them up so that they are accessible for all programs. These are only a few possible solutions to this evident problem.

The fact that most of our professors and instructors require computer knowledge or abilities enforces the idea that they are important and are becoming more so every day. Shouldn't something be done?

Tickets for Nov. 14 should remain in purple hands

Editor,

Don't sell the Cats short. Every home football game we have with the Huskers, it happens — somehow, they find a way to invade KSU Stadium.

The last thing we need this year is a bunch of Wildcats with dollar signs in their eyes selling that precious purple pass with nothing on their minds except that wonderful supply and demand concept. I'd like to make a request to all of you holding that prized ticket: DON'T SELL!

The Wildcats are the only chance for the Huskers to gain back any respect and salvage this season. They'll want it and want it bad, and they'll do everything possible to once again invade our house and give their team the best chance to win. It's demeaning.

I ventured to the Rockies for the CU game, and it was absolutely overwhelming how much purple there was on the streets, at the bars, in the stadium, on Interstate 70 — basically everywhere between Manhattan and Boulder. Don't believe the attendance reported on TV; that was just the allocated tickets. The stadium was plastered with purple. That's still not including those who made the trip without a ticket and watched the game from the local businesses. Don't let that happen at our house!

This game is the biggest stepping stone of the Wildcat football program on the way to a national title.

Personally, I'm tired of the media using their last weapon of derision against Bill Snyder's program: "... has yet to beat Nebraska." Don't miss your chance to witness history on Nov. 14, 1998.

Coaches say conference wide open this year

BIG XII CONFERENCE

The preseason favorite:

Oklahoma State
K-State's pick: sixth
Kansas' pick: second

By D. SCOTT FRITCHEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Time remains before K-State nestles itself deep within the Big 12 Conference standings.

However, talk about conference titles and postseason tournaments already runs rampant among the conference coaches.

For the first time in several years, there is no commanding preseason conference title contender in men's basketball.

Oklahoma State was picked first by the Big 12 coaches' preseason poll. Kansas was picked to finish second.

The rest of the pack isn't too far behind.

"Perhaps this is more wide-open than it's been in my five years (at K-State)," K-State coach Tom Asbury said at the Big 12 media day in Kansas City, Mo.

For seniors Shawn Rhodes and Manny Dies, now is the perfect — and last — opportunity to help refill the slipper K-State occupied last season when it upset last-place conference preseason predictions and finished eighth with a 17-12 (7-9 in the conference) record.

"We have to make sure K-State is the dominant team in the league," Dies said. "It's not just KU. Anybody has the shot at winning the conference title, and that's what we're here for."

Big 12 coaches picked K-State to finish sixth in the league in their preseason poll. K-State was tabbed to finish anywhere from third to 10th in the league, according to several preseason magazine rankings.

Asbury wouldn't comment on where he felt his team would finish, but he revealed the secret to finishing near the top of conference standings — home wins, of which K-State already has plenty.

K-State enters the season with a home-court winning streak spanning 52 seasons, an NCAA record. The Wildcats finished 12-2 at Bramlage Coliseum last season.

"It's a crucial year to hold court at home," Asbury said. "You need to steal two or three minimum on the road to be able to get into the top three to four and ensure yourself an NCAA bid."

An NCAA bid is exactly what Rhodes said he would like to cap off his K-State career.

Rhodes returned to Manhattan after touring Europe with a traveling Big 12 All-Star team and discovered K-State basketball was just as he had left it — a program just a few steps away from going to the Big Dance.

"We all have our personal goals this year," he said. "Mine is to get back to the NCAA tournament."

Being a tournament-caliber team is a season-long goal shared by Asbury, who guided the Wildcats to postseason competition in two of the past three years.

"Our goals are to get into post-season every year and that is very open-ended," Asbury said. "Anywhere from the NIT to the Final Four of the NCAA Tournament."

K-State's last NCAA Tournament bid was in 1996, when K-State was ousted in the first round and Rhodes, a wide-eyed freshman, was caught up in the dramatics of March Madness.

March is four months away. Rhodes knows conference titles, tournament bids and glass slippers are far away.

"We'll have to accomplish a lot this year," Rhodes said. "But hopefully, we'll keep taking strides like we did last year and we can make it."

KU has been hot of late with a recent upset against Colorado. K-State is ranked third in the nation. Both will duke it out Saturday in this year's version of

The Sunflower SHOWDOWN

On Saturday morning, it's time for David to face Goliath once again.

With a top-four rating on the line and a reputation to uphold, K-State (7-0, 4-0 in the Big 12) takes its 15-game winning streak into Lawrence to face KU (3-5, 1-5) at 11:30 in the 96th annual Sunflower State Showdown.

In a series that long has been dominated by the Jayhawks, the Cats carry a five-game winning streak against KU into the newly renovated Memorial Stadium. Although a nice piece of hardware is on the line with the Governor's Cup going to the victor, K-State has more important motivations to guide them.

With the first edition of the Bowl Championship Series rankings released Monday, K-State discovered its name was listed at No. 4. With the top-two teams in the BCS rankings almost assured of a shot at the national title, head coach Bill Snyder said Saturday's showdown was important, regardless of the rivalry.

"Every person will react differently to it (the rivalry), and every person has a different approach," Snyder said. "What you realize, though, is that they all become so important."

Although the contest looks like a clear mismatch on paper, KU has momentum to add to its fire after a 33-17 victory against then-17th-ranked Colorado last Saturday. Regardless of the Jayhawks' record, Snyder said the Cats never have underestimated their ability, and the CU victory proved that point.

"Our players have understood all along that KU is a very fine football team," he said. "They fought hard, and they played hard. There was never any point where they stood down or stepped backwards."

"I think (the Colorado game) might have solidified it in their minds."

The Hawks have proven to be perhaps the Big 12's most resilient team, playing close contests against every Big 12 team faced, excluding Nebraska.

When analyzing KU's strong points on offense, Snyder said its secret lies in the mix of running and passing.

"They create a balance in the offense," he said. "They do run the ball extremely well. The two backs have proven that they are more than capable. They're hard guys to get on the ground, to capture and to hit, and their offensive line has really matured."

Leading this attack is sophomore running back David Winbush, who spurred the Hawks to victory last week with 268 rushing yards and three touchdowns.

While Winbush's breakout performance might have opened the nation's eyes, linebacker Mark Simoneau said the Cats' defense already knew he would pose a serious challenge.

"He's a small back, so he's kind of hard to find," Simoneau said. "He's explosive, he's fast, he'll bounce at about anywhere, so you've got to be ready defensively, across the line."

The defense will receive some help in extinguishing the KU offense with the return of linebacker Jeff Kelly. According to Snyder, after sitting out the Iowa State game with a leg injury, Kelly should be back in the starting lineup Saturday to assist the nation's top scoring defense.

The other question mark on the K-State injury sheet is starting quarterback Michael Bishop. After exiting the ISU game early in the second half with an apparent hip injury, Bishop's condition for Saturday has not been released. However, Snyder said Bishop would participate in certain elements of practice but would not go full-scale.

With BCS ratings and winning streaks to uphold, the essence of the in-state rivalry might get overshadowed. According to right guard Jeremy Martin, though, the traditional battle for brag-

Competitive Jayhawks don't stand chance; K-State has everything to lose against KU

As much as the sight of Kansas winning a game makes me want to vomit, I did smile a little watching the Jayhawks beat Colorado on Saturday. The 16-point win over the Buffaloes gives Kansas fans — all three of them — hope when their team plays K-State Saturday.

Considering the Wildcats only beat the Buffs by seven when the teams played Oct. 10, Hawk fans can spend all week dreaming of ways their boys can upset K-State. This false sense of worth will make it even sweeter when the Cats whoop Kansas like a red-headed stepchild.

The situations unfolding are turning into a repeat of 1995. Then, K-State was on a roll and the Hawks, having scored an upset victory over the Buffs, thought they could hang with the Cats.

K-State 41, Lawrence State 7. The Hawks also thought they stood a chance that year when Nebraska came to town. After all, they had that upset victory over Colorado, and the Huskers were coming to their house. The Hawks also had confidence in their running back paying the way.

Big Red 42, Baby Blue 3.

The Hawks stand a chance Saturday just like I stand a chance of getting a date with Mariah Carey. Actually, I think my date with Mariah will come sooner than a KU victory over K-State in football.

Keep this in mind though, Hawks fans: Kansas didn't beat Colorado. Rick Neuheisel beat Colorado. Neuheisel made the mortal sin of letting his players put a hat on KU quarterback Zac Wegner and knock him out of the game. He probably couldn't start for a decent high school team with his 48-percent completion percentage and 7-6 touchdown-interceptions ratio. But then again, the Hawks couldn't beat a decent high school team.

As long as he's in the game, opposing secondaries and defensive ends will pad their stats.

When Wegner came out of the game, he was — to no one's surprise — outshined by a walk-on. When it was time for Wegner to throw his game-losing interception, Jay Alexander was in instead. Too bad for the Buffs.

Hopefully, Wegner will be ready to play Saturday. That, of course, is in the best interest of the Cats. Whether or not he plays, though, doesn't really matter.

Throw any 11 guys in front of the Cats' Lynch Mob defense, and they'll put the stop on Kansas, Colorado, Texas — it doesn't matter. You can't score on these guys. They've given up 57 points through seven games.

Flying high on David Winbush's 268 yards, birdbackers? Enjoy it now, because he won't even gain 50 when he faces the Lynch Mob.

Just ask Ricky Williams, the all-world running back at Texas who gained only 43 yards on 25 carries against the Mob. Or talk to Iowa State's Darren Davis, who ran up a whopping 18 yards on 15 carries against K-State.

Also, don't think about throwing the ball on the Cats. Opponents are completing only 40 percent of their passes for an average of 5.6 yards an attempt. Throwing an incomplete against the Lynch Mob is a moral victory, though — 10 different Cats have interceptions this season.

When K-State has the ball, which will be the case most of the afternoon, watch the scoreboard light up like the Strip in Las Vegas. Offensively, the

To some fans, the Kansas vs. K-State rivalry has lost its luster.

After all, the Wildcats have won every game since 1993. Five straight losses by the Jayhawks have left many of my K-State friends with an indifferent attitude.

The Sunflower Showdown deserves only a side glance as the Wildcats roll to their first win in years against Nebraska, a Big 12 Conference title and a spot in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, they say.

Any recognition of the Kansas football team is tempered by an overwhelming confidence.

"We're going to come in there and blow you guys away," Harries said.

Before K-State fans check into their hotel rooms in Tempe, Ariz., they should pay attention to Saturday's grudge match.

The outcome is not a foregone conclusion, and the rivalry is not dead.

Since the teams first played in 1902, Kansas leads the series 61-29, and the teams have tied five times.

In the '80s, when both teams were doormats of the Big Eight Conference, the games might have been bad — did someone say toilet bowl? — but they were often close.

It should be no different as K-State rises in the rankings.

The Jayhawks are 3-5, but dangerous.

Given the right breaks — I don't mean lightning hitting the K-State buses as they travel Interstate 70 — Kansas will win Saturday.

Coach Terry Allen has vastly upgraded the offense. Quarterback Zac Wegner, running back David Winbush and the rest of the team are capable of moving the ball and scoring.

The Jayhawks also have heart. Despite injuries to important starters and close losses to conference opponents, the team continues to battle.

Players like linebacker Steve Bratten, who steps on the field never knowing which play will be his last, have driven the team this season.

All the ingredients are there for a classic upset in the vein of the Boston College vs. Miami game that made Doug Flutie famous.

Kansas has nothing to lose. A win means the team still has a chance to become bowl eligible. A loss is only one more in a difficult season.

K-State, however, has everything to lose. A win is expected. A loss ends all national title aspirations.

Kansas fans, this is about ardor, fan fervor, outlandish antics and screaming.

Release the energy of the rivalry. The crowd support during the Colorado game was outstanding. Now that we've warmed up, there's only one place to be Saturday — Memorial Stadium.

Arrive early. Don't allow the purple-clad visitors to sit in our seats. Memorial Stadium will be packed with emotion at kickoff. Get vocal. It should be louder than Arrowhead Stadium on third down every time K-State touches the ball.

We need noise. We need fan support.

The team will be underdogs, but this is our town, our field, our team and a chance to destroy K-State by ending its national title hopes.

The Kansas football team has the heart and guts to win this contest.

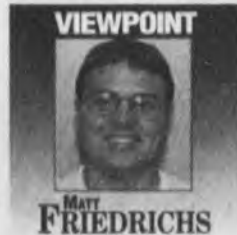

In a scrappy game, decided in the final moments, Kansas will win 31-28.

Step Show to raise money for students in need

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of K-State's largest student-run events is gearing up for another night of fund raising for students in need. Alpha Phi Alpha will sponsor its eighth annual Neak Frasty Step Show at 7 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium. This year's show headliner, Goodie Mob, a rap group, was mentioned for its gripping live performances by Vibe magazine in its "Best of the Best 1997" list. The group is expected to play selections from its newly released album. Brandon Hobbs, Alpha Phi Alpha campus event coordinator, said the Neak Frasty show features talented groups of performers from Midwestern universities, as well as groups from K-State's eight greek organizations that historically are comprised of black students. This year's outside participants will come from Oklahoma State University and the University of Kansas, and will travel from as far as Central Missouri State University, Lincoln University in Missouri and Langston University in Oklahoma. Teams from each of these schools will hone their performance skills in an effort to capture the $1,000 grand prize in both the fraternity and sorority divisions. Each act will be judged on its creativity, showmanship, precision and crowd appeal. "This is my fourth year doing this," Hobbs, senior in industrial engineering, said. "It makes me feel good knowing the proceeds go to creating scholarships." Proceeds from this year's step show will go to creating scholarships specifically for a few students continuing their K-State education or those who are planning on attending the university after graduating from high school.

The Neak Frasty show is a great recruitment tool for K-State, said Nate Scott, senior in advertising and Alpha Phi Alpha member. "It's important to get the word out that minorities attend K-State." Tickets for the event are $12 for balcony seats and $15 for floor seats. Aggieville's Streetside Records, The Sound Aquarium and Jamo's Hair Salon in Junction City, the ITR Office at Fort Riley and Alpha Phi Alpha members will have tickets available for sale prior to the show. Tickets also may be purchased at the door.

Purple Masque to present 'revolt' against standard forms of literature

By DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Melding political and social themes with bizarre comedy, "The Bald Soprano," showing at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday in the Purple Masque Theatre, is considered to be one of the finest examples of absurdist literature. "The theater of the absurd is a revolt against standard forms of literature and drama," said Dan Heath, graduate student in theater and director of the play. "It pokes fun at upper-middle class conservative values." Heath said the play emphasizes the characters' lack of communication skills and their self-centeredness. "It's a lot like an abstract painting — you're not sure what it is, but you like it," he said. "The main characters think they're adults. They look like adults and walk like adults, but in their speech and relation with one another they are really like small children. One minute they're laughing, and the next they're crying." The set for the show was designed with the intention of bringing out the immaturity of the characters in a physical sense. "The set is normally an upper-middle class English living room, but I searched very hard to find something unique," Heath said. "To go along with their infantile psychological states, we made the set a nursery room with giant alphabet blocks and toys, which represents their psychological immaturity." Heath said he wanted this production to stand out from other interpretations of this piece, but was at first unaware of the challenges this play actually would present. "I'm doing this for my graduate thesis project, and I was honestly quite interested in it because it is a very short play and very open-ended," he said. "I thought that if I had trouble I could apply any meaning to it that I wanted to. But what I found out was that it was such a well-written play that everything had to work together or it wouldn't work at all." Heath said the unification aspect was the most significant. "We really had to have a unified production or the audience would be completely lost," he said. "But the designers have gone out of their way to bring my ideas into reality." Heath said he is hoping for a good audience turnout. "I really have a wonderful cast and crew — a good mix of veterans of K-State theater and new faces," he said. "They've worked really hard, and they're just dying for an audience."

'Rocky Horror' virgins beware, movie, auction return to K-State

Popular cult film to be shown at midnight on Friday

By JEFF ELLIOTT
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The famed cult classic "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" will make its way back to campus at midnight on Friday in Ahearn Field House. This musical comedy, which is rated R, is a spoof of the science fiction and horror genres. The film is notorious both for its cult status and the crowd participation opportunities that exist. The infamous virgin auction takes place before the film begins. The virgins, those who are seeing the film for the first time, appear before the crowd and do various things such as sing or dance before they are accepted as a member of the audience. Audience members may bid for the virgin using a shoe, old issues of the Collegian or other creative objects. This ritual gets the crowd into the film, and it makes for a more enjoyable time for everyone involved. This year's masters of ceremonies will be "Rocky Horror" veterans Mary Renee Smith and Kevyn Jacobs. "The best thing about having it in Manhattan is the fact that it is in Manhattan," Smith said. "I don't know of any other place around here, besides, say, Kansas City, that shows 'The Rocky Horror Picture Show.'" Smith said audience members are encouraged to dress in Halloween costumes or as characters in the movie. "Wearing costumes helps get people more into it, which makes it a better time for everyone," Smith said. "The show is a cult film, so the best way to see it is with other people." The $3 admission fee also provides viewers with a bag of assorted goodies, which include toast, newspaper, a playing card and rice. These items are to be used in conjunction with lines and scenes from the movie, for the prop portion of the audience participation the film is famous for. Audience participation also involves talking and responding to the on-screen characters and dancing the Time Warp, the instructions for which are in the chorus of the song. Misty Kelley, Union Program Council program adviser, said she advised showing up early for the film. "Last year's show attracted a crowd of around 300 to 400 people. This year, a larger crowd is expected and only 500 seats are available," Kelly said. Ahearn's doors will open at 11:30 p.m.

CATS

Cats have more weapons than a street gang in Chicago. The Hawks, giving up more than 31 points a game, won't be able to keep the Cats under their season average of 53.

The Cats will score more often than KU's finest, Wilt Chamberlain.

But go ahead, Hawk fans. Tell me how in the world you stand a chance. I'm dying to know. If you want, you can even throw around the generic insults.

Go ahead and tell me K-State's schedule is weak. Of course, Illinois State, UAB and North Texas — the Hawks' non-conference competition — aren't really all that spectacular, either. It won't matter how weak the schedule is when KU loses by seven touchdowns.

Go ahead and tell me I'm a hick because I'm a K-State student. I grew up in the Los Angeles area, though, and let me tell you: Lawrence isn't exactly the big city.

Go ahead and tell me we go cow-tipping for fun. Nah, we drink beer, just like you do. And we go hunting for chickenhawks, too.

Go ahead and tell me K-State doesn't provide a quality education. I'll tell you about the 59 Rhodes, Truman, Marshall and Goldwater scholars we've had in the past 13 years, more than any other public university in the nation.

Go ahead and tell me about basketball season. But watch your back, because the Cats have a better chance at beating the Hawks in basketball this year than the Hawks have at beating the Cats in football Saturday.

Go ahead and tell me how your Hawks actually stand a chance at winning Saturday. I'll send you a copy of the game story once it's over.

The Hawks are like a pack of Chihuahuas — they look so cute when they run around barking, but you know they're gonna get knocked off their paws by cats someday. For the Hawks, that day is Saturday. Those cats wear purple.

It's too bad Kansas is only the fifth-best team in the state, behind K-State, Emporia State, Pittsburg State and Wichita Southeast.

Try to avoid injuries, Hawks. That's all you have to play for.

Here's your final: K-State 59, Kansas 10.

LOAN.

If you're stuck with a (federally insured) student loan that's not in default, the Army might pay it off. If you qualify, we'll reduce your debt — up to $65,000. Payment is either 1/3 of the debt or $1,500 for each year of service, whichever is greater.

You'll also have training in a choice of skills and enough self-assurance to last you the rest of your life. Get all the details from your Army Recruiter.

Netters set to battle Jayhawks, Sooners

By Brent Stover
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Much like the K-State football team, the Wildcat volleyball team will travel down Interstate 70 this weekend for its own version of the Sunflower State Showdown.

The Cats will take to the court Friday night against Kansas, a team that is 14-9 overall and 4-7 in the Big 12 conference.

"We always get up for KU, just because it is KU," sophomore Kelle Branting said. "One of our goals every year is that, no matter what, KU's not going to beat us."

The two teams met on Sept. 26 in Manhattan, with the Cats winning the match in four games.

The Jayhawks, however, won the first game in that contest, snapping K-State's home-court winning streak of 18 games.

"They came out really fired up," Branting said. "But they just couldn't seem to sustain that energy over a period of time."

The Hawks are the fourth-best blocking team in the Big 12, averaging 2.88 blocks per game.

Individually, Amanda Reyes is fifth in the league at 1.54 blocks per game, on pace to take over the lead in the KU record books.

"I've seen an improvement in just their whole program," Wildcat coach Jim McLaughlin said. He said he's seen them play both harder and faster in recent years.

The Jayhawks are fresh off a tough victory over Oklahoma, whom they played Wednesday night in Lawrence.

After winning the first two games of the match, KU dropped games three and four. However, the Hawks preserved the match with an 18-16 win in the fifth game.

K-State will play the Sooners on Saturday night in Norman.

The Wildcats swept the Sooners 3-0 in their first meeting on Sept. 25. K-State hit .321 in the match, including a stellar .367 in the third game.

With the loss to KU, Oklahoma now is 7-16 on the season, with a 1-10 mark in league play.

Oklahoma's only Big 12 win came in five games over Missouri. The Sooners also stand as the only team in the conference to lose to Iowa State this year.

The strength of the Sooners is their outstanding service game. Oklahoma leads the league at 1.78 aces per game.

Heading into the weekend, the Cats are fourth in the conference at 23-11 overall and 7-3 in league play. K-State trails Texas and Colorado by two games in the standings.

"Things just keep building and building," Branting said. "We just keep getting better. As that happens, our confidence just keeps growing."

Friday night's match against KU will start at 7:30. Saturday's contest against Oklahoma gets underway at 7 p.m.

GLENN

pens on down the line, but today is beautiful and great, and Hawaii is, I just can't even describe it," Glenn said.

The crew took note the moment Glenn surpassed his previous flight time of four hours, 55 minutes and 23 seconds. "I'm now doubled on my space time and building up every second," he told mission control.

Scott Carpenter, watching the liftoff with the two other surviving Mercury astronauts from the press site four miles away, sent his best wishes to the crew and reprised his immortal benediction from 1962: "Good luck, have a safe flight and once again, Godspeed, John Glenn."

It took 11 attempts over two months for Glenn to blast off on America's first manned orbital flight. This time, a single try was enough; the weather was perfect and the countdown was interrupted only by a minor alarm problem and then five stray planes that delayed liftoff 19 minutes and 34 seconds. The pilots were angling for good views of the launch.

What would have been a routine science flight attracting little notice outside space circles was transformed into a media spectacle by Glenn's participation.

Hundreds of thousands of people who started jamming beaches and roads days ago cheered as Glenn and his ship soared toward the horizon, just as so many did a generation and more before. Some burst into tears, others applauded and still others embraced in joy. Even the T-shirt and junk food hawkers paused to witness this inspiring moment in space history.

"It was the coolest thing I ever saw," said 7-year-old Sam Prince of St. Louis.

Millions more watched America's 123rd human spaceflight on television, including schoolchildren whose parents weren't even born when Glenn rocketed away the first time, and older people who drew inspiration from Glenn's exploits.

"I think he's doing it for us, for senior citizens. He is showing what we can do. We're not all sitting around doing nothing," Adelaide Samuelson, 91, said at a nursing home in Wallingford, Conn.

SHOWDOWN

ging rights hasn't lost its luster.

"It means more than just to win a game," he said. "There's a lot of implications involved. It's a recruiting battle. It's pride for the guys who are from Kansas, so there are a lot of things involved in this game."

As the Sunflower Showdown series prepares to resume tomorrow, the theme for both squads seems to be respect.

For KU, a victory would help to establish its credibility and prove the Colorado victory wasn't a fluke. For K-State, another win would continue to solidify an impressive record and make a case for the BCS Championship Game.

Although Snyder said the Hawks might be riding a wave of emotion following last weekend's goal post-tearing victory, he said the Cats would approach game eight and its opponent the same as the first seven.

"We prepare for every opponent the same, with or without goal posts," Snyder said.

BIG 12
CONFERENCE

Women's cross country squad wins Big 12 title

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLE

For the first time ever, a K-State athletic team has won a Big 12 Conference championship.

Before you start sending the football team congratulatory cards, though, congratulate the women's cross country team. It beat second-place finisher and No. 21 Colorado to earn the trophy on Saturday at Pioneer's Park in Lincoln, Neb.

With a combined score of 78 — 21 points better than Colorado and 32 better than third-place Missouri — the Wildcats grabbed their first conference title since 1992 and their third conference championship overall.

"It feels pretty good," assistant coach Michael Smith said. "All we asked is for the girls to run to the best of their abilities, and when they do that, that can bring you the championship. That is what happened."

K-State placed four runners in the top 15. Sophomore Korene Hinds led the Wildcats with a sixth-place finish. Freshman Amanda Crouse, sophomore Annie Wetterhus and freshman Ekaterini Fotopoulou placed seventh, eleventh and fifteenth, respectively.

"It was a very good meet," Smith said.

"One of our objectives going in was to place four runners in the top 15. If we did that, we knew we could be in the top three."

Ranked 18th in the country going into the meet, the Cats entered the Big 12 Championship riding a hot streak. The team placed eighth at the NCAA pre-meet on Oct. 10 in Lawrence and won the Auburn Invitational on Oct. 18. "We have been on a roll lately," head coach Randy Cole said. "We just carried that into the meet. Our girls just got right up there and stuck with the plan of attack by getting good positioning." Cole said K-State stayed poised throughout the race.

"In the last half mile of the race, other runners started fading," he said. "But our girls just stuck with it. They stayed calm and maintained their positions throughout the race."

Smith said the championship wasn't a surprise.

"It's a great accomplishment," he said. "We're not surprised. We were quite certain that our girls were good enough to be in the top three."

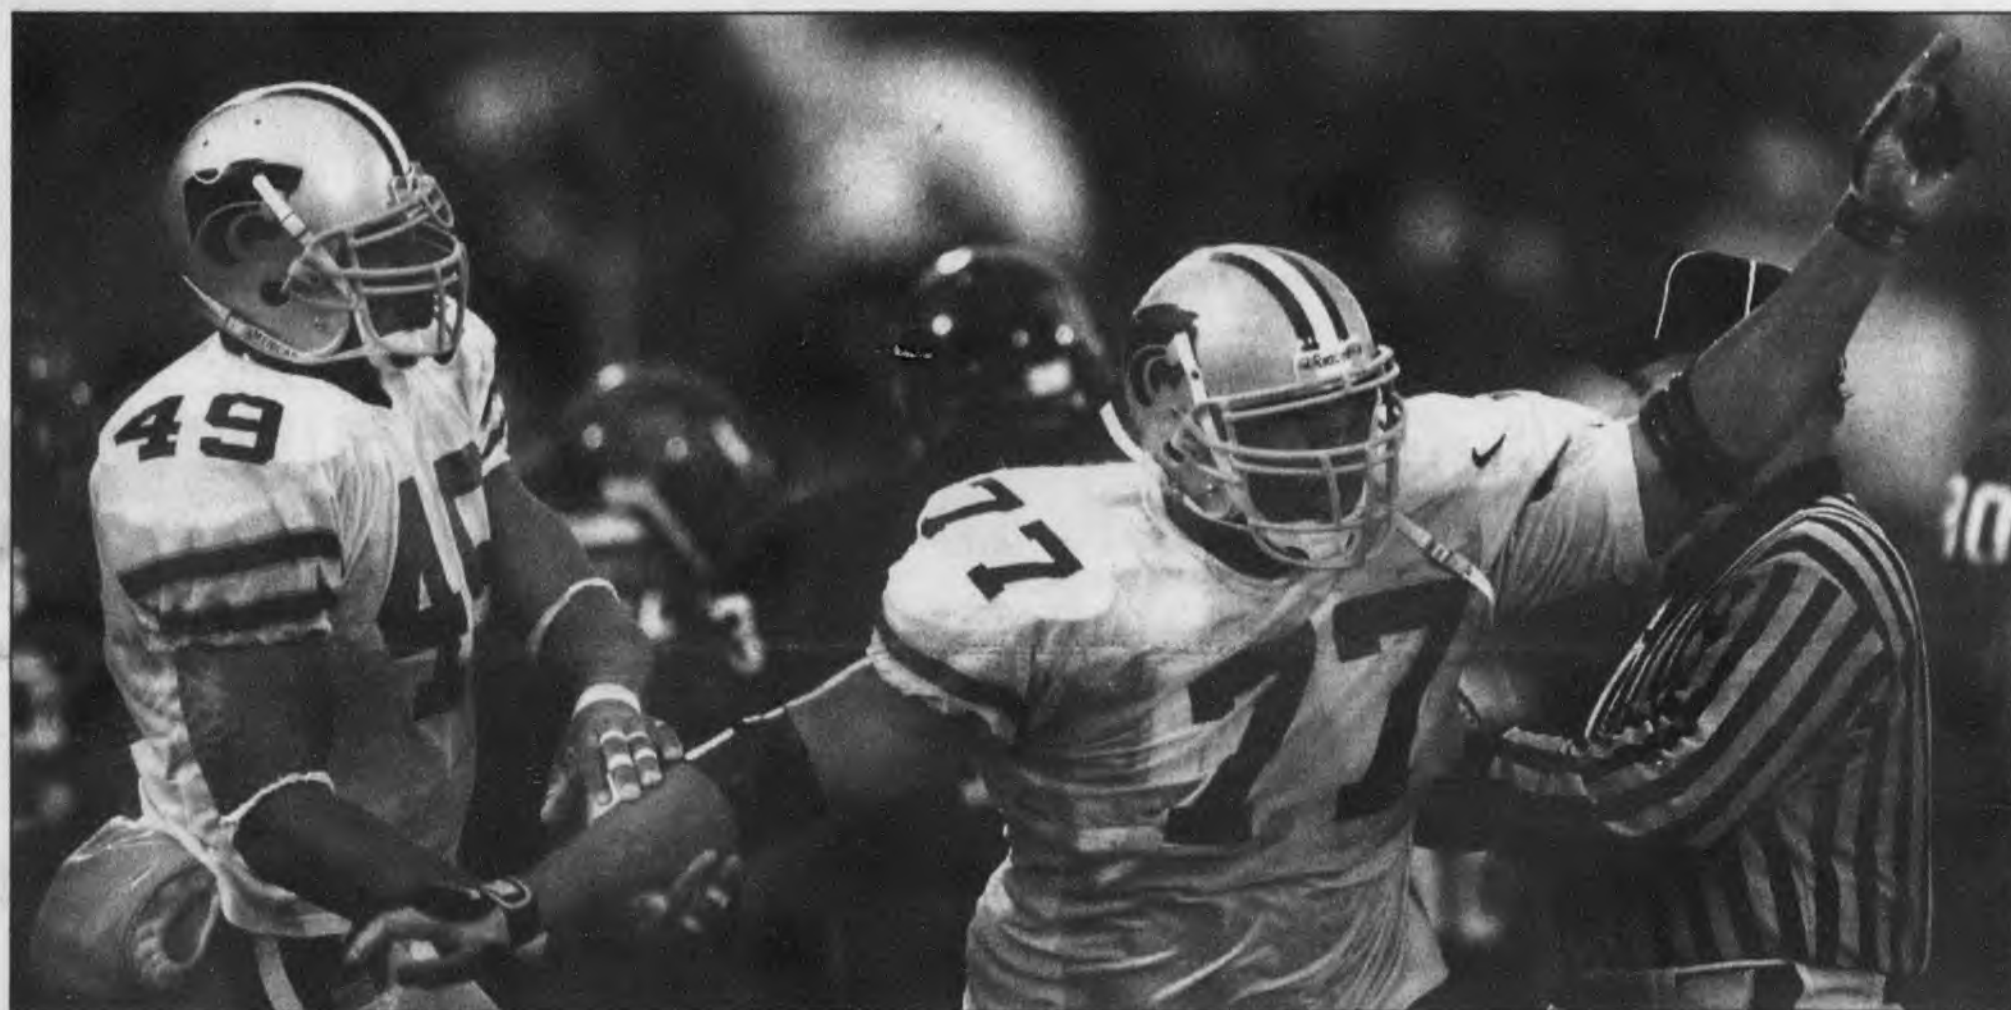

The K-State men's cross country team placed fifth in the Big 12, led by sophomore speedster Brandon Jessop, who raced to 10th place.

The next stop for the cross country team is the NCAA regionals in Wichita. The top-two teams in each regional move on to the NCAA Championships, but nine at-large bids will be determined by team performances during the season.

"We can be right in the hunt," Cole said. "Even if we were a solid third at regionals, that could be worth an at-large bid."

"But we want an automatic berth. We just have to run like we have been and just keep on stepping it up."

Iraq demands Security Council lifts sanctions

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq sent a defiant message to the United Nations on Sunday, declaring it will not renew cooperation with U.N. weapons inspectors — even if threatened with military action — unless the Security Council begins moving to lift devastating trade sanctions.

Vice President Taha Yassin Ramadan said there will be no cooperation before Iraq's demands are met. Not even a threat of force would make Baghdad back down, he said.

The statements were the first Iraqi response to the U.N. Security Council's condemnation of Baghdad's decision Saturday to ban U.N. weapons inspectors from working in the country.

In Washington, D.C., National Security Council spokesman David Leavy said President Clinton's national security advisers were reviewing the situation, and all options remain on the table.

Defense Secretary William Cohen, who canceled a weeklong Asian tour to return to

Threats of military action will not deter Iraqis from being uncooperative

Washington for strategy discussions, said the United States prefers to act with its allies to resolve the latest standoff with Iraq, but retains the option of unilateral military action. However, there seemed little chance of an immediate military response.

No additional U.S. forces were being moved to the Persian Gulf region, and U.S. forces had not been placed on alert, Pentagon spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Anthony Cooper said in Washington.

Earlier this year, the United States rushed warplanes to the gulf and threatened military strikes against Iraq if Baghdad refused to cooperate fully with the weapons inspectors. That crisis was defused when U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan traveled to Baghdad in February and secured an Iraqi pledge of cooperation.

On Sunday, Ramadan said, "Iraq does not fear the threat of the United States, because it has been threatening Iraq for the past eight years."

U.N. sanctions limit Iraq's sale of oil, ban air travel and bar most trade deals. They were imposed to punish Iraq for its 1990 invasion of Kuwait, which led to the Persian Gulf War.

The Security Council has said sanctions will not be lifted until the U.N. Special Commission, which oversees weapons inspections, certifies that Iraq has eliminated its weapons of mass destruction.

France and Russia, Security Council members that have taken more lenient positions on relaxing the sanctions in the past, rebuked Iraq and called for compliance with the U.N. Special Commission. Russia warned Baghdad to weigh carefully all the negative consequences of its decision.

Israel, which came under the fire of Iraqi missiles seven years ago, warned the international community Sunday that Iraq still posed a danger and called for continued weapons inspections.

Iraqi officials again said Sunday that they have met all of the U.N. requirements, and the embargo should be lifted.

Deputy Prime Minister Tariq Aziz said the sanctions haven't been lifted because of American pressure and American blackmail of the Security Council and the international community.

He said Iraq would reverse its decision to end cooperation with the monitors only if the council members decided to lift sanctions.

"If they refuse, we will stick to our stand," he said.

Aziz, in an interview with CNN, said he characterized the commission, known as UNSCOM, as a subsidiary of Israel's Mossad spy agency and the CIA.

"Why should we go on working with UNSCOM?" Aziz said. "Working with UNSCOM is bitter, and it's too expensive. If you are ready to tolerate bitterness and hardship ... you expect the sanctions should be lifted."

Voters to decide fate of 1/4-cent sales tax

By MIRANDA HALE AND MATT KREPS
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voters will have the opportunity to set their sales tax Tuesday.

A question on the ballot will ask voters to approve or fail a quarter-cent sales-tax increase to continue funding economic development in Riley County. The current half-cent sales tax ends Dec. 31. It will be replaced by a half-cent tax to pay for the new Riley County Law Enforcement Center to be built next year.

The economic-development tax finances the Economic Development Opportunity Fund. The fund draws new companies to Manhattan that fulfill initiatives set by the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board.

Manhattan mayor Steve Hall said these initiatives include diversifying the economy, broadening the tax base and less-

Last-second field goal beats Chiefs

By DOUG TUCKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — When the New York Jets got the ball on Kansas City's 43 with 1:50 left in a 17-17 tie, Vinny Testaverde had a man-to-man talk with his teammates.

"This is what great teams do — they finish off tough games on the road and go home with wins," he said in the huddle.

Then they did exactly that. Testaverde guided his team to the 19, and John Hall kicked a 32-yard field goal at the gun for a 20-17 victory.

"You could feel the electricity in the huddle. The guys were determined to get it done," Testaverde said.

The Jets (5-3) have won five of six and created a four-way tie atop the AFC East.

It was the third-straight loss for the fading Chiefs, who are 4-4 for just the first time since 1992 and losers of back-to-back home games for the first time since Marty Schottenheimer became head coach in 1989.

Walk, speech highlight Violence Against Womyn Awareness Week

By KELLY EVENSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women of K-State and the surrounding community will get a chance to speak out against violence this week.

Violence Against Womyn Awareness Week begins today with a number of activities that deal with making the campus and the community aware of violence against women.

"Violence against women causes a lot of damage," said Lori Kieffer, senior in social work and women's studies and co-director of the awareness week. "This is something we cannot turn away from."

The Clothesline Project will be displayed from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. in the Union Alcove today through Wednesday.

The project displays T-shirts on a clothesline that tell women's stories of rape and abuse.

Thursday night, Take Back the Night will begin at 7 in the free-speech zone. Kieffer said the purpose is to show that women are not afraid to walk alone on campus at night. After a march across campus, the rally will end at the free-speech zone with Melissa Divine, professor of women's studies, speaking on race awareness.

"Any girl on campus is afraid to walk alone at night, and they shouldn't be," said Jennel Nicely, senior in family studies and human services and co-director of the awareness week. "We shouldn't be scared to walk alone, and we shouldn't cover violence up like it doesn't happen."

Another project in conjunction with the awareness week is "Rooms in the Dark." The play, by Donna Davenport, is being sponsored by Ebony Company. It includes topics from female rivalry to rape and abuse and will be presented in the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium at 5:30 p.m. Monday and Thursday and at 2 p.m. Saturday.

The keynote speaker for the awareness week will be Charles Derry. Derry, from the Gender and Violence Institute in Minnesota, will be giving a presentation on manhood, rape and power at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Union Forum Hall.

"Violence goes hidden, like it doesn't happen here. We are trying to promote awareness that it does happen," Nicely said.

A three-week self-defense course will begin at 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at the Women's Center. The course is free and open to anyone, but all of those interested must sign-up at the center prior to the beginning of the course.

An awareness dinner will be at 5 p.m. Thursday in the Gold Room of the Derby Dining Center. Judy Davis, director of the Manhattan Crisis Center, will be speaking on general violence and abuse.

Both Nicely and Kieffer said the awareness week is an opportunity for all women on campus and in the community to stand up against violence and let people know that it is a problem.

"I have seen a lot of my friends affected by the violence against women. This is a chance to speak out and an opportunity to stand up and say we are tired of this," Kieffer said.

Group begins month of awareness events

Native American Student Body is kicking off National Indian Heritage Month by sponsoring its first Indian Awareness Week.

NASB will have meetings, sponsor activities and present speakers this week to raise awareness of its culture.

"We are bringing predominant people in the Indian culture to the K-State community to help people understand our culture and to help us celebrate the beginning of Indian Heritage Month," said Tamara Goodson, Otoe/Iowa tribe member and NASB president.

NASB usually celebrates American Indian heritage month in April, but this year it decided to celebrate a week of awareness in November to recognize its culture and raise funds for activities in the spring.

Osage tribe member Jerry Shaw, instructor of minority studies at Wichita State University, will speak at 2 p.m. Thursday in Union 207. Shaw's lecture will focus on native culture and why it is important to have cultural awareness.

A powwow celebration will begin at 3 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House. Throughout the powwow, different participation dances will be taking place to raise funds for the events in April.

All events during the week are free and open to the public.

"We welcome all ages and races to come and see first hand who we are as a people and what we are doing to keep our culture alive," Goodson said.

Rains cause flooding, evacuation in Wichita

WICHITA — Heavy rains in south-east Kansas have caused severe flooding and forced the evacuation of dozens of homes, officials said.

A state of local emergency was declared Sunday in Butler and Sedgwick counties, where more than 8 inches of rain had fallen since Friday.

The hardest-hit areas were Whitewater, Augusta and El Dorado in Butler County, and Wichita and Colwich in Sedgwick County.

No injuries were reported.

Some unofficial rainfall gauges detected as many as 11 inches of rain in the northern part of Butler County.

About 100 homes were evacuated voluntarily throughout Butler County. Most of the evacuations were in Augusta and near low-lying areas in Andover, Cassoday and El Dorado, Schmidt said.

In Wichita, fire and police crews used boats and city buses to evacuate more than a dozen homes and at least two senior-citizen centers. All of the evacuations were in the western part of the city and near Cowskin Creek. Evacuations also were reported in nearby Maize.

There was a chance for more rain in Sedgwick and Butler counties through Thursday.

Death toll from storm rises after mudslides

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Rescue workers recovered hundreds of bodies Sunday from communities buried when a crater lake overflowed and sent mud and rock hurtling down a volcano onto villages below. The death toll blamed on Hurricane Mitch rose to 978.

Authorities said they feared many more bodies would be found in 10 villages at the foot of the Casitas Volcano in northern Nicaragua.

Mitch was one of the most violent hurricanes to hit the Caribbean, causing heavy rain and floods as it cut a fatal path along the coasts of Honduras, Nicaragua and other Central American countries.

Rescue workers recovered 360 bodies in four villages near Posoltega, about 50 miles northwest of Managua.

A river of mud and rubble collapsed on the villages late Friday or early Saturday after a lake near the volcano's peak overflowed and caused part of the mountain to crumble, Army spokesman Milton Sandoval said.

Only 92 of the estimated 2,000 area residents had been found alive, some injured, and the remainder were listed as missing, Sandoval said.

Wefald, city residents gather for hunger dinner

By JEFF SUTTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A few people ate the full-course meal. Some received the basic dinner.

Others weren't quite as lucky. Manhattan residents gathered Sunday at the K-State Student Union for the annual Mayor's Holiday Tree Hunger Dinner Event to raise money for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"It's really to bring attention to the needs people in the community have, especially during the holiday season," Manhattan mayor Steve Hall said.

The event recognized hunger worldwide and locally as different proportions of meals were distributed.

One person at each table received a full-course meal including salad, beef, potatoes and pie. Two others received a more basic meal of turkey. To represent the large number of hungry people in the world, the remaining five places received water to drink and a plate of casserole.

"Everybody pays $15 no matter what meal they receive," said Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

The event benefits underprivileged families by raising money for Thanksgiving and Christmas food baskets. Bramhall said 1,500 Thanksgiving baskets and 1,800 Christmas baskets were distributed last year.

President Jon Wefald was the featured speaker at the dinner. He said the world population has reached 6 billion people, while 1.2 billion of those people are hungry and poor.

"Of that 1.2 billion, the great majority are women, children and the elderly," Wefald said. "There is no doubt that poverty and hunger exist today. It is still an epidemic."

Wefald said 35 million people in the United States are defined as hungry and poor, which translates to Manhattan residents as well.

"There is a huge need for the Flint Hills Breadbasket program," he said. "Just with the Christmas tree program, over 5,200 people participated and received food for Christmas 1997."

Wefald said 32 percent of Manhattan and Ogdan, Kan., school children get a free or reduced-fee lunch through the school lunch program. He also noted that 7,200 people participated in the food-bank program, which accounts for 15 to 20 percent of the Manhattan community.

Therefore, Wefald said people in the Manhattan community are going to bed hungry every night.

"We have to always make sure we have people who care," Wefald said. "It takes a program like this to make sure we don't let the have-nots disappear in front of our eyes."

Research in grain science department uncovers cholesterol-lowering supplement

By JAMI STUMP

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Individuals with high cholesterol might have the option of purchasing a new over-the-counter, cholesterol-lowering dietary supplement due to research in K-State's grain science department.

Research has uncovered a surprising degree of cholesterol-lowering due to soy fiber extracted from soybeans, Carol Klopfenstein, professor of grain science, said.

Klopfenstein, along with fellow faculty members John Brent, assistant professor of grain science, and Carole Setser, professor of foods and nutrition, have tested the product on lab animals but is waiting to test it on humans.

Before testing can be done on humans, further research needs to be done, Klopfenstein said.

"We need to establish the extrusion conditions of the soy fiber in order to get maximum cholesterol-lowering effects," Klopfenstein said. "We really didn't know when we started our research that the extrusion process would enhance the effect as much as it does."

The soy-fiber supplement works in two ways. It makes it harder for the body to absorb fat and cholesterol, and it causes the production of compounds that could prevent the body's production of cholesterol, Klopfenstein said.

For those volunteers with high cholesterol, this option is more appealing than current medications, Klopfenstein said. Cholesterol-lowering drugs such as cholestyramine are expensive and unpleasant to take and have negative health effects, she said.

Although tests have not been done on humans, the supplement is unlikely to have negative side effects, Klopfenstein said.

Setser has been involved in the taste-sensory aspect of the project.

"We want a product that tastes good to the consumer when they take it," Setser said.

Taste-testing will take place during development stages and then later on by the consumer.

The research is being funded with a $42,500 grant from the Kansas Soybean Commission.

The Soybean Commission wanted research done to develop new value-added products related to soybeans and soy fiber, Klopfenstein said.

Manhattan home values have increased the last few years.

Sales tax needs support, structure

When you go to the polls Tuesday, you'll find a proposal on the ballot that the Manhattan City Commission wants you to address.

It wants you to instruct it on whether it should levy a new quarter-cent sales tax for economic development. The new tax would function as a continuation of a half-cent tax that's been in effect for the past four years.

Manhattan residents now pay 6.9 cents on the dollar for goods bought within the city. Around the time the old economic-development tax concludes, a half-cent sales tax already approved for Riley County will come into effect to build the new Riley County Law Enforcement Center.

If the new tax is approved, the amount we pay will be at 7.15 cents on the dollar.

The question is one of justification. Does the tax generate enough jobs to warrant its cost?

After bringing more than 600 jobs at a dozen different businesses to Manhattan, the economic-development tax has proven it can build our community.

Many of these jobs pay more than minimum wage, making them prime targets for students seeking experience and a paycheck that covers the cost of their education.

Other full-time workers coming to fill these jobs will purchase homes in the community. As homeowners, they, too, will add to the tax base available to fund Manhattan.

What's more, those 600 jobs come from only a half-cent from every dollar spent.

The tax also has been a learning experience for the city. After a rocky start, Manhattan learned how to choose businesses that not only would remain solvent but also generate the jobs they promised. In fact, two of the more recent businesses, Manko Window Systems Inc. and Sykes Enterprises Inc., already have exceeded the number of jobs they promised.

However, the city also has learned it needs to plan now to make the most of its opportunities later. As questions surface about where to put new businesses and how to manage reports from companies already receiving funds, the city can step back now to decide how it can best manage Manhattan's growth.

Recently, the commission heard concerns from the board that supervises the economic-opportunity fund about how to handle company reports on the use of the money. The city changed some of its policies about how the board handles companies' requests for tax assistance to allow for better communication between the two bodies.

These changes and other questions about Manhattan's growth are important ones to consider. Some careful planning now would help the city become even stronger through the use of these funds in the future.

Voters should support economic-development in Manhattan. City officials should remember that a quarter-cent sales tax is nothing to be taken lightly. Careful steps should be taken to ensure that the economic development funds are disbursed wisely.

Vote yes on the quarter-cent sales tax question.

Brighter lights needed at crosswalks

Editor,

I am a student at K-State who is concerned about the safety of the crosswalks on Claflin Road near Moore and Haymaker halls.

The lighting at these two crosswalks is not sufficient enough for drivers to see pedestrians. I know this from personal experience and observation. I have been driving the speed limit and still found myself having trouble seeing pedestrians in the crosswalks. My observations while not in my car also support the fact that drivers cannot see pedestrians. In a matter of 15 minutes, I witnessed several near-misses at those crosswalks.

I have talked with the K-State Police, and they said these are some of the worst crosswalks on campus. The number of students who use these crosswalks at night make them significant safety problems for the campus.

It saddens me to see it takes an accident and an injury to a fellow Wildcat for the administration to make a change like at the Goodnow Hall crosswalk. K-State needs to take a pro-active approach instead of a reactive one and install brighter, more concentrated lighting systems at the crosswalks near Haymaker and Moore halls.

sophomore in business

To rake or not to rake

It's that time of year when control freaks take to their yards in the annual battle on leaves

VIEWPOINT

MARY RENEE SMITH

I live in a neighborhood full of big, old, beautiful trees. Trees have leaves. Leaves turn extravagant colors this time of year and then fall off the trees, hence the other name for autumn.

It is fall, and that's the time in all neighborhoods where it becomes clear there are three kinds of people in the world: rakers, non-rakers and un-rakers.

I am an un-raker. My mom is a non-raker, and my neighbors are rakers.

Even if you don't have a lawn right now, you know which one you are. It probably has a lot to do with whether your father was a raker. I think it is a hereditary thing. My dad lives in Florida. That makes him a non-raker by geographical location, but he is an un-raker at heart.

Being an un-raker is a way of life. Not only do I not rake, but I take time to enjoy the fruits of nature. I like the way my front yard looks covered in the ever-clashed multicolored carpet of autumn. The sound of children shuffling through the leaves on Halloween is something I look forward to each year. I have been known to walk through my yard kicking leaves into the air. Un-rakers are also notorious for not shoveling the snow from entire sidewalks and not using sprinklers to water the lawn.

I would never take a violent tool like a rake to my yard and harvest the offerings of the trees only to place them in black bags by the curb.

In the middle of this debate are the non-rakers. They do not always have an exact stance on leaves and the position of said leaves this time of year. Many non-rakers are just lazy or are renters and not homeowners.

Some non-rakers might sweep away the leaves that happen to have the misfortune of falling on the sidewalk or steps, but other non-rakers leave the leaves in the yard to decompose the way nature intended.

Rakers, on the other hand, have declared war on leaves.

I hate to psychoanalyze those who rake, but I just can't help it. Rakers are control freaks. They just have to show their ability to control nature and everything in it. Raking might be rooted in a hatred of gravity. There is also some deep-seated need by rakers to show they have evolved and can use tools.

I do make an attempt to understand those who rake. The lawn might suffer under the leaves. The leaves might freeze during the long winter and kill the grass beneath. For these reasons, I do not feel disdain for my raking brethren. A rake is a simple tool, and raking is a way to get out and enjoy the beautiful fall weather.

However, there are those who can not stop with an elementary tool such as a rake or a broom. There are some whose repugnance for the life cycle of foliage requires the use of power tools.

I hate to psychoanalyze those who rake, but I just can't help it. Rakers are control freaks. They just have to show their ability to control nature and everything in it. Raking might be rooted in a hatred of gravity.

There are the leaf blowers, noisy contraptions that serve only to push the leaves into the street or the neighbor's lawn. As far as I can tell, those who use leaf blowers have grasped the concept of wind.

There are the mulching lawn mowers. I have witnessed grown men with tiny lawns using riding mowers to chew up leaves into what resembles orange confetti.

My personal favorite power tool is a contraption that looks like a backpack from "Ghostbusters." One of my neighbors has one. It is basically a vacuum. I watched this guy vacuum his entire lawn last weekend. Anal retentive doesn't begin to describe people who vacuum their yards.

I guess if you need a way to feel in control and battle something, raking leaves is better than duking it out with your neighbors.

Symptoms of disorder can be present in everyday life

VIEWPOINT

CORBIN H. CRABLE

The bell rings, signaling the end of another monotonous lecture. You stand up from your seat, and before you leave, you check your spot to make sure you didn't leave anything behind. This wouldn't be a problem — if you didn't check that spot four times before leaving the room. Of course, you can't leave the building without washing your hands — for five minutes straight.

These are only a couple out of dozens of symptoms for people living with Obsessive Compulsive Disorder. Also called the "doubting disease," it is a common disorder affecting thousands of people across the United States.

OCD can be characterized by obsessive thoughts and compulsive behaviors, which can result in overwhelming anxiety. This anxiety only can be alleviated by performing these acts or indulging in these thoughts. Although the exact cause of OCD is unknown, it is theorized that the disorder itself is biological in nature, the result of an imbalance of a chemical called serotonin in the brain. Drug therapy, among others, has been found to be one of the most useful treatments for OCD. Drugs such as Prozac and Paxil, both anti-depressants, also have been known to work in recent years.

Unfortunately, movies like "What About Bob?," starring Bill Murray, take delight in poking fun at OCD by showing the extreme side of the disease. Murray is portrayed in the movie as a man who cannot take a step out of his own house without thoroughly sterilizing his person first, and who babbles incessantly about his jumbled thoughts, much to the dismay of his psychiatrist, portrayed by Richard Dreyfuss.

The sad truth is that OCD isn't quite as funny in the real world. Those who suffer from it appear as normal, everyday people. It could be your best friend, your roommate, your professors or your co-workers.

The little mannerisms you see them do or the annoying little tasks they perform could be a sign of OCD.

Then again, they simply could be little habits. However, don't dismiss it as such too quickly.

If you find yourself checking your seat every time you get up from a lecture, if you fret over small details in your everyday life, or even if you are an obsessive organizer, don't be alarmed, but be on the lookout for any other obsessive thoughts or compulsive actions you might have. Fingernail chewers, beware.

In my experience, OCD, like many mental disorders, is not something you just sit down and think about. Many times, you need help taking the necessary steps to admitting you suffer from it. Otherwise, you'll most likely go through life thinking that your habits and thoughts are a normal part of life.

In reality, though, it is an issue that needs to be addressed before these small mannerisms escalate into something more serious, such as sleep deprivation or a change in diet. Yes, it has been known to happen.

OK, here comes the big plug: If you believe you or someone you know may be suffering from OCD, please be sure to seek assistance immediately ... there, that sounded nice and professional.

I realize this entire column has read like a medical journal, but I hope, if anything, it has served as a warning. Keep a close eye on your actions, because those mannerisms and obsessive thoughts may be more harmful to you than you think.

AIDS Project teaches students about risks

Editor,

I am writing in response to Scott Roney's letter to the editor in Collegian two weeks ago. The amount of education provided by the Regional AIDS Project and Lafene Health Center's SHAPE (Students Helping as Peer Educators) program make me proud to be a K-State student.

Character and values are esteemed at our university. What greater morality can there be than to value human life? It is our belief, as educators, that we should prevent human suffering and death. Educating students about the risks involved with sex does not encourage and condone any one lifestyle, and it often removes the "dangerous and self-destructive" attributes of the sexual activity already occurring on campus.

Roney said that by passing out condoms, K-State is condoning a behavior offensive to the morals of many students. However, a recent poll of college students revealed that more than 80 percent of college students are not virgins when they enroll in college. While I agree that most students are moral individuals, I also would assert that moral people have sex. In fact, by the time college students are seniors, they will have had approximately five sexual partners. Thus, on average, one in eight college students has or will contract a sexually transmitted disease.

Although abstinence is the best method to prevent any consequences of sex, college students are choosing to have sex anyway. SHAPE programs strongly encourage abstinence and monogamy, but the program exists because students need to be informed about the risks of their behavior. Posters espousing the virtues of abstinence are not enough. As long as there is life on our planet, people will be having sex. The safer the better.

Sexual activity, according to Roney, has dire consequences in and of itself "psychologically, emotionally and physically." While there is some truth in this statement, this is not a good argument against educating students to protect themselves. Drinking too much alcohol also has physical, emotional and psychological consequences. Education programs on drinking responsibly combat these negative effects. Yet, when handing out blood alcohol charts, no one complains that the educators are "condoning and promoting" alcoholism and drunkenness. If handing out condoms offends your sensibilities, I am sorry, but it is a necessary measure to prevent further human suffering. When people do contract HIV, their friends and family also feel psychological, emotional and physical trauma.

Roney said he was embarrassed to be a student at Kansas State University, but I argue he would be embarrassed to be a student at any university in the nation. Because college students are sexually active nationwide, no matter where you go to school, some angel will be passing out condoms. No matter what students choose — whether it be abstinence or a lifestyle not considered the norm by "many moral students" — they have a right to be totally informed and prepared for the sexual challenges they will face. Even those of us who are monogamous or married should be aware of the need for testing and know how to protect ourselves. Don't fool yourself into thinking such relationships are normal, moral and safe; 50 percent of people in such relationships cheat on their partners. That is a sobering thought, isn't it?

graduate student in theater and graduate assistant for SHAPE.

Moral non-Christians deserve equal chance

Editor,

It has been quite some time since I have stumbled across a columnist who, in my eyes, believes they have it all figured out. I will admit a lot of journalists/writers, including myself, have strong egos; however, quite a few of us know the difference between confidence and egotism.

In his most recent article, Sam Sackett attempted to divulge an ounce of clarity surrounding Christianity. I sincerely hope I only read Sackett's interpretation of Christianity, because it would scare the hell out of me to discover every Christian thinks as Sam does. For the record, I was born and baptized Catholic, received my first communion and was later confirmed. Point being, I have a hard time listening to Sackett profess the road to immortality.

Before I further my belief, I will state we all have the freedom to choose our own religion. On the off chance you are interested, Sam, for fun, polish your third eye and take a glimpse at all of the wonderful things that exist outside the realm of Christianity.

For starters, Buddha was a great moral teacher, just as Jesus was. However, to dismiss Buddha as only a great moral teacher is a foolish mistake. Buddha was an enlightened being, a pinnacle to the spirituality behind Buddhism. Correct me if I am wrong; Buddhism was founded under Buddha, because he was the only physical form, of this certain spirituality, humankind was given on Earth. On the other side of the coin, Christianity was founded under Jesus Christ, because he was the only physical form we were given.

These founders were both praying to a higher being, in a sense, and both were moral and decent human beings. I am curious, if the only way to be a truly moral and decent person is to follow Jesus Christ, then the Dalai Lama, a Nobel Peace Prize recipient, is not a truly moral and decent human being. I guess the Dalai Lama missed the mark, according to Sackett. You know, that is too bad. I thought he was a good person.

The entirety of this response was not meant to degrade Christianity but to enlighten. Many students on this campus have been raised to follow Jesus Christ and expel all others who think differently. I am not criticizing. We are all entitled to free choice, but let it be clear that people do not have to abandon their respective religion in order to accept new ideas.

My purpose behind this response is to provide insight to the belief that all moral and decent people do not have to follow Christ or worship God. Some of us choose to pray to Allah, some to the Great Spirit, some to Ganesha and some of us even choose to worship the very Earth we walk on. Please try to understand, Sam, Mahatma Gandhi, Chief Seattle, the Dalai Lama and many other great moral teachers did not follow Christ, and yet, they were all moral and decent people.

Understand one thing, Sackett — you did nothing for the clarity surrounding Christianity, in my eyes. In fact, you left me so much more puzzled than I was prior to reading your article. I am not sure what to believe about Christianity now. You have written that you know what it is, but somehow, I do not believe you. You are far from the truth. All I ask of you, Sam, is that you give moral and decent people outside the realm of Christianity a chance. Who knows? You might even run into some people with worth, and you might even like them.

New enrollment plan counterproductive

Editor,

I am writing as a student of K-State who is concerned about the new enrollment plan. I feel that enrolling alphabetically is an unsuccessful way to improve the old plan. First, enrolling in alphabetical groups is unrewarding.

With the new enrollment plan, students who are only a few hours away from senior status hypothetically could enroll after students who are barely juniors.

Second, the new enrollment plan is inconvenient. It allows students to choose their time of enrollment, rather than assigning them one. This will cause already long lines to grow even longer. The new system also will allow 1,000 students to enroll each day. With 1,000 students enrolling at Willard Hall each day, every student will have approximately 24 seconds to enroll. I realize the new system also allows students to enroll using KATS. Unfortunately, a $4 fee is assessed. I don't think as many people will choose KATS as an alternative. Even if only 800 people choose to enroll at Willard, the students only will be lotted 30 seconds to enroll.

K-State should reinstate the old process. It would allow those students who have more hours to enroll first, thereby recognizing students' efforts. It also would help control crowds by planning to enroll fewer students each day and specifying a time for each student. Hopefully, students will push for the reinstatement of enrolling by credit hours. As for this year, I hope you don't waste too much time standing in line.

John Glenn healthy, having fun aboard Space shuttle Discovery

By MARCIA DUNN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — John Glenn is amazing not only his doctors but himself: He's suffering no queasiness whatsoever or any other discomforts in space and feeling so chipper that he's hopped into the shuttle commander's seat a time or two.

"I've snuck up there and sat down a couple of times to see what it feels like, I must admit," the 77-year-old former test pilot said with a laugh.

In his first news conference since rocketing into orbit last week aboard Discovery as the world's oldest space traveler said Sunday that he expected to be nauseous the first day or two considering that two-thirds of all astronauts wind up with "stomach awareness ... or worse."

"I haven't had any of that so far. It's been great and I've been quite comfortable," he said.

Glenn admitted he doesn't care for all the blood draws — "blood letting," as he called it. "But if it can do somebody some good and if we're learning something by it, that's the reason we're up here," he said.

The senator met the press in a TV hookup after the astronauts accomplished one of their main objectives of the flight — setting loose a sun-gazing satellite for two days of scientific flight. The satellite got hung up in orbit last year, and this was its second and last chance to collect solar images.

Two tense minutes passed before the crew radioed down the good news: The Spartan satellite was free of Discovery and twirling exactly as planned.

Glenn interrupted his work in Discovery's laboratory to look over his crewmates' shoulders as they released Spartan.

Even more impressive were his first views of Earth from Discovery.

"To me, that was not only a thrill but an emotional experience also," he said. "To look out and see that once again, it's sort of overwhelming. I know the word 'awesome' gets overused these days, but if anything is really awesome it's looking out from up here and seeing that for the first time on a flight."

Glenn said he prays daily in space, just as he does on Earth. "To look out at this kind of creation out here and not believe in God is, to me, impossible. It just strengthens my faith," he said.

Earlier Sunday, NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin praised Glenn's performance aboard Discovery and said that Glenn was back in space not for publicity purposes but rather for valuable geriatric research. "America owed him a second flight," he said.

REIGNY DAY

By D. SCOTT FRITCHEN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

LAWRENCE — The K-State Wildcats, playing with the creed of champions, left their footprints all over the Kansas Jayhawks and the wet turf of Memorial Stadium on Saturday.

By the time K-State running back Marlon Charles ended the 54-6 onslaught with a 31-yard touchdown run midway through the fourth quarter, it was evident Jayhawk fans had been tricked into believing their team, who upset Colorado a week ago, stood a chance against No. 3 K-State.

Thousands of drenched Wildcat fans, who remained from the announced 43,000, were treated to the most lopsided victory in Sunflower State Showdown history for K-State, who is 8-0 for the first time in school history, leads the Big 12 Conference North division with a 5-0 mark and also extended the nation's second-longest winning streak to 16 games.

"I'm pleased with where we are at this particular point in time," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "They have made some improvement during the course of the year. Obviously, we're not a perfect football team at this particular point in time, but I think we've closed the gap."

K-State did more than enough damage to the Jayhawks, 3-6 and 1-6, whose 44 total yards represented their worst offensive performance in school history.

This wasn't a case of K-State steamrolling a cream puff during a futile game of little circumstance. Kansas' previous 33-17 win over Colorado raised eyebrows around the nation's strongest league and spurred concern among K-State players.

After comparing his last two opponents, Kansas quarterback Jay Alexander, who was sacked by defensive end Monty Beisel twice, drew this conclusion: "(K-State's) defense was a little better than Colorado's."

Kansas managed a measly 3 yards off 33 rushing attempts. After sending quarterback Zac Wegner out with a season-ending injury, K-State's defense shut down running back David Winbush, who rushed 14 times for 19 yards. His longest carry was for 15 yards.

Alexander only completed five of 15 passes for 41 yards. His eight-yard touchdown pass to Michael Chandler ended a 70-yard drive aided by 53 yards in K-State penalties. Kansas coach Terry Allen was flabbergasted inside the locker room.

"We played a fine football team today, there's no question about it," Allen said. "They had outstanding play and lots of talent. It was a long, cold, wet afternoon."

Kansas' pass rush couldn't stop Michael Bishop from completing 16 of 26 attempts for 225 yards and a touchdown. Bishop also gained a season-high 95 yards rushing on 13 carries and scored two touchdowns. K-State gained 334 yards rushing and running backs Eric Hickson, Frank Murphy and Marlon Charles each scored touchdowns. Wide receiver Darnell McDonald's six catches for 80 yards and Aaron Lockett's five for 107 yards helped to baffle KU defenders.

"Rain helps receivers a lot," McDonald said. "We knew exactly where we were trying to go. We made the move, and it was up to the defensive back. If he makes a risky cut and slips and falls, we're going all the way."

Lockett's 47-yard reception over free safety Chad Coellner was Bishop's biggest bomb of the afternoon and put the Wildcats inside the Kansas 10 after KU's only score. Murphy leaped over defenders four plays later to increase K-State's lead to 20-6.

"There's two things important in football, and one is that you have to step up," Snyder said. "There's been times where we'd get somebody on the ropes and then let them go the length of the field on us. That didn't take place today."

K-State's offense continued to score, almost at will. With a 23-6 lead at halftime, K-State now has outscored opponents 238-33 in the first half. The Wildcats scored inside the 20-yard line nine of 11 times. Punter James Garcia's only appearance in the game was to hold for kicker Martin Gramatica, who set a school record with four field goals, only missing on attempts from 40 and 60 yards. Gramatica's 18 points also was the most by a kicker in school history.

"I don't care about the record," Gramatica said. "I still missed two. I don't care if I hit 10. I still missed two."

Gramatica's aim toward perfection echoes Snyder, who said he was disappointed a defender was able to tip the 60-yard attempt. While Kansas gained on average 0.9 yards a play and converted just one of 11 third-down conversions, linebacker Mark Simoneau hesitated to qualify his team's performance as its best ever.

"I don't know that it's the best we've played," he said. "But, we played a pretty good defensive game."

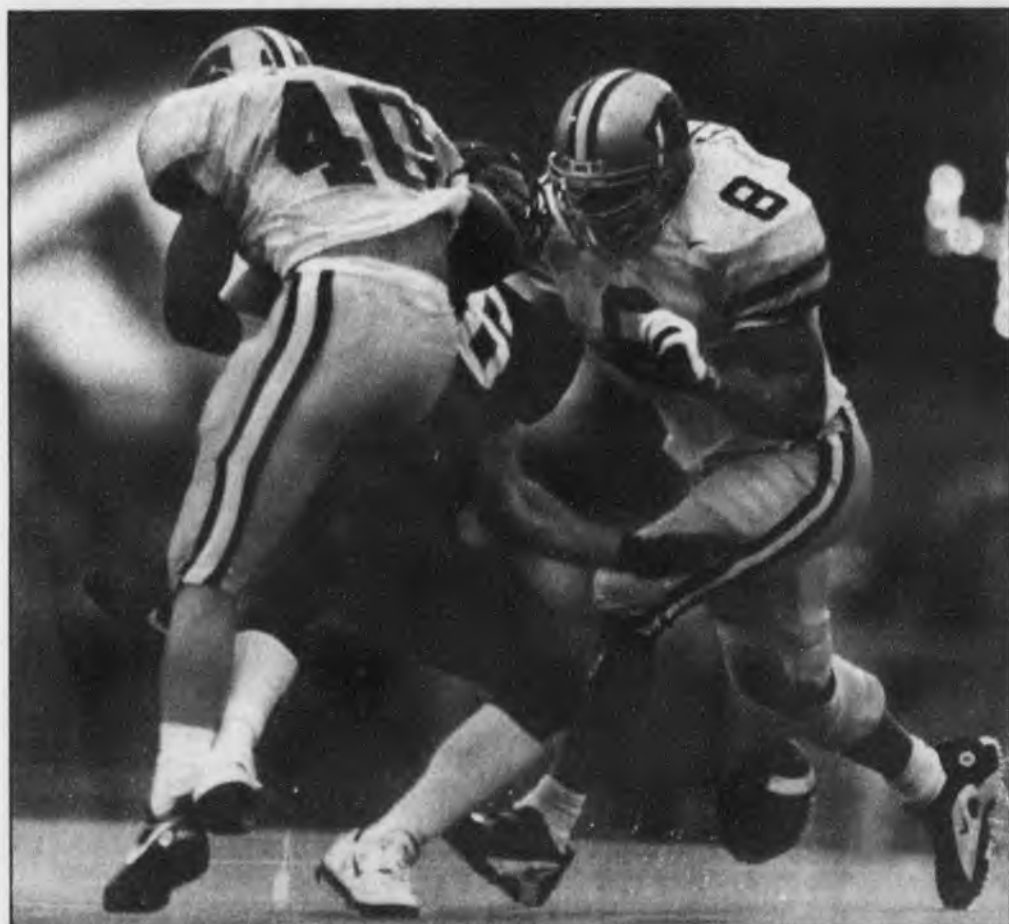

Although Kansas surprised K-State by featuring a no-back offense during the game, Snyder said the defense made necessary adjustments. Travis Ochs and Gerald Neasman didn't play because of injuries, but the biggest concern to Snyder were penalties. K-State had 12 for 111 yards against the Jayhawks.

"I was awfully pleased with the way we played on defense with exception of the penalties," he said. "Outside of that, we played very, very well."

The milestones continue to pile up as K-State heads into its final three regular-season games.

With games remaining against Baylor, Nebraska and Missouri, it appears all the Wildcats can do is overlook an opponent and beat themselves, which as Snyder points out, isn't likely to happen.

"I really believe our football team is pretty good about (keeping focus)," he said. "For 10 years, that's all we've tried to do — play them one game at a time. There's a great focus on that."

K-State safety Jarrod Cooper (40) hits KU wide receiver Michael Chandler (86), causing him to drop the football Saturday at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence.

K-State linebackers Travis Litton (43) and Jeff Kelly (8) gang tackle KU quarterback Zac Wegner (center) during first-quarter action Saturday at Memorial Stadium. On this play, Wegner received a concussion, his second in two weeks. Wegner left the game and did not return.

Lone Jayhawk score comes after 53 yards in penalties on 70-yard Kansas drive

By JOEL WHITE

KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

LAWRENCE — Kansas discovered the most effective way to move the ball against the K-State defense — have the officials walk it down the field for them.

The Jayhawks' only scoring drive in Saturday's game consisted of six plays for 70 yards and two interceptions, both of which were nullified due to K-State infractions prior to the turnover. Of the 70 yards the Jayhawks gained, 53 were due to K-State penalties. That left 17 yards of actual offense in the drive.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the Wildcat defense, which allowed 44 yards in the game, efficiently dismantled the Jayhawk offense, except in one penalty-plagued series midway through the second quarter.

"With the exception of those 12 penalties we had on one snap, I was pleased," Snyder said. "There weren't enough flags to go around."

On second down and 9 with the ball at the K-State 45-yard line, K-State cornerback Dyshod Carter intercepted a Jay Alexander pass. Pass interference was called on Carter. During his run back, flags were thrown on K-State for an illegal block below the knees and a personal

K-State head coach Bill Snyder argues with officials about a three-penalty call against K-State during the second quarter. On second down and 9 with the ball at the K-State 45-yard line, K-State cornerback Dyshod Carter intercepted a Jay Alexander pass. Pass interference was called on Carter. During his run back, flags were thrown on K-State for an illegal block below the knees and a personal foul. On the same drive, KU scored its only points of the game.

al foul. After the game, Snyder was asked if his team ever had received different penalties in one play.

"I don't recall, but we came close to having a fourth. I can assure you that," Snyder said.

The pass interference penalty moved the ball to the K-State 30-yard line, and the personal foul moved it to the 15-yard line.

With the shoving between cornerbacks and receivers throughout the entire first half, Carter said his interference penalty was unnecessary.

"I thought one was a bogus call," Carter said. "I had my hands on him, but I didn't feel like it was the right call at that time. The corners and the receivers were pushing on each other all game, and that one, I don't feel, should have been called."

After a 1-yard loss by Jayhawk running back David Winbush put the ball at the K-State 16-yard line, Alexander was intercepted again, this time by safety Lamar Chapman. The turnover was nullified by another K-State pass interference call.

Two plays later, with the ball at the K-State 8-yard line, Alexander completed a fade pass to Chandler in the corner of the end zone to make the score 13-6. K-State cornerback Jerametrius Butler was tight on Chandler, but he couldn't disrupt the touchdown pass.

In all, the Jayhawks rushed for negative 2 yards and passed for 18 yards in their scoring drive.

K-State linebacker Mark Simoneau said the penalties were disheartening, but the defense bounced back.

"It was frustrating," Simoneau said. "But we just tried to hang in there. They got a pass over the top on us, but after that, we just kind of came back."

Neak Frasty Stomps McCain

Members of K-State's Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority perform in the Neak Frasty Step Show Friday night in McCain Auditorium.

By DANICA COTO
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

The energy was anticipated. The mood was set. The smell of new clothes, bright perfumes and excitement exploded as Alpha Phi Alpha presented the eighth-annual Neak Frasty Step Show on Saturday night in McCain Auditorium.

The event, a fund-raiser for traditionally black fraternities and sororities around the area, once again came to K-State this year, and all groups put together their own song-and-dance acts. First prize in each fraternity and sorority category was $1,000.

In addition to raising money for the fraternities and sororities, the show is a way to showcase black pride and unity through music.

At the beginning of the show, the black national anthem brought the crowd to its feet. Following it were cries of "Represent! Do your thing!"

The fraternities and sororities complied. In a two-hour show, audience members shook McCain as steppers exhausted themselves in a series of frenzied, yet practiced, movements. Clapping their hands, stomping their feet and their canes, they brought energy to the crowd.

It was this atmosphere that reflected the participants' ideologies. "I want people to see the lighter side of the fraternity," Jahseals Seals, University of Missouri-Kansas City, said. "We have cultural events, fund-raisers and community services, but tonight, it's all about showing the fun side."

The steppers fired up the crowd with cries, music and rhythm. "The audience is your friend," DeAndre Singletary, Clark Atlanta University alumnus, said. "That's your opportunity. You feed off the audience."

Marcella Burks, Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority member from K-State, said her group worked hard to provide the audience with a good show. She said they practiced every day for three hours in the month before the show.

K-State's Delta Sigma Theta sorority won the $1,000 prize. The winning fraternity, meanwhile, was Central Missouri State's Alpha Phi Alpha chapter, which also was the winner at last year's Step Show.

"It started right here at K-State. It started and ended here," said Michael Willis, Central Missouri State Alpha Phi Alpha member.

Dressed in khaki slacks, button-down white shirts and suspenders, the members danced to upbeat rhythm and blues.

Delta Sigma Theta member Verneta White said that despite making some mistakes, her sorority's practice paid off.

"I think we won because of our creativity with the Halloween spirit," White said. "We made some mistakes, but we were able to cover them up. We practiced. Practice makes perfect, or semi-perfect."

After the winners were announced, two groups opened for Goodie Mob. As the last group arrived, the floor bounced up and down as if it had a life of its own when Goodie Mob sang songs such as "Sky-High."

The energy was revived at an after-show party at Ahearn Field House.

Play shows tonight, Thursday

By SARAH FLORIE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

"Rooms in the Dark," a compilation of works by Ntozake Shange, will kick off Violence against Womyn Awareness Week with performances tonight and Thursday night at 6 at the Purple Masque Theatre in East Stadium.

Ebony Theatre director and "Rooms" actress Donna Davenport, said the compilation, which started as an abstract idea, has developed into a strong piece with many strong messages.

The performance, presented in cooperation with the Manhattan Women's Crisis Center, combines two Shange works: the well-known 1977 play "For Colored Girls Who've Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuff," and her 1994 novel, "Liliane: Resurrection of the Daughter."

Both pieces, although different, explore many common themes of womanhood. Some themes are lighter, such as identity and female rivalry; others, such as rape and abuse, are a bit heavier with more emotion.

Davenport, senior in theater and women's studies, described "For Colored Girls . . ." as a choreopoem, which is free verse with stage blocking.

"This is a poetry piece from Shange's most famous work," Davenport said.

"Performing this — it lets women know that they are not alone."

Davenport, as well as Tiffany Lee, sophomore in theater; Seraphine Naeymi, senior in mass communications; and Brooke Seithel, senior in theater, make "For Colored Girls . . ." come to life.

Seithel said that it's wonderful to be a part of something where women truly can be heard.

"When I saw the script and how incredible it was, I had to be involved," Seithel said.

"This whole thing is about women becoming strong, having voices and being heard. It's very important."

"Liliane," which stars Davenport, is a solo piece that shows a woman finally breaking through her silence during a therapy session.

"It was very easy to adapt this novel to the stage, because it was already written as dialogue," Davenport said.

Though the two works were written more than 20 years apart, they share a common objective: To inform and educate young women by interpretation and emotional performance.

Davenport said she hopes men as well as women will attend these performances.

"We need men to be understanding of these issues, too," Davenport said.

"Some men may feel that this may be kind of male-bashing when the truth is, it's not."

Ebony Theatre will give all proceeds from "Rooms" to the Manhattan Women's Crisis Center. There is no ticket price, but a $2 donation is suggested.

"Overall, the goal of this project is to influence the minds of the audience while at the same time having them make some kind of physical contribution, that is, a donation to the Crisis Center," Davenport said.

Costumes, virgin auction highlight movie showing

By CORBIN H. CRABLE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Students again donned their fishnet stockings and garter belts to do the Time Warp on Friday night at the annual showing of "The Rocky Horror Picture Show."

The film — a cult classic released in the mid-1970s — was shown at midnight Friday in Ahearn Field House, and was co-sponsored by the Union Program Council's Feature Films and Kaleidoscope Films committees.

The show, which nearly sold out, had an estimated 300 people in attendance.

The co-masters of ceremonies, Kevyn Jacobs and Mary Renee Smith, kicked off the event with the infamous virgin auction, in which people in attendance who never before have seen "Rocky Horror" are auctioned off to the tenured audience members for a variety of items.

Marc Maddox, sophomore in biology, was one of more than 30 virgins to be sold to the highest bidder. Maddox was purchased by Kelsey Needham, sophomore in pre-health professions, for a pair of high-high stockings, a bra and a pair of outdated underwear.

Maddox said he enjoyed being involved in the auction.

"It could have been an uncomfortable situation, but everyone made it fun," he said.

After the auction, the costume contest showcased a variety of characters, such as Darth Vader, two cannibals and a dominatrix. The audience reactions decided the top three winners in the contest; the second- and third-place winners received passes to an upcoming showing of "The Truman Show," sponsored by UPC, and the first-place entry received a Truman Show poster.

For the movie itself, audience members were given bags of goodies to use in connection with the lines and scenes from the movie. These items, such as playing cards, loaves of bread, rice and newspapers, were ways to provoke audience participation, for which the movie is well-known.

SALES TAX

ening dependency on the government for the economy.

"It's basically a positive thing," city commissioner Karen McCulloh said. "We've poured a lot of money into the local economy. The proceeds have been used wisely."

The funds usually are allocated as loans to help businesses open in Manhattan. The businesses sign agreements with the city to repay the loans and generate a specific number of jobs within a period of time. Funds that are repaid then can be redistributed to other companies to continue the economic growth. Other funds are distributed as grants.

However, the funds available to disperse to companies are not guaranteed.

Because the amount of revenue generated depends on retail sales, economic fluctuations could limit the amount available to companies.

MCCULLOH

However, future funds flowing into the economic development pool depend on the Nov. 3 ballot. A "yes" vote would continue the funding at half of the current rate. A "no" vote would allow the funding to cease as of Dec. 31.

"The economic development fund depends on the retail sales," Hall said. "If sales go down or the economy goes into recession, or if people begin buying more than ever, the fund will fluctuate. It's really all dependent on how the economy is in the next four years."

McCulloh said other factors could reduce revenues. She said high sales taxes could drive shoppers to other areas to make purchases.

"I'm concerned we'll have a high sales tax. I worried a smart shopper will drive to Topeka for more expensive items like cars and computers instead of paying the tax here," McCulloh said.

City reports indicate the current four-year tax will have brought in about $10.3 million by Dec. 31. A dozen businesses have received or will receive funds from that amount. The reports also estimate that about 613 new jobs have come to Manhattan because of the tax — 496 from the almost $3.1 million allocated to Sykes Enterprises Inc., a telecommunications firm in Manhattan's new business park.

Of the 12 businesses that received funds, only one, 2Linc, defaulted on its loan. Several other businesses are behind on the number of jobs they are supposed to generate but expect to catch up and meet their goals.

2Linc, the first business to receive funds from the sales tax, became insolvent after its chief executive officer became ill.

The city is listed as the beneficiary on a life insurance policy that would repay the amount of the loan.

However, future funds flowing into the economic development pool depend on the Nov. 3 ballot. A "yes" vote would continue the funding at half of the current rate. A "no" vote would allow the funding to cease as of Dec. 31.

Hall and McCulloh both said the ultimate choice is the community's.

"Our job was to put it on the ballot. I think people should be informed about it so they make their own decision," Hall said.

"Other communities use private venture capital. (This question) asks the community to pay," McCulloh said. "I just hope a healthy community assists everybody."

CHIEFS

"We have been on the winning side, and clearly it's a lot easier to cope with winning," Schottenheimer said.

The Chiefs are 0-3 since the return of quarterback Elvis Grbac, who threw three interceptions, including one Dwayne Gordon returned 31 yards for a touchdown, and was booed mercilessly by the sullen, rain-soaked crowd.

"In my opinion — and I'm closer to it than most people — he is the guy who gives us the best chance to win," Schottenheimer said.

Fans on the south side of the stadium who booed Grbac might have had more than football on their minds. A water main broke in the third quarter, knocking out all bathrooms on that side for the rest of the night.

"I've been booed before," Grbac said. "It's a good thing I can laugh at it. I'm just going to go out there and give everything I have."

In the decisive final moments, the Jets took over on the 43 after Louie Aguiar's 25-yard punt, and the Chiefs continued to self-destruct.

As Hall lined up to kick a 37-yarder, the Chiefs were called for encroachment, moving him 5 yards closer.

"I told myself I was going to make it," said Hall, who missed from 31 yards earlier in the game. "I was yelling at myself, and I heard myself yelling back at myself, and it got kind of ugly."

For a brief moment with less than 7:30 left, the Chiefs thought they'd taken a 23-17 lead. Pete Stoyanovich faked what would have been a 47-yard field goal and punted, and Kansas City's Ty Parten batted the ball back from the edge of the goal line. New York's Corwin Brown tried to pick it up and failed, then holder-punter Aguiar scooped up the ball and stepped into the end zone.

One official signaled touchdown, but then officials huddled and said the kicking team cannot take possession after touching the ball unless the receiving team actually had taken possession and then fumbled.

"It was the right call," Schottenheimer said.

The teams exchanged touchdowns 50 seconds apart earlier in the fourth as a cold, steady rain pelted the turf.

Testaverde, who had thrown 141 passes without an interception, threw the ball straight to linebacker Anthony Davis, who returned it 27 yards to the 8. Donnell Bennett's 1-yard dive gave Kansas City a 17-10 lead.

Aaron Glenn returned the kickoff 62 yards and set up Testaverde's 20-yard touchdown strike to Kyle Brady that knotted the score with 12:53 left.

Fans on the south side of the stadium who booed Grbac might have had more than football on their minds. A water main broke in the third quarter, knocking out all bathrooms on that side for the rest of the night.

"That was the key play of this game," New York coach Bill Parcells said.

The Chiefs, playing in a steady rain for the third time in their last four home games, took a 7-0 lead on their second possession when Grbac hit Derrick Alexander for gains of 34 and 22 yards and set up Tony Richardson's 2-yard run.

Testaverde hit Wayne Chrebet over the middle with a short pass early in the second quarter, and he turned it into a 56-yard gain to the 14. The Jets, however, had to settle for Hall's 20-yard field goal after wasting a first-and-goal from the 2.

Late in the second period, Grbac threw behind Andre Rison and right to Gordon, who broke one tackle en route to a 31-yard touchdown return that put the Jets on top 10-7.

Rec Report

Recreational Services' Offices Located in Peters Recreation Complex

Summer is over, but many people are still taking the plunge, thanks to Recreational Services. "The pools offer an opportunity to expand your exercise routine to a water workout available any time of year for any fitness level," Derek Walters, Rec Services' associate director, said. "It gives people another option for a total body workout."

The pools are located adjacent to Ahearn Field House in the Natatorium. Rec Services shares time in the Natatorium with several other campus programs. "The Natatorium opened in 1972, and we've been sharing time there since it opened," Walters said.

With handicapped accessible facilities, the pool also features two 25-yard pools with a pacer clock. The eight-lane pool is used primarily for lap swimming, and the six-lane recreation pool offers aquatic activities, including water basketball, family swim space, water walking, water aerobics and swimming. In addition to these two pools, the Natatorium also offers a diving well with one-meter and three-meter boards. The diving well provides an area for deep water jogging and treading water when there is no diving.

To add a twist to swimming and exercise routines, Rec Services offers Wildcat Waterworks programs. Aqua aerobics provides a great workout with water resistance but less impact on the joints and spine. For these workouts, head submersion and swimming ability are not required. Take a normal step aerobics class, put it in the water and it's the aqua step class. This session uses an 8" bench to keep the intensity raised but the impact low.

Deep water jogging adds a splash to running on land. This workout uses water buoyancy and resistance for no-impact, high-intensity exercise. Flotation belts are available and may be used for individual deep water jogging during Rec Services' pool times if the diving well is not occupied with divers.

"Swimming offers a great fitness opportunity in cross-training workout with excellent cardiovascular benefits," said Erik O'Keefe, Rec Services' lifeguard. "It's a low impact workout that people of any age can do."

For more information about Rec Services and the pools, call Rec Services at 532-6980, stop by the office at the Rec Complex or visit the pools on campus. Also, information is available on the Rec Services home page at www.recservices.ksu.edu

Julie Ryan, a senior in nutrition and exercise science, began working for Rec Services at the start of this school year as a fitness consultant in the Wellness

Resource Center. By working in the center, she is gaining experience for later in life when she plans to work as a dietitian in a cardio rehabilitation center with some fitness consulting on the side. Her current position as a fitness consultant for Rec Services has put her classroom knowledge to work. "I have to recall everything I've learned in the past and apply it to my job in the Wellness Resource Center," Ryan said. "Everyday I have different situations walk through my door. People all have different circumstances with varying needs. Some people may have injuries to deal with. Others may need more motivation." Ryan said another benefit of working at the Rec is the friendly people she works with every day.

Krissy Toms, senior in kinesiology, is in her second year of working for Rec Services' pools. She is a lifeguard and water aerobics instructor and is also certified for water safety instruction (WSI). Toms said a swimming workout is beneficial because of its cross-training nature and cardiovascular benefits for people of any age. "Swimming benefits both older people and students as a lifelong athletic experience. Whether you're younger, older or pregnant, everyone can do a water workout," she said. Toms has enjoyed her job with Rec Services for several reasons. "I enjoy watching people be healthy no matter what age they are," she said. "Also, it has given me great experience for my career after I graduate." Toms plans to own and operate a health club in Vail, Colorado, after graduating from K-State.

Outdoor Rental

The Outdoor Rental Center will be CLOSED during the winter months. November 2 is the last day of operation this season; however, special arrangements may be made by calling the Recreational Services office at 532-6980. Twenty-four hour notice required for any rental over the winter.

Fitness Facts

Often the question arises as to whether women benefit as equally from exercise as men. However, the studies that have involved women show that women do benefit from being physically active, sometimes more so than men. Early indications show reduced rates of death by heart disease to be greater in women who are physically fit than for men. Women who exercise have half the chance of dying from heart disease as women who do not exercise. It is known that women often tend to live longer than their husbands, but their quality of life is not always better. Elderly women who have not been physically active experience more disability in daily functions than those women who have.

Nutrition Notes

Ever have problems figuring exactly how much food actually makes up a portion size? Well, here are some guidelines that will hopefully offer some assistance:

- 3oz. of meat, poultry or fish= a deck of cards, the palm of your hand, a cassette tape
- 1 cup of potato, pasta or rice= the size of your fist, a tennis ball
- 1oz. of cheese= your thumb, a pair of dice
- 1 medium fruit= your fist

Pool Action

It is 12 times tougher to walk through water than through air, which is one reason for the popularity and effectiveness of water aerobics. Another reason for its popularity is that water supports the joints, greatly reducing exercise-related stress. (Self, July 1997)

Sunday and Wednesday evenings throughout November, the 6-lane pool will be used for IM Inner Tube Water Polo. However, the 8-lane pool and diving well will be open for recreational swimming.

Call Rec Check at 532-6000 for days and times of recreational swim.

Working It Out

Just a few reminders for everyone. The Thursday aerobics class at 8:30 p.m. is a boxing aerobics class. Come out and give it a try! It is a great avenue to release some stress and have some fun in the process. Also, if you are new to the aerobics scene, try to attend one of the workshops at the beginning of each month that reviews the basic moves. The introductory classes are offered in basic and step aerobics. So, spice up that workout a bit and try an aerobics class!!

If you are a trivia expert or a sports buff, this contest is for you!

My Favorite Workout

Craig Claassen, senior in electrical engineering, knows the benefits of swimming. As part of his weekly exercise routine, he includes a pool workout because it is a low-impact sport that's easy on the joints. Claassen swims at the Natatorium two times a week, lifts weights at the Recreation Complex three times each week and runs twice a week, too. Claassen first started working out seriously when he came to college and now understands the benefits of a consistent workout. "The best part of my workout is feeling healthier and the satisfaction of completing a workout," he said. Claassen offers some valuable fitness advice for others: "Find a workout you enjoy, be consistent, and add variety."

MU fraternities housing freshmen must go dry by 2000

■ University officials hope to curb binge drinking.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — When the millennium arrives on the University of Missouri-Columbia campus, some fraternities won't be allowed to party like it's 1999.

University of Missouri officials are requiring fraternity houses with freshman residents to dry out by the year 2000. The goal of the substance-free policy is to reduce binge drinking on campus, said Charles Schroeder, vice chancellor for student affairs.

Freshman pledges make up 30 percent of the total number of students living in the university's fraternity houses. Twenty-six of the school's 30 fraternities have houses adjacent to campus, and they must decide by next spring whether to go dry or to forego freshman residents.

Schroeder said the university has been considering the move for more than two years and that it mirrors a national trend. Three campus fraternities already are dry, and seven more had planned to make the move by 2000.

Dave Sosnoff, a freshman pledge of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, said his house's decision to go dry has made it easier to study and get things done.

Sosnoff said a dry house doesn't mean older fraternity members can't drink.

"There's a lot of functions that go on outside the house," Sosnoff said. "... like organized parties at bars."

Schroeder informed fraternity presidents of the new policy last week.

"Allowing alcohol to be served in fraternity houses where underage students live creates an environment conducive to alcohol abuse, and we are encouraging fraternities to go substance-free rather than displace freshman who live in the house," Schroeder said Monday in a news release.

Responses to the announcement have been mixed, Schroeder said.

The loss of freshman residents could create a financial hardship if those students are not replaced with juniors and seniors who otherwise would be moving out of the house, he said.

Josh Borgmeyer, a sophomore member of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, said the change will be difficult to make.

"It would probably decrease house morale to some extent," Borgmeyer said. "But we could find other ways to boost house spirit."

In October 1997, the Beta Theta Pi house was hit with sanctions after police found a freshman pledge drunk and injured after a fraternity function. The pledge was unable to explain his injuries.

Last week, a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity was arrested on suspicion of rape for events related to a fraternity party where alcohol was being served to minors. An investigation by police is ongoing, and the university is investigating the incident as well.

Last month, the university's Wellness Resource Center was one of six schools to get a $186,000, two-year grant from the U.S. Department of Education's Drug Free Schools Program.

The money is for programs that seek to dispel myths among students about how much their peers drink.

Research done by the center indicates that only 23 percent of University of Missouri-Columbia students drink more than once per week.

The university's binge-drinking rate dropped 9 percent last year, Schroeder said.

KSU would approach issue differently

By TRAVIS D. LENKNER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The University of Missouri-Columbia's latest effort to combat binge drinking will be interesting to watch, but in the end, probably won't be a solution to the problem, Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said Monday.

Even if it works, Bosco said K-State wouldn't make such a drastic change in its housing policies without giving students and others the opportunity to help make the decision.

"Our administrative philosophy has been not to issue directives regarding student life," Bosco said. "If K-State were to ever seriously consider a significant shift in freshman housing, for whatever reason, we would involve all affected parties in any kind of a decision."

According to a 1997 Harvard survey, 43 percent of K-State stu-

Floods force hundreds of people from homes, cause millions of dollars in damage across state

By ROXANA HEGEMAN

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUGUSTA, Kan. — Flooding that forced hundreds from their homes and caused millions of dollars in damages in south-central Kansas moved slowly southeast Monday, where residents were working feverishly to fight off the rising waters.

An estimated 650-700 people left their homes in Butler and Sedgewick counties after two dozen rivers and streams flowed out of their banks Sunday and Monday.

No injuries or deaths were reported, but rescue workers were kept busy ferrying people from their homes, cars and — in one case — their horses.

"We've had our share of scary moments rescuing people from water," said Jim Schmidt, emergency management coordinator for Butler County. "We have very tired swift-water rescuers right now."

Augusta, a town of about 8,700 residents in Butler County, was the hardest hit as water from the Whitewater and Walnut rivers topped a 35-foot levee. The problems were compounded when the town's wastewater-treatment plant shut down, and toilets sent raw sewage into the downtown area.

More than 300 homes and 30 businesses were evacuated in Augusta, which suffered at least $2 million in damage, Schmidt said. Another 50 to 75 homes throughout Butler County also were evacuated.

Local officials ready as Kansas River expected to crest

By JENNIFER LUCKE

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas River was expected to crest above flood stage sometime Monday night after heavy rains plagued the area throughout the weekend.

The river gauge at Manhattan was at 17.63 feet Monday morning, and flood stage is 18 feet. The river was expected to crest between 18.5 and 19 feet, causing an overflow of about one foot.

That means small amounts of flooding will occur in low-lying areas, said Julie Eichem, Riley County assistant emergency management coordinator.

The Riley County Emergency Management

Department has kept an eye on river levels throughout the weekend.

"We have a river gauge at Fort Riley and one at Enterprise," Eichem said. "Every hour, we call to see what the river stages are to the west of us so we know what is coming our way."

Enterprise, Kan., is located south of Interstate 70 between Abilene, Kan., and Junction City.

K-State's Weather Data Laboratory reported Monday that Manhattan had received 4.61 inches of rain over the weekend — more than twice the average rainfall for the month of November. Forecasts called for a 70-percent

Polls open at 7 a.m.

By ANDY WIMMER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The polls are open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. today in Manhattan for the 1998 election. Voters in Manhattan will decide who will represent the 66th District in the Kansas Statehouse and whether they wish to continue the quarter-cent sales tax for economic development in Manhattan.

Mayor Steve Hall said the local elections affect the most people.

"Local elections have the biggest impact on the day-to-day life of people," he said. "It affects the water we drink, the roads we drive on and the schools we send our kids to."

Hall said he is disappointed with voter turnout in prior elections.

"It's important as Americans to vote," he said. "Voter apathy is pathetic."

In addition to the economic-development tax and the representatives of the 66th District, voters will be choosing their representatives on the state and federal level.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., faces Democratic candidate Paul Feleciano Jr. of Wichita in a bid to retain his Senate seat.

In the 2nd Congressional District, incumbent Jim Ryun seeks reelection but is opposed by Topeka Democrat Jim Clark.

Incumbent Republican Gov. Bill Graves and running mate Gary Sherrer face Democratic candidate Tom Sawyer of Wichita and his running mate Elizabeth Baker.

Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh, R-Topeka, is seeking reelection and is opposed by Democrat Don Rezac of Emmett, Kan., Libertarian Steve Rosile of Wichita, and Sandra Boehr, also of

May out for season

K-State senior guard/forward Ayome "Paco" May will no longer participate with the men's basketball team, due to health reasons.

"Due to a recurring intestinal condition, Ayome May's playing career has concluded," head coach Tom Asbury said Monday afternoon.

"This has been a very difficult condition for him to overcome. He will remain on scholarship and graduate in May of 1999 with a degree in social science. We wish him the best in his future endeavors."

May ranked fourth on the Wildcat team in 1998, averaging 7.6 points per game. A member of the 1995-96 Big 8 Conference All-Freshman Team, he had played in each of K-State's 85 games since his arrival on the Manhattan campus in 1995.

K-State opens its exhibition season at 7 tonight at Bramlage Coliseum against the California All-Stars.

Phelps' daughter says funeral protests OK

TOPEKA — If Jesus Christ were alive, he would join members of Westboro Baptist Church in picketing the funerals of homosexuals, the daughter of the church's controversial pastor said.

Margie J. Phelps, a lawyer and the eldest daughter of Primitive Baptist minister Fred W. Phelps Sr., said funerals are a time when survivors and mourners are focused on "matters of eternity" and need to hear the messages on the bluntly written signs carried by the church's members.

The Oct. 16 funeral of gay college student Matthew Shepard in Casper, Wyo., gave much of the nation its first glimpse of the pickets that have become familiar to Topekan.

In the wake of Shepard's funeral, The Topeka Capital-Journal received letters and e-mails condemning the picketing.

A message from a Sea Cliff, N.Y., man was a typical response.

"I cannot begin to understand how a man of God, a man who presumably devotes his life to the teachings of Jesus Christ, can condone and actually participate in the desecration of a funeral of a young man who was viciously murdered by sadistic bigots," the man wrote.

Phelps took issue with the suggestion that her father's anti-homosexual activities were at odds with Christ's teachings.

"If Jesus lived on Earth today, he'd be right out there with us," she said. Shepard's was not the only high-profile funeral church members have picketed. Also targeted were former U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater, Frank Sinatra and gay journalist Randy Shilts. Closer to home, members picketed funerals of civic leaders and some Topekan who oppose their church's activities.

Society has a habit of lying during funerals, Phelps said. She said all adults have attended a funeral at which a flowery eulogy painted a false portrait of the dead.

"It's so hypocritical to me that people will use a death event to glorify a homosexual lifestyle, but they criticize us for condemning that same lifestyle," she said.

Phelps said the likelihood of media coverage helps guide decisions on which funerals to picket. In Wyoming, "Those homosexuals were going to be outside his funeral whether we were there or not. That's why we were there," she said.

Student assaulted, declines to file report

A female K-State student was the victim of a sexual assault on Oct. 23 but did not want police to file a report after the incident, Riley County Police Lt. Herb Crosby said Monday.

Police and emergency medical crews responded to Ford Hall at 3:06 a.m. on Oct. 23 after one of the student's friends called police. Crosby said the student was intoxicated. She said she had been sexually assaulted, but did not want to file a report.

Crosby would not call the incident a rape.

"It was a sexual assault," he said.

The student did not know the alleged suspect, but when she declined to file a report, Crosby said police weren't able to try to find the man.

Crosby said the student was not injured.

Attorneys show tapes of Gates' deposition

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Bill Gates took center stage at his company's antitrust trial Monday, appearing on TV and computer screens throughout a federal courtroom as the government tried to show he masterminded plans to crush his competition.

Federal attorneys played portions of a videotaped deposition of Gates, taken last summer, as they tried to prove his company illegally wielded its industry influence to stifle competition.

In particular, the government focused on the role Gates played in securing a surprise August 1997 deal with archrival Apple Computer, and on a disputed meeting two years earlier between Microsoft and Netscape.

Microsoft called the playing of the tapes a personal attack on Gates and an attempt to shift the focus from "some very serious hits over the last few weeks" inflicted on the government's case.

"It's clearly an attempt to sensationalize the case and distract people's attention from the weakness of the government's case," Microsoft spokesman Mark Murray said.

Gates, whose wildly successful Windows operating system has made him the richest man in the world, is renowned for his aggressive business techniques. The government wants to prove that Gates applied a take-no-prisoners strategy to "crush" competitors.

At one point, Gates was asked about a June 21, 1995, meeting, during which Netscape claims Microsoft illegally and unsuccessfully offered to divide the market for browser software. Microsoft denies it ever made such a deal about browsers, which are computer software to allow people to view information on the Internet.

Gates, who didn't attend the meeting, said he couldn't remember ever discussing it with any Microsoft executives who did attend.

He also was asked about alleged threats his company made to persuade Apple to distribute Microsoft's browser.

The government introduced the clips in preparation for its third witness, Avadis Tevanian, an Apple senior vice president. In written testimony, Tevanian has contended that Microsoft used bullying tactics to control Apple's choice of Internet browsers. Among the tactics: warning it would stop providing Apple with certain software.

Iraq awaits decision from Security Council

UNITED NATIONS — Iraq blamed the United States on Monday for forcing Baghdad to sever contact with arms inspectors by blocking any reference to lifting sanctions in a review of Iraqi compliance with U.N. resolutions.

Nizar Hamdoun, Baghdad's ambassador to the United Nations, said Iraq still wants a comprehensive review that offers the prospect that sanctions will be lifted or eased if the Security Council finds Saddam Hussein's government has eliminated its weapons of mass destruction.

"I think the ball is in the Security Council and the secretary-general's court," he said in an interview with The Associated Press and Dow Jones Newswires.

President Clinton left open the possibility of a military response to Baghdad's announcement Saturday that it was cutting off all dealings with U.N. weapons inspectors. He sent Defense Secretary William Cohen on Monday to consult with European and Persian Gulf allies, saying no options are off the table.

"Saddam Hussein's latest refusal to cooperate with the international weapons inspectors is completely unacceptable," Clinton said shortly after meeting with Cohen and his other top national security aides.

Richard Butler, chief U.N. arms inspector, called the decision the worst confrontation by Iraq with the United Nations since the end of the Gulf War in 1991. The sanctions were imposed shortly after Iraqi forces invaded Kuwait in 1990.

In Baghdad, Iraq's Parliament unanimously endorsed the government's decision to halt the work of U.N. arms inspectors.

The Security Council sent a letter

Friday to U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan, outlining the framework of a comprehensive review of Iraq's compliance with U.N. resolutions.

The letter did not meet Iraq's demand that a review should mention the possibility of lifting sanctions. When Baghdad received message that the United States was responsible for blocking any reference, it responded by banning all dealings with U.N. weapons inspectors, Hamdoun said.

Annan called Iraq's announcement that it was cutting off all dealings with U.N. weapons inspectors "a total breach of Security Council resolutions," and noted the council's demand that Baghdad resume cooperation immediately.

Members of speech team to compete at nationals

By NICOLE TWIGG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's speech team has been one of the top-five teams nationally during the past seven years.

This figure becomes even more impressive when factoring in competition; there are more than 360 speech/forensics programs in the country.

Wes Schawe, senior in math and speech, is leading the team this season. Craig Brown, director of individual events, said. Schawe already has qualified for nationals in four events: informative, extemporaneous, communication analysis and impromptu.

At the team's most recent tournaments at Wichita State University and Kansas Newman College, Schawe captured five first-place scores. He attributes his success in communicative analysis to using a humorous approach in a typically unlikely program.

"Most people talk about really boring topics in CA (communication analysis), but it's actually one of my favorite events. I'm talking about Grameen Banks in Bangladesh," Schawe said. "Basically, it's the story of some very successful banks who make small loans to poor people."

"Another really interesting topic for my informative speech is taggants," Schawe said. "They are tiny pieces of metal with different colors, which can be used to identify and track many different items from bomb-making materials to concert tickets."

Schawe's team members are qualifying for events, too.

Chris McLemore, sophomore in economics, has qualified in four of a maximum six events. Toban Henry, junior in history, has qualified for nationals in three events.

"Wes and Chris are definitely favorites for the overall national champions this spring," Brown said.

The team as a whole is doing well this season, Schawe said.

The team has competed in 11 tournaments this year and has placed in the top three at nine of them. Of those nine, they have won four. Also, after only four tournaments, three people qualified for nationals.

"I'm pleased with the incoming freshmen this year," Brown said. "I feel that we have a strong chance to win the national championship in 2000."

Carmen Neufeld, freshman in apparel marketing and design and one of the freshman leaders, placed first at her first college tournament. Neufeld has qualified for nationals in persuasion.

Other freshman leaders include Rebekah Dryden, freshman in biology, and Frank Flaton, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications.

"With nine new freshmen, the team is sure to do well. They are all awesome," Schawe said.

The team's goal is to bring at least 15 students to nationals this year with at least three or four entries per person. Already, six have qualified in 15 events.

"We wouldn't be able to do any of this without the support of the university," Brown said. "Their financial commitment is unmatched but by two or three other universities in the nation."

With such a strong start, we are well on our way to having an exceptional season."

Tree decorating kicks off service week

By AMANDA LEVIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Circle K Clubs at more than 500 campuses are sponsoring a community service week this week. During the international Community Service Week, the K-State Circle K club members will donate their time and efforts to a different service organization each day.

"Our focus this year during community service week is to help a variety of different service projects — helping the elderly, outside work, children, et cetera. — in order to get everyone involved," Karen Bowser, freshman open-option, said.

The Circle K Club is in its 36th year at K-State.

To begin Circle K Community Service Week, members decorated Christmas trees Monday at the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

"We decided to decorate the Christmas trees to give the people who stay here the holiday atmosphere and a reason to enjoy the season," Sara Rieger, sophomore in dietetics, said.

"This club is for everyone who wants to lend a helping hand and participate in community services," Matthew Bell, Circle K president and junior in biology, said.

Circle K members have a variety of volunteer opportunities in projects that interest them, Bell said. Club members visit the Wharton Manner once a month, work with the Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan Inc., help with Home Project and many other Manhattan area community services.

Anyone can join the club at anytime by paying the $18 annual membership fee. The club consists of four committees: service, fund raising, public relations and social.

"Being a member of Circle K is a great way to meet people; and helping others always feels good," Bell said.

During Circle K's Community Service Week, anyone is welcome to help. Those interested people can contact Matthew Bell at 537-0483 to help with any of the planned community service projects.

Vote Yourself A Raise

A Raise In Retail Sales

Retail sales are up in Manhattan. That's good news. Rising retail sales mean Manhattan folks have better jobs, and more spendable income. That's because in 1994 Manhattan voted to invest in creating new jobs. Already, 650 new jobs have been created in Manhattan. The 1/2% economic development sales tax ends this year. Let's sustain our controlled growth. Vote "Yes" for 1/4% to replace the old tax. Vote "Yes" November 3 to keep Manhattan's retail sales going strong.

OUR VIEW

1 vote does matter; make that vote yours

It is no secret that there is a serious problem in our country with voter turnout.

For that matter, there is a serious problem at our university with voter turnout. Many K-State students don't seem to care much about the people who are picked to represent them. We are blind to mainstream politics — too caught up in our own little world.

We can tell others that K-State breeds leaders, but it's of little use to say you are a leader if you never practice your leadership. Voting is a way of doing that.

Many of us only recently have been given the opportunity to vote in a general election, and yet, we would choose to toss this right aside, convinced that our vote counts for nothing, so why bother?

Well, if you don't show up at the polls, your vote IS nothing.

There have been times in history when a single vote has made the difference in a decision. In the mid-1800s, President Andrew Johnson had been impeached by the House of Representatives and was on his way to being removed by the Senate. He was saved from that fate by the vote of one man — Edmund G. Ross, a senator from Kansas who did not want to make his decision on the impeachment until he knew all of the facts.

He was the last person to come to a conclusion on the issue, protecting Johnson from being unseated.

There are a number of important issues on the ballot this November. The candidates all are talking about education this year and sponsoring initiatives like gubernatorial candidate Tom Sawyer's Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship program, which would use lottery money for student scholarships.

STARS is a program that has a great deal of potential for affecting your life in Manhattan and elsewhere across Kansas, but clearly, the most benefits from this program could be reaped as a student.

Also on the ballot is the proposed quarter-cent tax increase for Manhattan's economic development. If approved, the tax will have a slight but immediate effect on the buying power of residents in this city, covering everyone from families at the Manhattan Town Center to students in Aggieville.

We can't be students without being in the Manhattan community. We can't let ourselves believe our votes don't count, either. Students are one-third of Manhattan's population. If we all cared, we could have a very positive effect on this election.

It is our right, and it affects us.

Vote.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

READERS WRITE

KSU Stadium security puts media before Wildcat fans

Editor,

I am writing to pose a question to the K-State community, our fans and our news media in particular. During the Northeast Louisiana football game, a TV crew from the Fox Sports Network decided its little orchestrated segment was more important than the game, and oddly enough, stadium security agreed. Why did the security make the media a priority over the fans' ability to cheer on the team?

This was a game in which the second half determined whether we would keep our streak of outrageous wins alive and stay viable in the eyes of the stupid Associated Press pollsters. This was a game in which the team needed the fans' support to get through. Stadium security, though, thought securing peace and quiet to record an intro segment was more important.

It happened during the third quarter. The crew approached some fans next to where we were sitting and asked them to respond to a football trivia question that had nothing to do with K-State. They then orchestrated and rehearsed what would happen. When the crew members went to tape, though, they discovered the other fan noise was too loud for a quality recording. They asked me and my friends to quiet down for them. Remember, this is during the game — more importantly, a defensive series for the Cats. Fan noise is a factor in defensive plays. So, we just kept on cheering. They then asked us to quiet down, threatening ejection from the game if we didn't comply. As if to add insult to injury, the "fans" involved in the taping complained to us, too.

What is the deal with stadium security? Why do its priorities put media above fans? And what is the deal with our "fans"?

Stadium security needs to get its act together. I used to work with these people, and I don't remember any policy telling me to stop fans from cheering in the face of the news media. Please, remember who put you there, who is paying your salary and what everyone is there for.

Life can be a crazy, awe-inspiring adventure

VIEWPOINT

MARY VANLEEUVEN

I am in awe of this crazy, crazy world. I'm fascinated by its existence, persistence and ability to produce life. When I'm late for class and I'm walking faster than the speed of light, I just keep my head down and ignore everything except my friend, the sidewalk. When I take the time to put it all in perspective, I see how magical everything is.

We are but masses of flesh and bone, yet somehow, our bodies walk and make noises. Tons of stuff is happening in my body as I write, and at any moment, everything could just stop! My body could go from being full of life to lifeless in a matter of a micro-second. I can say that it's all controlled by my heart and my brain, but what makes those organs perform as they do? Some might say it's the spirit. I say it's magic, which is basically the same thing.

Not only does this apply to humans, it applies to all life. I like to watch our friendly squirrels and try to figure out what they're thinking — try to see what makes them choose to go from point A to point B and then make that death defying leap to point G. Some people think humans are so superior to other animals when really, squirrels and many other animals have probably been around longer than the human has. Even if, in comparison to the human brain, their brains are smaller in proportion to their bodies, I still think they can think and communicate as well as we can. I'm sure their language is fascinating. Sometimes, I try talking to the squirrels, but they just stare at me with a look that has "stupid human" written all over it. I imagine that unlike us, squirrels use all of their brain power — that's why they can fly and humans can't. Squirrels are magic, too.

Last week, I was looking at a pumpkin that we have sitting on our table, and I talked to my perpetually-in-awe roommate, Janusz, about how that pumpkin grew from a seed into a big orange mass with a green, umbilical-cord viney top. We both thought it was pretty incredible that all it took to produce it was a seed, the soil and its nutrients, water, sun and a little magic.

Likewise, trees never will cease to amaze me, and our lack of respect for them never will cease to make me sad. Take time today to look at a tree on campus, and try to guess how long that tree has been there and how many students have passed by it without even noticing how beautiful and magical it is that something so huge came from something so small.

When I think about how inferior I am to trees and how we both share the same magical bond of life, I think of Alice Walker's words in "The Color Purple" — "I knew that if I cut a tree, my arm would bleed"; Diane di Prima's words in "April Fool Birthday Poem for Grandpa" — "thank you ... / for/ pulling my hair when I/ pulled the leaves off the trees so I'd know how it feels"; and that one beautiful picture of Allen Ginsberg hugging a tree.

I can say in all seriousness that I'm a tree hugger as well. Some of you may snicker because the idea of hugging a tree seems absurd. I don't see how it's any different than talking to your plants or hugging your dog.

Hug a tree to thank it for the air you breathe, the place you live in, a nice shady place to study and the Collegian you're holding.

There's just as much life in trees as there is in humans, squirrels or pumpkins.

The Earth was born 4.6 billion years ago. Modern humans only have been fully evolved for about 0.01 million years. Kind of puts things in a new, humbling perspective doesn't it? We are merely by-products of life that has been going on for years before us, yet, we continually ignore and disrespect this world that helped us come into being.

Isn't life a crazy thing? Isn't it awe-some how everything is evolving all the time? Life is magical, I tell you. We're magic. The world is a magical place, and we are a wonderful part of the whole elusive thing.

Bad tippers going straight to hell — with plenty of company

VIEWPOINT

CHRIS PIATT

If Hell is a skyscraper office complex, there is a large conference room, perhaps an entire floor, reserved for bad tippers.

College is expensive. I don't know many college students who are not below the poverty line. Consequently, we will do anything to scrape by. The labor often is manual, and the wages usually are minimal. Unfortunately, with little or no upward mobility, one has to grin and bear it. Which can hurt your face.

Really badly.

Many of us can be found in the fabulous world of customer service, and a chosen few work as waiters or waitresses, although some prefer the title "server." It doesn't matter. You're either waiting or you're serving. Take your pick.

It has been about three months since I finished my last waiter gig, so perhaps I am a bit out of the loop. However, it only takes one trip to any restaurant in town to refresh my memory. Here it goes.

The vulnerability of going to work every day knowing that your salary simply will be left on the table by the whim of your customers is overwhelming. Nothing is certain. There is no security.

The tip is the evaluation of all the work you've done. It is that which supplements the $2.20 you make per hour, hopefully, to rack it up past minimum wage. It is the collective charity of your patrons. It is your life force, your bread and butter and your rent check.

Although I cannot stress how frustrating it is to deal with difficult customers, merely being polite to your servers is not going to help them pay for school. Many have made that mistake, but a pleasant smile sure as hell won't pay for 15 credit hours.

Certainly, there are bad servers who seem disinterested in the personal plights of their customers. This probably should be forgiven. People would not want to be judged on their worst days, so servers should be given the benefit of the doubt. They are, after all, the only workers in this society to be evaluated every single day. You think the annual office inspection is nerve-wracking? Try showing your work to 75 district managers daily.

The primary problem is that the stress placed on servers is totally absurd when compared to the actual situation; a meal is being served. It seems simple enough a task, so customers tend to be shocked a server cannot cope with the circumstances gracefully.

On behalf of servers everywhere, there is no way 11 water glasses can be refilled, two high chairs for fussy infants can be assembled, an overcooked steak can be returned to the kitchen, three checks can be separated and a dessert order can be taken in a 30-second window of time gracefully. Some call it physics. I call it the personal hell that haunts all servers and stalks them to the point of madness.

Tip your servers. Tip them well. You will be rewarded in Heaven.

If you have been in college long enough that you have renounced the concept of an afterlife, you can take heed in the knowledge that servers who know you tip well are less likely to spit in your food.

Just kidding.

Most servers spit in beverages. Easier to stir in.

Seriously, though, the financial uncertainty of waiting tables is excruciating. It has been my experience that people who tip poorly because a drop of soup has been spilled or an order has been slightly mixed up are people with whom I don't care to associate. They tend to be petty and obnoxious, and they need the power trip of deciding whether or not people are doing their jobs correctly.

If you really believe that you are obligated to yell at your servers when they screw up, then you are a pompous ass, and there is nothing I can recommend to correct that kind of character flaw. However, if there is room in your pocketbook for a decent tip and you won't leave it out of spite or stinginess, then there is probably some room for improvement.

These folks are just trying to pay their rent. From working moms to future Nobel Prize winners, they are counting on a decent tip. I'm not asking you to plant a tree — just a seed.

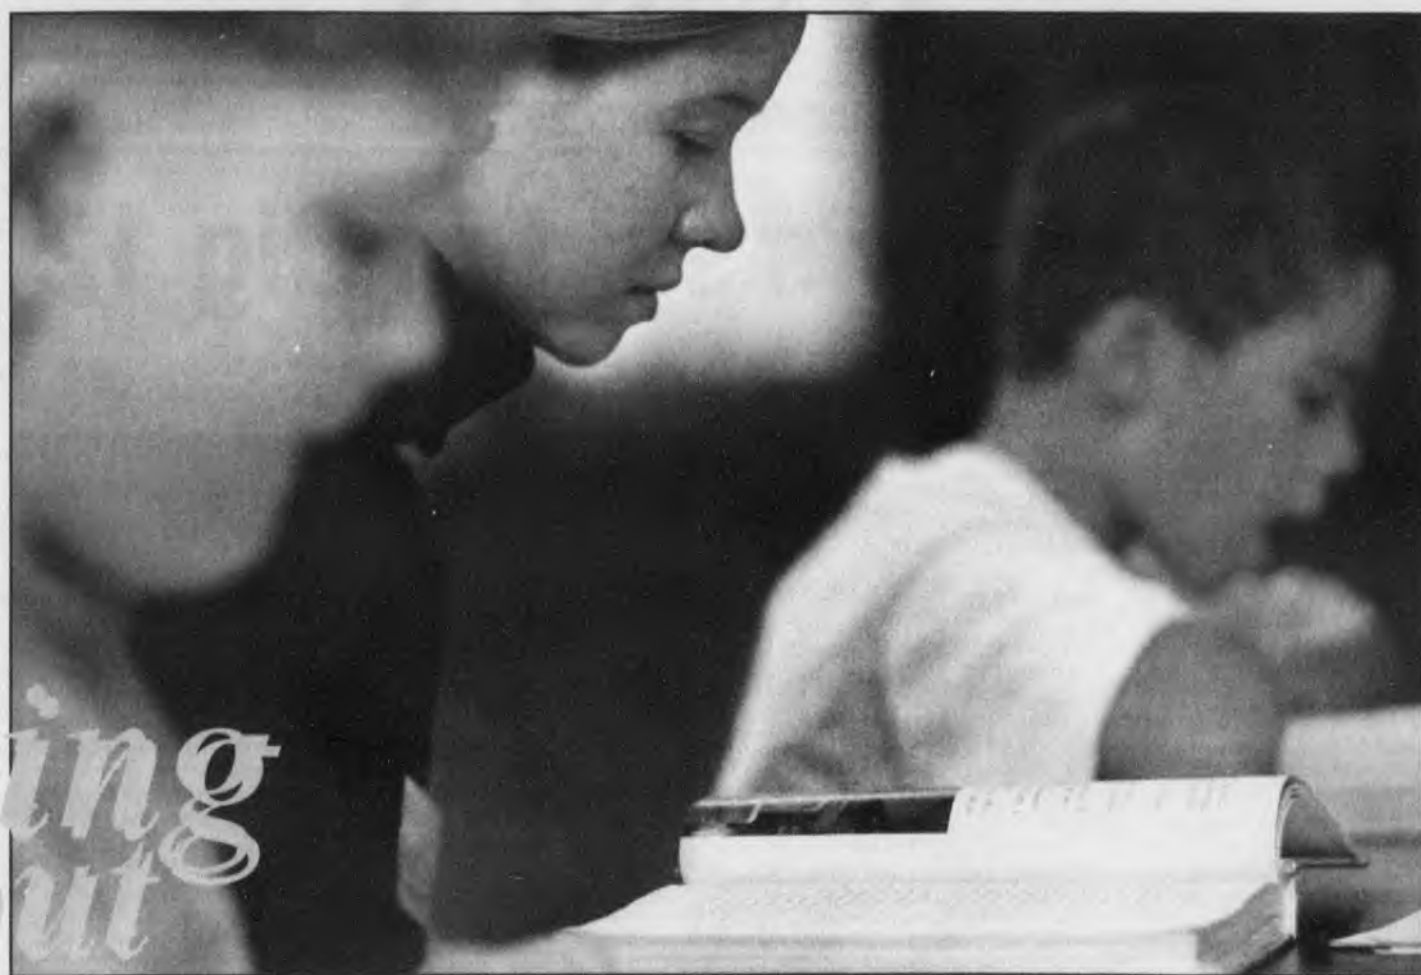

Hell is getting pretty full, and as today is election day, Satan may be adding a new wing. There's an easy way to avoid its fiery gates.

Just a tip.

Greeks volunteer to tutor at local schools

The big kids in Manhattan-area elementary schools won't be the sixth graders anymore.

Instead, members of fraternities and sororities, who will help elementary students with their homework during school hours, will be the big kids.

This is the first year of the Adopt-A-School program for area elementary schools.

Lisa Denicola, sophomore in elementary education, said it is a way for fraternities and sororities to give back to the community and also give students extra help they might need.

"We are going to work with students who don't get enough attention at home, struggling with their homework, and in general, just be peer mentors to them," Denicola said.

In order to make the students more comfortable with their mentors, each volunteer will work with the same student every week for a couple of hours.

Denicola said the program is comparable to Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc., but instead of joining in a game of baseball or soccer, volunteers also help the students with their studies.

Becky Deardorff, junior in elementary/middle school education, worked with a third grader last year in a program similar to the Adopt-A-School program. Deardorff, one of the co-coordinators of this year's effort, said she enjoyed the experience.

She said she was surprised by the feedback from the greek community when volunteers were asked to participate.

"We had so many volunteers that we didn't even have enough students for every volunteer. We probably had about 80 volunteers, and we only had about 40 to 50 spots," Deardorff said.

Deardorff said she hoped once word gets out to area schools, there will be more students available. The program started from scratch, due to problems with reliability and responsibility last year.

Kathy Hill, senior in pre-nursing, coordinates the Adopt-A-School program as part of her duties as vice president of Panhellenic Council.

"It's a good PR program for the greek community," Hill said.

As of now, three elementary schools participate in the program. Deardorff said one of her jobs as co-coordinator is to check in with the schools every two to three weeks.

"We are just going to check to make sure things are running smoothly," she said. "Hopefully next semester more elementary schools will want to participate."

Dan Rundquist, 9, rests his hands on a book while reading a passage of the text. Rundquist, who is in Jane Waterson's fourth-grade class, had a 15-minute reading session.

Mitch blamed for 7,000 deaths after mudslides blanket villages

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHINANDEGA, Nicaragua — Overwhelmed by death and chaos, Central American officials on Monday estimated more than 7,000 people died in floods and mudslides triggered by Hurricane Mitch.

As many as 1,500 people were buried near this town in northwest Nicaragua when the crater lake of the Casitas Volcano collapsed, sending a wall of mud and debris onto villages below.

"It looked like a line of helicopters flying really low and coming at us. You could see houses, trees, everything being covered," said Ricardo Antonio Garcia, a 23-year-old farmer whose leg was amputated after being crushed in the mudslide.

Nicaraguan vice president Enrique Bolanos said the slide apparently killed 1,000 to 1,500 people, and some 600 people died elsewhere in the country.

"We perhaps will never know how many people died," he said.

In neighboring Honduras, more than 5,000 people probably died, Dimas Alonzo, operations chief for the National Emergency Committee, told a local radio station. He said the exact number never would be known.

Many parts of Honduras remained cut off almost a week after Mitch barreled into the Bay Island of Guanaja with 180 mph winds. The storm pounded across the isthmus, dropping up to 25 inches of rain in a six-hour period, before dissipating Monday in southern Mexico.

The president of Honduras told CNN's Spanish-language network the flooding was so extensive that 70 percent of the upcoming harvest had been lost.

"There are many hundreds of dead," President Carlos Flores Facusse told CNN. "There are bodies that are floating in the rivers" and people on rooftops awaiting rescue, he said.

Virtually all of Honduras suffered flooding, from the lowland marshes on the Atlantic Coast to the interior.

K-State takes driver's seat in Big 12 title race

■ 2 Nebraska losses put Cats in position to claim conference championship.

By AARON J. LOPEZ
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Big 12 must be trapped in a strange parallel universe where U.S. presidents practice fidelity and Jerry Springer is a humble role model. How else to explain why longtime loser K-State reigns and perennial power Nebraska resides in third place?

Fourth-ranked K-State (8-0, 5-0 Big 12 North) has made monumental strides under head coach Bill Snyder this decade, but it has been 35 years since the Wildcats last had a two-game advantage over Nebraska (7-2, 3-2).

"As all coaches say, nothing surprises you in the game of football," Snyder said Monday. "Anybody can get anybody at any given time, but certainly you never really expect Nebraska to be on the losing side of the score."

The unexpected has happened twice this season, leaving Nebraska little chance of catching K-State, which had losing seasons in 19 of 20 years from 1971-90.

The Wildcats, whose last league title came in the days of the Big Six in 1934, have lost 29 straight to Nebraska and still can advance to the Big 12 conference championship game even if the streak hits 30 on Nov. 14.

They have Texas A&M, Texas, injuries and Nebraska's inexperience to thank.

The Cornhuskers lost starting quarterback Bobby Newcombe to a torn knee ligament two weeks ago and subsequently were upset by No. 20 Texas. Nebraska used two quarterbacks, Monte Christo and Eric Crouch, against the Longhorns.

"Regardless of which team you talk about, whether it's the teams rated right at the very top or the ones rated close to the top in the country, if you asked them to play with three quarterbacks throughout their season, they might not be sitting quite where they're sitting right now," Nebraska coach Frank Solich said.

"I look at 7-2 as being not where Nebraska has necessarily been over the last three or four years, but Nebraska's been in this situation before. A lot of teams would enjoy a 7-2 record at this point. Our kids have accomplished a great deal, and I don't want to diminish that."

With Nebraska having lost two conference games for the first time since 1990, K-State has assumed the role of Big 12 bully, thrashing opponents by an average of 43.7 points per game.

They might be ranked No. 4, but it's hard to argue against the Wildcats as the nation's top team.

"I think they're as good as anybody in the country," said Colorado head coach Rick Neuheisel, whose team lost to K-State 16-9. "I've seen (No. 2) UCLA. I've seen (No. 1) Ohio State. Kansas State can play right with those guys."

Baylor is K-State's next opponent, having scheduled the Wildcats as its homecoming game.

When asked if he has seen a team as good as K-State this season, Baylor coach Dave Roberts was emphatic.

"No. No. I had the same feelings last year at Nebraska," he said. "They're an excellent football team. I'd sure like to see who's first because these guys can play."

K-State still 4th in BCS standings

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

UCLA's close call was Tennessee's big gain in the Bowl Championship Series standings.

Ohio State and Tennessee were 1-2 in the latest BCS standings released Monday, while UCLA dropped from first to third place after a 28-24 win over Stanford.

The standings are calculated by using The Associated Press' media poll and the coaches' poll, three computer rankings, strength-of-schedule and number of losses. These standings will determine who plays in the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, with the national title on the line.

The final BCS standings will be released on Dec. 6, and the top-two teams will play in Tempe, Ariz., on Jan. 4.

The Buckeyes (8-0), ranked No. 1 in the AP poll and coaches' poll, moved from second to first place with 3.71 total points — one point for poll average; 1.75 points for computer rank average; 0.96 for strength-of-schedule and zero for losses.

Tennessee (7-0), moved from third to second with 5.70 points — 2.5 for poll average; 2.92 for computer average; 0.28 for strength-of-schedule and zero for losses. The Vols have the seventh-toughest schedule, while the Buckeyes' schedule is rated 24th toughest.

The Bruins (7-0), who were first last week with 3.05 points in the initial standings, had 6.62 points. Their poll average fell from 2 to 3.5 points, and their computer average slipped from one to three points. Strength-of-schedule went from toughest to third toughest.

K-State was in fourth place, followed by Florida, Florida State, Texas A&M, Wisconsin, Penn State and Arizona.

Volleyball squad loses to Sooners, defeats Jayhawks

By BRENT STOVER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildcat volleyball coach Jim McLaughlin has said there are no nights off in the Big 12. His team learned this the hard way Saturday night in Norman, Okla.

The Oklahoma Sooners, who entered the match with just one conference win, knocked off the Wildcats in four games.

"We weren't really well prepared," McLaughlin said. "We played like we were a rushed team. We never got into a rhythm."

The Sooners jumped out to a great start, winning the first two games, 15-13 and 15-9. "We let tips fall, we didn't pass well and we didn't serve well," McLaughlin said. "The little things added up, and the next thing we knew, our backs were against the wall."

The Cats stormed out of the locker room in Game 3 and smashed the Sooners, 15-4. However, Oklahoma bounced back in the fourth game and created a thrilling battle.

The two teams played back and forth the entire game until the score was tied at 14.

That's when the Sooners reeled off two-straight points to capture the game and the match, 16-14.

"Any team can beat anybody in this conference, because every team is physical," McLaughlin said. "If you take care of the little things and you're into details, you can upset anybody."

Melissa Christman and Holly McMillian each recorded 20 kills for the Sooners. Meredith Van Horn chipped in with 14 kills and 23 digs for Oklahoma.

"We took them for granted a little bit, and they snuck up and got us," McLaughlin said.

The loss Saturday night seemed to erase the excitement of K-State's sweep of KU on Friday night in Lawrence.

In that match, the Cats outlasted the Jayhawks in each of the first two games with wins of 15-13 and 15-12, respectively.

K-State had little trouble in Game 3, with a 15-2 blowout of the Hawks.

"We were good when we really had to be," McLaughlin said. "We were about the same in Game 3, but they (KU) just broke down."

Freshman Liz Wegner led the way for the Cats with 15 kills, hitting .333, while senior Kim Zschau added 11 kills and 19 digs to K-State's cause.

The Cats are back on the road again next weekend. K-State will play at Nebraska on Friday night and at Colorado on Saturday night.

"We stubbed our toe, and it's going to heal," McLaughlin said. "Now we've got to get running on it again."

Fall season ends with repeat win of Kansas Cup

By SARAH CRAIG

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's crew team concluded the fall season by taking home the Kansas Cup for the second year in a row. The varsity team won four of six races against the Jayhawks on Saturday at Clinton Lake. The novice team won every event.

The weekend weather proved to be a factor because there was a strong tailwind and strong rain. Rowers said this can cause difficulties in racing.

"Usually, if you have great water, you just go out there and row," junior Kristy Tencleve said. "In this case, we had a tailwind, which can change the way your boat is going, and with the rain, your hands get wet and slippery on the oars. It's easy to lose your grip."

The race was the last intercollegiate race of the fall season, which generally consists of races 5,000 meters long. The spring season consists of races about 2,000 meters long, changing the techniques rowers use. The Kansas Cup was a 2,000-meter race, however, and pointed out some areas the rowers said they felt they need to improve.

"We have great rhythm and power at 28 strokes per minute, and we need to apply that when we take up the strokes per minute," senior Tricia Stockebrand said.

The team practices year round and plans to focus on endurance during the winter. The ultimate goal of making the NCAAAs is still an important factor.

"We need to work on getting a lot of power per stroke — making every stroke as powerful as possible," Stockebrand said. "Getting into an anaerobic threshold where you're maxed and you reach oxygen debt — we need to work on getting to that point and going through that."

"In the springtime, that's what it comes down to. You need to work through that, and whoever can pull through, wins," she said.

The novice team was victorious in every race, winning by margins from 22 to 43 seconds. The rowers said they were pleased with the performance.

"Our novices are turning a lot of heads. They've won several medals this fall," Tencleve said. "We definitely have a strong novice squad that's hopefully moving up next fall."

The team competed in the Head of the Charles on Oct. 16 and 17, a regatta that included not only the top collegiate teams but also the U.S. and other national teams.

The varsity-eight boat finished 23rd in this race among colleges, giving the rowers hope for NCAA finals.

"We gave a good showing at the Head of the Charles. We look for a good, strong spring season, and we'll hopefully make the NCAA tournament," Tencleve said.

There is one final chance to see the rowers this fall, at the class races on Saturday. These races are class vs. class and give family and friends a chance to see the team.

"That's a fun day for parents to come up and see the program, meet the other parents and see the boathouse," Stockebrand said.

No matter how you look at it, UCLA Bruins are very lucky, overrated football squad

Two yards.

That's how close Stanford was from pushing No. 3 UCLA off the ledge for good, sending it spiraling down an abyss too big even for Bob Toledo's mouth.

I apologize immediately for that comment, but it's true, as were the comments aimed at No. 3 UCLA by Oregon quarterback Akili Smith on Oct. 17 and California wide receiver Dameane Douglas on Oct. 24.

"(UCLA) didn't look like a No. 2 team — maybe a No. 27 or No. 28 team," California's Douglas said, following No. 3 UCLA's 28-16 win. "I'd like to play them any day. We beat them up, and I think whoever plays them next week should be happy how soft they'll be."

No. 3 UCLA was two yards away from losing its homecoming game to a 1-6 Stanford team on a day where rumor became reality for 64,820 blue-and-gold witnesses at the Rose Bowl.

No. 3 UCLA is overrated. No. 3 UCLA is beatable. No. 3 UCLA was ranked No. 1 in the first Bowl Championship Series poll, released last Monday, dropped to No. 3 in the BCS this week, but moved to No. 1 this week in The Seattle Times rankings. Toledo is the No. 1 coach in the country who shouldn't criticize comments about getting a lack of respect.

"That's frustrating," Toledo told The Associated Press two days after the win over California, when he learned of Douglas' comments. "When you're at the top, they're going to knock you down. It's disappointing to see people act like that, to be perfectly blunt."

Toledo is a great coach. He's blessed with computer formulas that have liked No. 3 UCLA's season. He's blessed with the news media, which gave UCLA several positive reviews inside several national sports magazines. Perhaps UCLA's most negative portrayal so far this season is a full-spread picture inside Sports Illustrated that catches its quarterback, Cade McNown, blowing chunks mid-stream across the Rose Bowl grass. Even that lovely portrait hangs inside some Californian homes — epitomizing the heroic nature of a team that struggles against opponents.

Hearts stopped at Stanford's Jeff Allen rumbled toward the end zone on a play destined to break the hearts and shatter the dreams of Bruin fans everywhere.

Then, from nowhere, UCLA cornerback Marques Anderson ripped the ball from Allen's hands as he tiptoed the end zone and the biggest upset of this football season. UCLA won, 28-24.

"Looked kind of like what happened to (Michael) Bishop," K-State coach Bill Snyder said of Allen's last millionth-of-a-second blunder that resulted in No. 3 UCLA's nation-leading, 17th-straight victory. "But I don't have any control of that."

I nearly pulled a Cade McNown on the carpet of Collegian columnist Sam Felsenfeld's living room, where I witnessed the travesty.

"Oh yeah," Anderson told The Los Angeles Times following the game. "I think it's a team of destiny."

Ask Akili Smith. No. 3 UCLA is a team of luck, a team on life support, a team that gives fifth-year center Shawn Stuart fits after several baffling endings this season, which included a 41-38 overtime victory over then-No. 12 Oregon.

No. 3 UCLA views their close wins as a sign from God.

Religion aside, it's a sign of weakness. With success comes critics. With success comes doubters. Toledo should chat with Snyder and ask him how he handles the doubters.

Snyder doesn't care.

Toledo didn't endure the early-season ribbing Snyder received for K-State's weak non-conference schedule. Heck, K-State whipped Texas 48-7 a week after UCLA beat Texas 49-31, and UCLA jumped K-State in the polls.

Imagine, for a moment, K-State 28, Iowa State 24. How far down is that abyss again?

Snyder: "I have no control over how they decide to vote on those polls."

Snyder never once has let the respect factor bother him, at least he's never shared that emotion with the news media.

Reporter: "Some critics believe K-State will lose to Colorado this week."

Snyder: "We're taking things one day at a time. I have no control of what people believe."

Reporter: "Does it frustrate you that people may think...?"

Snyder: "Like I said, I don't control what people think about this team."

Boom. You want to win respect? You play to earn it. You let the talkers talk. You let the doubters doubt. You accept praise with a smile, face criticism with a nod and take your perfect record and shut the heck up.

Shhhh ... Listen to the criticism hovering above K-State now.

It sounds like ESPN GameDay host Chris Fowler.

It sounds like Hirk Kerbtreit, Kirk Kerbtreit — or whatever what's-his-face's name is. It sounds like a few church mice, clawing and squeaking, trying to convince a noisy nation that Nebraska will derail the Wildcats' hopes of accomplishing their first undefeated season.

Toledo and No. 3 UCLA should count their blessings today, all 28 of them. You see, Fate and Destiny are curious fellows. They're growing tired of watching No. 3 UCLA pull out these nail-biters to opponents each week.

As the computer ratings slowly release their grip from the Bruins, Fate and Destiny also might become so disgusted with this No. 3 UCLA team that they abandon the Bruins and McNown's puke in search of another national title contender.

They've already scalped a couple tickets from a poor K-State student for Nov. 14.

That's a game even they wouldn't miss.

The importance of planning ahead

Purchasing tickets well in advance helps save money

By Sara Martin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Though Thanksgiving and winter breaks might seem far away, students who fly home for the holidays need to start thinking about their travel plans.

"You should really be looking into tickets as soon as possible," said Brooke VanDegrift, a travel agent at Creative Travel. "Availability is already slim right now. There are lots of people traveling."

Julie McCoy, sophomore in elementary education, said she flies home every Christmas and summer to McMinnville, Ore. She said she tries to get tickets as early as possible.

"If you get your tickets far ahead of time, it's usually a little cheaper," McCoy said. "My tickets have been between $250 and $350 at different times."

Planning ahead also gives students extra time to shop around and wait for a better price.

"It's recommended to get tickets at least 21 days in advance," VanDegrift said. "We never know if the prices go up or down either. It's a guessing game. It's best to start checking, and if it's too high for you, wait a week or so and check again."

VanDegrift said students can help themselves get better deals by being willing to take late-night or early-morning flights during the week, instead of weekends. Usually, though, the holiday season gets booked early for the cheaper economy class seats.

Travel agents said students probably should get the advanced-purchase, round-trip excursion fare to save the most money.

Another way to cut back on expenses is to check the fares to and from various airports near the destination. VanDegrift said if the destination airport has a USAir airline, a flight out of Manhattan Regional Airport most likely will be as cheap as anywhere else. If it doesn't have USAir, flying out of Kansas City International Airport could be a better option. Most travel agents will do the checking for their clients.

Students with flights out of Kansas City, Mo. can take advantage of KCI Roadrunner. The shuttle service makes daily runs to Manhattan and the surrounding area to pick up and drop off passengers who don't want to drive.

Another benefit airlines have started offering is electronic tickets. While not cheaper, they might be easier for some students to deal with.

"It's a lot easier for me," McCoy said. "My mom doesn't have to try to send me the tickets. Your reservation is in the computer. You show up and show them your ID, and they print you out a ticket. Then you don't have to worry about losing them."

McCoy also takes advantage of frequent flier miles, which can earn free airline tickets for travelers. Passengers register for a frequent flier card, and each time they check in at the airport they get their card scanned. After a minimum of around 15,000 miles, free tickets become available.

"It's more beneficial for people who fly all the time," McCoy said. "It's going to be three years before I get a ticket, but like my mom says, 'Anything that helps.'"

Some travelers turn to the Internet to find the lowest fares and discounts, but VanDegrift said to always expect a higher price because those fares shown almost never include the various taxes imposed on plane tickets.

All of the taxes and airport fees can add up to an expense college students all over the country have to deal with.

"I think there should be some sort of a deal for students," McCoy said. "Maybe a package thing where the airlines pick the holidays that students have to go home for and make it cheaper to buy them all together."

Manhattan Arts Center looking for students who want to volunteer in art

By Sara Martin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

K-State is overflowing with eligible volunteers, and anyone with an hour or two a week to spare and an interest in the arts is welcome at the Manhattan Arts Center.

From volunteering at the after-school theater, helping with clay and visual art classes, and doing office work and production of the City Arts Magazine, to box-office jobs, ushering, set construction, costumes and play production, opportunities abound for willing helpers.

"I was looking for something to participate in the community," said Sarah Brownback, senior in management information systems. "I heard about the program and thought it would be a great way to give back."

Students can donate time as much time as they would like. Brownback works at the after-school theater class from 3 to 5 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays.

Many volunteers are able to work just a few hours a month, depending on the job they select.

"With school, it's hard to find the time," said Katie Tiply, junior in public relations, who spends a few hours twice a week on the City Arts Magazine. She contacts local theaters, bars and pubs to create a calendar of upcoming events. "I'm a PR major, so it gives me behind-the-scenes knowledge."

Brownback said her volunteering has been a learning experience.

"I didn't know enough about theater at all, going into this class," Brownback said. "I'm learning with the kids about this stuff. It's challenging coordinating activities and teaching about things I just learned myself a few days before."

Students with limited experience also are welcome.

Lisa Hayes, program director at the arts center, said there always are people who are willing to show volunteers how to do new things.

Hayes said that because of their willingness to learn and to help others, college students make excellent volunteers for the after-school program. The children also benefit, she said.

Brownback said she agreed.

"It's great, because they look at the student volunteers as role models," Brownback said.

"It's nice to know we're having an impact on their lives and the things they've learned."

Hayes said she appreciates the help from student volunteers.

"They're getting an experience they might not normally have, and we love and appreciate all the hard work they do," Hayes said. "They're here because they want to be here and be involved in the center. They add a lot to our program."

Tiply said it also helps that the arts center is willing to allow its volunteers to attain experience in several different areas.

"They're very flexible and need help in a lot of different areas," Tiply said. "If you have interests in all different areas, they're willing to let your experience be what you want."

Co-founder of JanSport to speak tonight in Union Little Theatre

■ Yowell to show slides of his mountain trips.

By Amy Miller
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

When Skip Yowell was growing up in central Kansas, he probably didn't know he someday would go from the Great Plains to the Himalayas. Not only has Yowell climbed Mount Everest and Mount Kanchenjunga — the highest and third-highest mountains on the planet, respectively — he also co-founded JanSport in 1967.

Yowell, who now is the company's vice president of global public relations, will be at K-State to give a slide presentation at 7 p.m. tonight in the Union Little Theatre.

His presentation will begin with slides from some of his travels to Asia and Africa, including his ascent of Mount Kilimanjaro, then move to a history of his company.

"It's all fun stuff," Yowell said. "It's not like a heavy commercial plug."

In 1970, Yowell, along with JanSport, whose logo is seen on backpacks across the nation, developed the first dome tent. Yowell said he was inspired by the design of the igloo, and he tested the prototype on Mount Rainier.

Yowell said he doesn't speak too technically about climbing specifics, but he uses his own photography to give people a feel for being more than 20,000 feet high.

"I want to appeal to a wide range of people," he said. "I like to make it interesting."

Yowell lived in Russell, Kan., when he was younger and later attended Great Bend High School. He recently purchased a limestone building near Gove, Kan., which he is restoring.

"I lived in Seattle for 31 years and now I live in Wisconsin," he said, "but I still have a fondness for Kansas."

Nate Kettle, sophomore in geography and UPC Outdoor Adventures Committee chair, said the K-State Union Bookstore, which sells JanSport products, contacted UPC about bringing Yowell to K-State. The committee thought it was an unusual opportunity, he said.

"With all his experiences — climbing Mount Everest and Kilimanjaro — he's lived quite an interesting life," Kettle said.

He said he thought the presentation would motivate people to pursue their dreams.

The end of Yowell's presentation will feature a question-and-answer session, where he can give prospective travelers advice on anything from shots to photography.

Increase in shelter use causes budget strain

By TL MEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Use of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., increased more than five-fold in the last year, and center officials said welfare reform might be a key factor in that increase.

In 1997, 147 families used the shelter, up from just 27 families in 1996.

Junell Norris, executive director for the shelter, said there were many reasons for the increase, with most of them related to welfare-reform laws passed in October 1996.

One effect of the Kansas welfare reform, Norris said, is the change in the amount of assistance, especially food stamps, for which people are eligible.

People who require it are given assistance for three months. During this time, they need to be actively working or looking for a job. If they are not employed at the end of the three months, they are sanctioned. This means they generally will lose their benefits. If they are employed and still in need of assistance, they usually will continue to receive some type of assistance.

If children are involved, regardless of employment status, there is an amount of assistance allotted for them, and it is not taken away.

Beryl Adams, director of the Manhattan Red Cross, said that when people lose their food stamps, they have to take money that is normally used to pay bills, such as utilities, and buy food.

Both Adams and Norris said winter is more of a problem. KPL Gas Service will notify clients with unpaid bills ahead of time if their utilities are going to be disconnected.

Adams said the Red Cross offers some utilities assistance but cannot help

"WE WOULD LIKE TO HAVE THREE MONTHS' WORTH OF OPERATIONAL FUNDING IN THE CASH RESERVES. RIGHT NOW, THE SHELTER IS ABOUT $10,000 BEHIND."

— JUNELL NORRIS
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

with the entire amount. Often, the Red Cross only can help with about $50.

If $50 is not enough to keep the utilities on, Adams said Red Cross will refer the person to the shelter. If someone gives advance notice, the shelter can reserve beds for up to 48 hours; otherwise, it is on a walk-in basis, Norris said.

Norris said there also are other reasons for the increased use of the shelter. Poor access to Social and Rehabilitation Services assistance, custody battles, divorce, difficulty in relocating to Manhattan and single parents with ill children are among the reasons.

Difficulty in finding daycare is another factor. Finding affordable daycare that works with a parent's hours is difficult to find, Norris said, making it hard for parents to keep their jobs.

Along with the increased use of the shelter, there was an increased strain on its budget and resources.

The shelter at 831 Leavenworth St. has five bedrooms and a maximum capacity of 26, Norris said. It is usually at capacity through the holiday season.

Last year, the shelter had a $30,000 deficit. Contributions raised $15,000, and the other $15,000 was taken out of cash reserves. There is now about $3,000 in the cash reserves, Norris said.

The shelter's board of directors is exploring options to build the reserves up.

"We would like to have three months' worth of operational funding in the cash reserves," Norris said. "Right now, the shelter is about $10,000 behind."

Norris said the time frame from November through the first part of December is the toughest part of the year because of cash flow. Applications for grant money are turned in at the end of October, but money is not received

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. jumped from 27 families in 1996 to 147 families in 1997. Executive Director, Junell Norris said she believes that the welfare reform may be a contributing factor for the increase.

until Dec. 1.

The final fund-raising drive for the shelter will take place Thanksgiving week. Everyone who has contributed to the shelter in the last four years will receive a letter asking them for a contribution.

However, most people will wait to donate until after Christmas. These people will want to see how much money they have left over from the holidays, Norris said.

University Counseling Services sees 17-percent increase in total contacts

University Counseling Services has had 27,309 total contacts during the past year, which is a 17-percent increase over last year.

"The main source of our increase was in the area of consultations with individuals and groups and also classroom contacts," Director Fred Newton said.

Newton said the increase resulted from an effort by UCS to reach more people.

He said he thought there was an effort made to do more presentations and classroom activities, as well as an assessment of stress table at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Assistant director Dori Lambert said the increase also was due to students recognizing what UCS offered.

"I believe that the jump is because more people are aware of our resources and are becoming more aware that they need to work hard in school ... and we can provide additional help, information and other services," Lambert said.

In addition to the Learning Enhancement Assistance Program, a program aimed at helping students improve their academic performance, UCS also has been conducting more presentations and workshops for students.

"We have been conducting more workshops and presentations on themes such as dealing with diversity, improving relationships, stress management and enhancing performance," Newton said.

Lambert said the UCS Web site, www.ksu.edu/ucs/, also helped reach more people and provide information about its services.

"We have always done a lot to reach out to people, especially within the last few years," Lambert said. "The use of our Web site has helped to put more information out there."

UCS also provides the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service. Its purpose is to provide up-to-date and accurate information on the physical effects and social issues related to the use of alcohol and other drugs.

Newton said UCS has done research to help students.

"We have been involved in three grants over the past three years and conducted research on topics that concern students — problems facing students and strategies that help," he said.

LEAP pairs students to improve academic performance

Students seeking help with their academic performance now are able to help other students in the same situation.

The Learning Enhancement Academic Program, conducted by University Counseling Services, is in its second year. Its mission is to help students improve their academic performance by addressing issues such as study habits, support systems and motivation.

"It's a group process designed to enhance the academic functioning of any student," Ann Johnson, UCS therapist, said.

Johnson said there are three phases to the program.

The first phase is an assessment that considers factors such as learning styles, support systems and involvement in groups or clubs.

Daniel Berkow, psychologist for UCS, said looking at various factors helps to determine what should be done to address the needs of the student.

"We look at different areas for possibly creating a change for academic success," he said.

Various factors, such as self-confidence, can influence a student's academic success, Johnson said.

"If you don't think that you can do it, you usually won't," she said.

Johnson said certain factors also can help improve performance.

"Research studies have shown that students who are involved in various clubs within their major function better than those who aren't," she said.

The second phase is a planning stage designed to help students identify what needs to be done to accomplish their goals. The final phase is a support group that meets weekly for the rest of the semester.

Johnson said the groups are small, usually from two to 10 people, so the students can interact and help each other.

"A lot of times, students pick up hints on this, that or the other from other students," she said.

Johnson said the program then addresses the needs of the particular group and what students must do to meet their goals.

On the average, students who use this program improve one letter grade, Johnson said.

"We have been successful in a sense that the individual students have been successful," she said.

Berkow said the group is open to any student wanting improved results.

"It's for average students wishing to improve their performance and also students that aren't doing so well, that are just trying to figure out how to pass," he said.

DRINKING

dents binge drink. Eighteen percent of students do not drink at all. According to the survey, a man binge drinks when he drinks five or more drinks in one setting. For women, four drinks counts as a binge.

Though Missouri's solution might not be the answer, Bosco said if it does work, K-State could consider such a policy.

"It has not worked elsewhere, but it may work in Columbia, and if it does, that certainly might be something we'd be interested in at some future time," he said.

Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel said she couldn't speak for administrators but that she would not be interested in forcing fraternities to go dry.

"The substance-abuse policies that we have in place now pretty much spell out appropriate risk-management policies, which would obviously include no underage drinking," Robel said. "I don't think we would look at that kind of a policy simply because what we have in place seems to be fairly effective at this point in time."

Farm House, Alpha Gamma Rho and Beta Theta Pi fraternities are already dry. Robel said at least four other houses are discussing going dry or have decided to make the change in the next few years.

Bosco said K-State continues to offer non-alcoholic activities for students to take part in but that students often start drinking long before they come to college, so it's hard to combat the problem.

"Drinking is in the high schools. Unfortunately, it's at social gatherings with underage students long before they come to the university," Bosco said. "There's a lot to do in Manhattan of a non-alcoholic nature, and we stress that."

"Has that made a significant impact on binge drinking? Probably not. Will restrictions ... regarding freshman housing affect binge drinking? Probably not," he said.

Bill Arck, K-State's director of alcohol and other drug education, said banning alcohol in all fraternity houses could decrease problems, but it also could push underage drinking into the community — comparable to what happened when the legal drinking age changed from 18 to 21.

"You wonder if barring it in a living situation like that will simply push the problem outside of the house and maybe more into the community," Arck said. "Back when it was 18, I think the majority of drinking was probably going on in the Aggieville area. Now, private parties are the premiere place."

chance of rain Monday night with less precipitation through the rest of the week.

The office has notified people in areas such as Hunter's Island, a community with Wildcat Creek on one side and the Kansas River on the other, which are likely to flood. Sixteen roads were closed Monday when they were covered with water.

Terri Olson is the Hunter's Island contact for the emergency-management office. A temporary association to work with government bodies was formed in the aftermath of the 1993 flood, and Olson said that until now, she hasn't had any contact with the office since then.

Olson said she is worried about the water but not as much as in 1993 because Milford Reservoir is not full. In the case of Hunter's Island, when Milford Reservoir is full, it can't control the runoff from its tributaries, causing the river level to rise.

"We're just watching and waiting, because as long as the Milford Reservoir still has holding capacity, it's not a repeat scenario of '93," Olson said. "While Milford can still hold more water, that protects us."

The Olson family has not yet seen any water in their basement, although there are some flooded fields and ditches along Rosencutter Road.

South Manhattan Avenue was closed at the Wildcat Creek bridge Monday due to water, but by evening the road had been reopened.

Olson said the road being closed blocked access to Hunter's Island from one direction, but people still could get in and out at the Rosencutter Road access.

Emergency-management sources said most of the people in affected areas are used to watching the water and know at what levels they need to evacuate. As of Monday, no evacuation had been ordered.

The emergency-management department recommends that residents be aware of the water conditions and the weather conditions.

If water should be seen on the road, residents are advised to call the police department to report it and not to drive through the water.

Rod Meredith, assistant director of public works, said several of the 16 closed roads were being reopened by late Monday afternoon.

"Once they're open, we're going back and checking to make sure they're passable and restoring the surface as quickly as we can," Meredith said.

He said all the roads should be repaired by today.

Another 350 residents were evacuated in west Wichita on Sunday, with smaller numbers of evacuations in Towanda and rural areas.

No one had been forced to evacuate in Cowley County Monday, but sandbagging had begun in Winfield and Arkansas City, emergency-management coordinator Randy Duncan said.

"We warned some people (Sunday) night that the Walnut River was rising and they may want to consider leaving," he said. "A few people left voluntarily, but we haven't had to order any evacuations yet."

The Walnut River was expected to crest at 39 feet early Tuesday, which would cause the second-worst flooding ever in the county.

Most highways leading into Winfield were closed and several county roads also were impassable, he said.

ELECTION '98

REPUBLICAN REPEAT

Graves cruises to election win

BY MATT KREPS AND ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD

Republican supporters celebrated the end of a 36-year jinx on Republican governors when Bill Graves was re-elected Tuesday night.

Graves collected 73 percent of the vote with 98 percent of precincts reporting. The win makes him the first Republican governor to be elected to a second term in 36 years. It also appeared Graves would set a record for the widest margin of victory in a Kansas governor's race.

"There have been some fine, fine people who have gone down this path and not had this much success," Graves said.

Graves attributed his success not to political campaigning but rather to what he did while in office for the state. A candidate who is successful at the polls but fails at public service is, ultimately, a failure in office, Graves said.

"I believe our success has little to do with politics and a lot to do with delivering great public service to the people of Kansas," Graves said.

Rather than focus on issues or his priorities for the next term, Graves spoke of family and commitment in his acceptance speech.

Graves, who spoke with his daughter in his arms, thanked his wife, Linda, "the loveliest, the greatest first lady of Kansas," and his daughter, Katie, "the littlest first lady," for their support during his campaign. He also gave credit to his parents and his extended family for his success.

"I would not be here without the support and confidence instilled in me by my parents, Bill and Helen Graves," Graves said. "Family,

Peterson victorious with 56 percent of vote

BY JENNIFER LUCKE

Republican incumbent Jeff Peterson was re-elected to the Kansas Legislature on Tuesday with 55 percent of the vote.

Peterson received 2,168 votes. His opponent, Democrat Sydney Carlin, received 1,752 votes — 44 percent of the vote.

Peterson served on the House Appropriations Committee during his first term. Before he was elected to the Legislature, Peterson served as K-State student body president from 1994-96.

The atmosphere at the Manhattan Republican Headquarters was hopeful as Peterson's supporters calculated his chances of winning, based on early returns. Peterson waited at the Riley County Courthouse to hear the numbers. When the final numbers came in, Peterson returned to cheers at headquarters.

Brownback breezes to easy win, focuses on tax reform, Social Security

BY MATT KREPS AND ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD

With a convincing win at the polls, U.S. Sen. Sam Brownback will go back to the nation's capitol to represent the people of Kansas.

Brownback, who had gathered 65 percent of the vote with 99 percent of the votes counted, defeated Democratic state Sen. Paul Feleciano of Wichita by 40 percent.

In his acceptance speech, Brownback referred to traditional Republican themes, including tax reform, Social Security and family values.

"We've won, and we've won for the right reasons," the victorious senator said.

Feleciano, a senior state senator with 26 years in the Legislature, faced an uphill battle from the start and had history against him — the last Kansas Democrat in the U.S. Senate was in the 1930s. He is in the middle of his four-year state Senate term.

Brownback said tax codes need to be reformed to eliminate the death penalty on inheritances and eliminate the marriage penalty that pushes married couples into higher tax brackets due to combined income.

Brownback spent most of his time focusing on family values and character.

"We must renew our American character. Yes, character does matter, and it matters greatly," he said. "And I hope in the months and years to come that the people of Kansas won't be afraid to say it."

Brownback also expressed another Republican campaign theme with a brief reference to military readiness.

"America must lead," he said. "We can not subcontract leadership to the United Nations or anyone else."

1/4-cent sales tax proposal fails on Manhattan ballot

BY M.A. LOROFF

Money spent in Manhattan no longer will be taxed for economic development.

Voters on Tuesday rejected by 22 percent a proposal that would have levied a quarter-cent sales tax for economic development in the city.

A half-cent development tax, used to fund loans for incoming Manhattan businesses, will cease in December. Citizens voted against the tax, 5,362 (61 percent) to 3,386 (39 percent).

Had voters approved the question, the sales tax would have risen to 7.15 cents on the dollar. Though the half-cent tax for development will cease, a new half-cent tax to pay for the Riley County Law Enforcement Center will begin next year.

City commissioners said they're disappointed that the tax did not pass but that the issue will come up again.

"I'm disappointed, because it's important to Manhattan's future, but it's not the end of the world," Manhattan Mayor Steve Hall said. "It was our job to simply put it on the ballot."

The current tax finances the Economic Opportunity Fund, which is used to draw new companies to Manhattan that fulfill initiatives set by the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board.

Hale Library able to keep all journals — for now

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

■ OUR OPINION
The Collegian editorial board says library funding needs to be placed back at the top of K-State's list of priorities. See Page 4.

Thanks to last year's efforts to offset Hale Library's dwindling journal-subscriptions budget, the library has broken even this year — thwarting the need for a new round of journal cancellations.

A Kansas Legislature-approved, 1-percent increase in K-State's Other Operating Expenditures budget — amounting to $328,000 — allows the library to cover inflation-related increases in its periodical-subscription budget for this school year. The increase, one-half percent of which was specifically for the library with the other half coming from the university at large, provides for journals to which the library already subscribes.

However, the question on many campus minds is what the library will do to cover inflationary costs next year if the Kansas Board of Regents doesn't receive a budget increase.

"The Board of Regents are asking for another 1-percent increase of the total operating base to go to libraries to cover inflationary costs," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said. "If the Legislature does not include those funds in the budget, we are looking at another round of cancellations a year from now."

Last year's strides, this year's downturn

The library budget shortfall became the focus of campus attention last fall when President Jon Wefald was overwhelmed with faculty interest at his State of the University Address. Wefald veered from his speech in order to dedicate much of the time to addressing faculty concerns about the shortfall.

Since July 1, the U.S. market has corrected itself 20 percent from the year's earlier high. This was an unexpected setback for university officials who were hopeful for a continuing upbeat economy.

The subject resurfaced when a task force appointed by the provost in spring 1997 released a report in late fall proposing various funding resources that could be tapped to help the library. Out of that plan rose the so-called "three-legged stool" concept. This proposal involved a legislative funding increase of $328,000, an additional $330,000 from a proposed student fee and up to $500,000 from the KSU Foundation. Of that money, only the $328,000 from the Legislature has materialized.

The Foundation's plans to help the library faltered when worldwide markets began to fall in July. Since July 1, the U.S. market has corrected itself 20 percent from the year's earlier high. This was an unexpected setback for university officials who were hopeful for a continuing upbeat economy.

David Weaver, vice president for real estate and investments at the Foundation, said K-State's investments have decreased only 8 percent due to a conservative, diverse investment policy. The Foundation's library plan hinged on new endowments — meaning the Foundation would direct all money over 7 percent earned on new endowments to the library. As such, there has been a loss on new endowments due to the market downturn.

"Right now, the number is zero," Weaver said, referring to the money earmarked for the library. "We really won't know until the end of the year."

The library did not include any Foundation money in its budget for this fiscal year. Any money that would have come in would have been used for one-time, non-recurring expenses.

The Foundation began the plan on July 1, so no new money would be available until the end of the fiscal year, or June 30, 1999.

After this initial year, the Foundation would provide money per quarter. As for the Foundation's other endowments, such as scholarships, any market downturn can be corrected by a three-year reserve fund.

For the library to expect any money come June, K-State's investments would have to rise at least 15 percent — a figure Weaver said is "doable if the optimism returns to the market."

Although university officials were optimistic about the Foundation's plans last spring, faculty members said they are concerned that little, if any, will be provided for next year's library budget. Additionally, many faculty, including Hobrock, thought the Foundation's payments would come quarterly, as opposed to an end-of-the-fiscal-year

City commission votes to reposition monolith

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dozens of citizens left Tuesday night's City Commission meeting angry when Mayor Steve Hall said there would not be an opportunity for public comment on one of the issues on the agenda.

The commission voted to reposition, but not relocate, the granite monolith at the Poyntz Avenue entrance of City Hall.

The monolith, a gift from the Fraternal Order of the Eagles, Aerie and Auxiliary No. 2468, was accepted in 1958 by a unanimous commission vote and placed on the city auditorium lawn until City Hall was renovated in 1997.

During the 1998 renovation, the monolith was made more visible, which City Manager Gary Greer said he did not expect to generate such controversy.

Citing the 912 phone calls, 27 letters, 29 e-mails and 272 petitions received over the monolith, Hall said city staff already has responded to many citizens' concerns.

"There's only so many times you can say the same thing again and again," Hall said.

Hall said putting the item on the agenda was to provide city administration with a direction to take but not for a popularity contest between the two sides of the debate. As a result, Hall did not ask for public comment before the commission voted 3-2 to keep the monolith in the same location but to rotate it from a position facing north toward City Park to face east, instead.

Both commissioners who voted against the change, Bruce Sneed and Karen McCulloh, said they disapproved of the mayor's decision.

Investigation ongoing in student shooting

The Riley County Police Department has not released any further details about last week's shooting that killed a K-State student and a Junction City man.

Thomas E. Richardson Jr., 22, freshman in business, and Brent Lawless, 36, a Junction City parole officer, were found dead from gunshot wounds in Richardson's apartment on Oct. 26. Last week, RCPD Capt. Steve French said preliminary reports indicated that Lawless shot Richardson before he turned the gun on himself.

At the time, French said the motive for the deaths was probably "a relationship between the two that was not going well."

French said investigators still are tying up loose ends and waiting for financial records and other evidence to arrive at their office before they release their findings.

Richardson was a 1994 graduate of Lawrence High School, according to obituary information released by Rumsey-Yost Funeral Home in Lawrence. The home would not release information about Richardson's family.

A private burial will take place, but there will not be a public service.

Memorials may be sent to Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witness in care of the funeral home, P.O. Box 1260, Lawrence, KS 66044.

A campus memorial service has not been planned.

FFA groups missing from American Royal

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Organizers of the American Royal livestock show and rodeo are scrambling for ways to attract new visitors after one of the event's largest supporters — the FFA convention — prepares to leave town.

The American Royal's future depends on how effectively it replaces almost 40,000 FFA conventioners, said Jim Taylor, the event's general manager.

The FFA convention will meet in Louisville, Ky., beginning next year.

The American Royal's 99th annual celebration began last month with a barbecue contest and continues this week with a horse show and rodeo. The event traditionally draws about 300,000 visitors, but even with the FFA's presence last year, the event barely broke even.

The FFA convention was one of Kansas City's largest conventions. At the same time, it drew thousands of spectators from all over the nation to the American Royal.

But as the American Royal begins its livestock show and rodeo this week, the event is compensating with a renewed focus on its deep local roots.

American Royal officials are reaching out to suburban families, youth groups and a fledgling local student group, Agriculture Future of America.

Taylor said he expects a few hundred FFA members from surrounding states to attend the Royal next year because the Louisville convention won't fall on the same dates. However, the American Royal does not plan any formal recognition of the group's last year in Kansas City.

"I think the community is cautious about praising them for leaving," Taylor said.

Clinic evacuated after package found nearby

WICHITA — A can wrapped with duct tape was found outside of a well-known abortion clinic Tuesday, prompting nearby buildings to be evacuated and a bomb squad called to the scene.

Members of the bomb squad disabled the device and took it to a lab for further investigation, said Maj. John Hershberger of the Wichita Police Department.

The package had wires protruding from it and appeared to be explosive, Hershberger said.

A security guard at Women's Health Care Services found the device outside of the building about 12:30 p.m. Tuesday and alerted police, Lt. Chuck Loftis said.

The clinic itself was not evacuated, but certain sections of the clinic were shutdown after the can was found, Loftis said.

"It appears that someone could have tossed it from a moving vehicle," Loftis said. "But it's unknown for sure how it got there."

The clinic is operated by Dr. George Tiller, who frequently is targeted for protests because he is one of the few doctors in the country who performs late-term abortions.

Tiller and his clinic have been targets in the past. Just last week, the Wichita clinic was one of five Midwest abortion providers that received letters threatening to contain the deadly biological chemical, anthrax.

The letter was not opened and no employees were affected, but the clinic was evacuated for about 45 minutes.

Justices hear debate in vehicle-search case

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Supreme Court justices were skeptical Tuesday about giving police blanket authority to search people and their cars without consent after ticketing them for routine violations.

"It does seem an enormous amount of authority to put into the hands of the police," Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg said. "We do have constitutional checks because we're not always sure that the police will exercise good judgment."

"If somebody jaywalks, the police could search them?" Justice John Paul Stevens asked.

"Correct," Bridget A. Chambers, Iowa assistant attorney general said.

An Iowa man's lawyer argued that his rights were violated by a police search of his car that turned up marijuana.

Patrick Knowles was stopped for speeding on March 6, 1996, in Newton, Iowa. An officer gave him a speeding ticket and then searched Knowles and his car's passenger compartment.

Knowles argued that the search violated the Constitution's Fourth Amendment protection against unreasonable searches. Iowa courts allowed the marijuana to be used as evidence, and Knowles was convicted and sentenced to 90 days in jail.

The Supreme Court is expected to rule in the case by July.

Lesbian must share child with ex-partner

NEWARK, N.J. — A lesbian must share custody of her 2-year-old son with her ex-partner, a judge has ruled.

Experts said the decision, which grants the ex-partner the status of a parent, is a first because of the broad custody rights given to a woman who is not the child's birth mother.

The partner, identified only as R.E.M., was not the boy's biological mother but stayed home to take care of him while her partner, S.L.V., went to work. The Lakewood couple chose a sperm donor together to inseminate S.L.V., sent out birth announcements with both women's fingerprints on them and attended Lamaze classes together.

"The court is satisfied that R.E.M. has been able to show that she stands in the shoes of a parent to the child and should be accorded the status of parent in parity with S.L.V.," Superior Court Judge Vincent Grasso wrote in his decision issued Monday.

"It's an enormous victory," said Kate Kendell, who leads the National Center for Gay and Lesbian Rights in San Francisco. "It recognizes that biology is not the sole determining factor of whether someone is a parent."

But the decision, delivered from Ocean County, is not binding statewide and follows an opposite opinion issued in September.

Dozens of lesbian couples who adopted or raised children together have become involved in custody battles over the past decade, mostly within the past three years, Kendell said. In most cases, judges have ruled that the nonbiological partner doesn't have a legal right to sue, she said.

Water rushes through the Walnut River levee Tuesday on the east side of Arkansas City, causing heavy flooding. Two thousand people were evacuated.

2,000 forced from homes in Arkansas City

By ROXANA HEGEMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan. — Two rain-swollen rivers on either side of the city flooded Tuesday and forced more than 2,000 people from their homes.

By the end of the day, about 40 percent of Arkansas City was expected to be flooded, said Jim Lazelle, assistant civil defense director.

The problem started Tuesday morning when the Walnut River east of the city near the Oklahoma state line broke through a levee, inundating 300 homes.

One man is presumed drowned in the Arkansas River to the west after telling a friend he was going for a swim, Sheriff Bob Odell said. He was identified as Larry Dale Hotchkiss, 41, of Arkansas City.

Farther north, near Newton, Kan., a woman was swept away to her death when she drove her car onto a road that had been barricaded. The woman was Cynthia A. Thomison, 50, of Newton.

Some people said they thought they were safe from flooding, like Howard Meador. He said a new dike, built after a 1995 flood, was supposed to protect the neighborhood. However, it only channeled more water into town after the old levee broke.

"I dropped my flood insurance last year," Meador said. "I thought I was safe. I had three dikes to protect me."

Lazelle said the new flood protection system was incomplete, so the new dike did not malfunction. Had it been finished in time, the levee never would have broken because water would not have been against it.

That was little consolation for Richard Osborne, who spent Monday night sandbagging the middle school in the belief his own home would be protected by the dike. He was so confident in the new flood protection system, he dropped his flood insurance after paying off his mortgage three weeks ago.

"I never thought anything was going to happen with these new dikes," he said.

Meanwhile, the city's 10 wells have been flooded and residents have less than 20 hours of drinking water left in reserve, Ron Parker, environmental superintendent, said.

Once that runs out, the city will resort to river water. The treated river water is safe to drink, but it has taste and odor problems, Parker said.

"This is not going to be over tomorrow or the next day. It is going to keep on going," City Manager Curtis Freeland said.

On Tuesday morning, assessment teams made up of personnel from the Federal Emergency Management Administration, state Emergency Management and local officials went to the flooded areas and began making damage assessments, to see if it is severe enough to trigger a presidential disaster declaration.

"There are an awful lot of people affected in the flood areas," state Adjutant General James F. Rueger said. "Places that normally don't get flooded even in times of high water are flooded this time. In many cases, the water is higher and the flooding is worse than in the '93 flood."

In Augusta, Rueger said, most of the flooded homes were not in the flood plain, and therefore, had no flood insurance.

Gov. Bill Graves added four more counties to the list Tuesday of those he declared disaster areas, including Franklin, McPherson, Neosho and Sumner counties. Butler, Chase, Cowley and Sedgwick counties were given the designation Monday, long before the rivers crested.

Elsewhere in eastern Kansas, moderate flooding occurred Tuesday morning along the Marais des Cygnes River at Ottawa. The river was more than seven feet above flood stage and was expected to fall below the flood stage early Wednesday.

On Monday, the Franklin County Sheriff's Department rescued a couple stranded near Pomona and a group of people trapped in an elevator when the power went out in Ottawa.

The city's flood gates across U.S. Highway 59 will remain closed at least through Thursday, Ottawa officials said. Kansas will get no respite from the flooding until the surging river water moves south into Oklahoma, said Lt. Col. Dean Ellingson of the Air National Guard.

National Guard personnel were on duty in all affected areas, including an Air National Guard detachment sent to Arkansas City from Wichita on Monday night to prevent looting.

OUR VIEW

Hale Library needs student referendum

K-State might be leading the Big 12 in football rankings, but we're dead last when it comes to library quality.

Our journal subscriptions budget has dwindled beyond crisis status, to the point the university is diverting hundreds of thousands of dollars from other academic entities just to keep from slashing the library's subscriptions left and right. Students are starting to see small charges pile up at the library, and the latest is a small fee for printing documents.

Like sailors who keep plugging holes in their raft with their fingers, this plunge toward fiscal insolvency cannot be allowed to progress further.

It might be last year's news to lament the consistent underfunding of Hale Library or the short attention span of our administration, but if K-State doesn't begin to address this issue seriously, the future of the institution could be jeopardized.

Last year, K-State recognized the problem and attempted to better it by proposing a number of solutions. Emerging from a Provost task force report were three main tenets: increased state funding, support from the KSU Foundation and a student privilege fee. Of those tenets, only $328,000 from the state Legislature can be counted.

In October, the library staff learned that the Foundation — which had suggested last spring it could provide more than $300,000 in one-time money through a complex funding process — would, in fact, be giving nothing to the library unless the stock market began an upswing.

Quite honestly, this is unacceptable. To hitch the fate of library acquisitions to un dependable investments obviously is not going to be a long-term solution, let alone one for the short term.

We, along with many faculty members, wonder why the administration and Foundation don't take a specific percentage of money, say 10 cents, from each dollar given to the university and pass it on to the library. If this plan would drive away donors or hurt the university — as many administrators would have you think — we sure haven't seen reliable evidence from the administration that this is so.

However, blame should not be laid on the Foundation, for it only raises money for projects the administration deems necessary. While there is a $10 million conceptual fund-raising plan lying dormant at the Foundation, there has been no attempt on the part of a K-State administrator to activate it.

Perhaps if the library had a champion in the administration — much the way Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, has devoted hundreds of hours of his time to developing and fund raising for the Colbert Hills Golf Course — the issue would be more urgent.

While the lion's share of questions belong to the administration, Student Governing Association could be doing more on behalf of the library. Last year, Student Senate failed a proposed 85-cent-per-credit-hour library privilege fee. However, no referendum was offered to students.

If Senate truly wants to help the library, it would authorize a student referendum to gauge opinion on whether to support a fee at a level of 85 cents, $1 or $2 per credit hour. Until this is done, no one knows for sure if the idea of a student privilege fee is even relevant.

Student body president Tracey Mann might want to lobby the Legislature for more money come spring, but let's face facts. Governor Bill Graves slashed taxes last year, and with recent downturns in the stock market, there's not likely to be a lot of money sitting around in Topeka for special interests such as K-State's library.

If last year proved anything about K-State campus politics, it was that President Jon Wefald's "number one" priorities change as often as the windy Kansas weather. Faculty salaries are an important issue and a noble cause, but hardly the core of this institution. If the library isn't given due consideration, K-State's academic successes might be gone with the wind.

USE CONDOM SENSE

Condoms in residence halls smart, beneficial to K-State students

The first shots in the latest condom wars have been fired. The Regional AIDS Project fired with the first volley by presenting the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls with the idea of putting up AIDS-awareness displays accompanied by free condoms.

The usual arguments came up. The most popular: "If they really cared about stopping the spread of HIV, they would promote abstinence." This argument is founded in naivete. The fact of the matter is people are having sex.

Promoting abstinence would be painfully ineffective. We all know how much we enjoy being told what to do, particularly as teen-agers, who are often the target of such promotions. As a teen-ager, being told you can't, you shouldn't or you won't is often reason enough to do something. It's not intelligent to do something just because someone told you not to, but at some time, we've all done something just because someone said not to. Anti-smoking ads are a good example of how effective an anti-intercourse promotion would be.

One question that comes to my mind is why is sex seen as such a vile act? At the same time, birth, the intended result of intercourse, is seen as one of the most beautiful things in the world. Sex is dirty, shameful, and not to be talked about in public. But, a birth is cause for celebration and letting the world know someone new has arrived.

You can't get babies without sex. Well, actually, nowadays you can, but that's a whole other issue. Let's face it, the desire to have sex is just as innate and natural as the desire to eat or drink. If no one ever had sexual desires, we wouldn't be here as a species, would we? The fact of the matter is, the lustiest individuals through history had the most offspring, and we, thus far, are the end result of their lust.

Is that so bad? I'm glad to be here. Condoms are caught in the middle of two powerful forces: the modern ideals of society and a few million years of instinct. Society says you should wait to have sex until you are married, and marriage is acceptable around 24 years of age. Instinct says the body is ready to reproduce at around age 15, and individuals need to spread their genes as much as possible (which translates to lust). The result is a clash of monumental proportions.

Regardless of your personal views on the issue, I think most people would agree they have sexual desires but might not be ready for children. How you solve this problem is a decision only you can make. For some, abstinence is the answer, and that's great. Others are comfortable giving in to their desires and taking precautions to avoid unwanted pregnancies.

Having condoms available is not going to affect someone's decision to have sex. The decision is more involved than that. So, by making condoms available, no one is condoning premarital sex. Making condoms available is acknowledging the fact that people are having sex and encouraging those who have made that choice to do so safely.

Another common argument is in regard to the efficacy of condoms in preventing the spread of HIV. In 1994, a European study was published in the New England Journal of Medicine. The study included 245 sexually active couples in which one partner was HIV positive. According to the study, of the 123 couples who used condoms consistently, none of the HIV negative partners became infected during the course of the study.

While condoms might not be 100 percent effective in preventing the spread of STDs, including HIV, they are highly successful if used properly every time. Condom opponents quickly would point out the chance involved. There is a chance you could be killed driving a car. For those of us who choose to drive, we can at least wear seat belts and reduce the risks involved.

The choice of whether to have intercourse is a personal one.

The choice to use protection is yet another thing to consider. If someone else's choice offends you, tough! That's the beauty of this country — no one has to conform to anyone else's ideas of what is right and what is wrong (within the law, of course).

If you choose not to have sex, good for you. But, remember you can't make that choice for anyone else. If you do choose to have sex, please do so safely. As fellow-columnist Ken Wells would say, be "Pro-phylactic."

VIEWPOINT

JASON RUCKER

A new documentary on Wright reminds us of what we lack

VIEWPOINT

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

If Frank Lloyd Wright were alive today, we probably would turn on next week's Ken Burns documentary of the architect and hear endless pronouncements of architectural wisdom from a wild man in puffy director's pants and white hair to rival Einstein.

Ah, the good old days. The acclaimed documentary filmmaker, of "The Civil War" fame, has created a film of Wright's life and career, which will be broadcast in two parts on PBS (local channel 11) at 8 p.m. next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Looking over the roster of figures Burns interviewed — architect Philip Johnson, critic Paul Goldberger and Wright biographer Meryle Secrest — there are likely a few new insights into Wright's career. If anything, the film will introduce a generation to a man who is arguably this century's greatest architect.

That, of course, is not a view had by all. Although, with Wright, you could point to any number of his projects as seminal American icons: Fallingwater, N.Y.'s Guggenheim Museum or the SC Johnson Wax Administration Building.

He was also, perhaps, the first American architect to become a celebrity, with his personality sometimes overshadowing his achievements.

Wright still has cult status in America — witness the endless supply of lamps, furniture (if you dare actually find it comfortable), jewelry and bric-a-brac in catalogs and artier stores. Surely Wright would be amused by that — feeding his ego to know people were marching around on the streets wearing ties with stained-glass window designs from his Oak Park, Ill., home.

You probably won't see people wearing "Guild House" ties in a salute to architect Robert Venturi. It's much harder to think of any one living architect as being necessarily the greatest or stirring such public sentiment. Famous, yes; great, no.

I'd suggest Los Angeles architect Frank Gehry matches Wright's penchant for rugged individualism. However, while Gehry has designed some formally exuberant projects — such as last year's Guggenheim Museum in Bilbao, Spain — he currently lacks the myth-making and effortless quotability of Wright. Gehry, who has as many detractors as did Wright, is a celebrity and justifiably, an architect in demand. Whether his contributions to architecture will be as far-reaching as Wright's remains to be seen.

Are there any undeniable heroes and polarizers left in the profession, or has architecture fallen to the same polite repression of the rest of the arts. The past few decades have given us architects who are either mute and build much or overly philosophical and build little. A balance of qualities is what made Wright a cult figure.

Even 92-year-old Johnson — the stylist architect-promoter responsible for the glass house — is mute on this issue. In last month's Metropolis magazine, a Johnson interview yields little of his usual wit. Of course, when Bilbao opened last year, he did admit to an architecture journal, "When a building is that good, f*** the art." Still, hardly the kind of inspiring commentary one expects.

When your most dependably mouthy architect has become a pathetically wussy and envious old man, to whom does one turn? Perhaps the mainstream critics.

Most newspaper architecture critics have become lemmings — jumping off to write the same predictable "criticism" of prominent world architecture. Their criticism generally is concerned with superficial issues of form, and as has become the case with the art of filmmaking, the political and financial aspects of architecture.

Just look at last month's circle of upscale publications. All of them probably included some big spread on developer Steve Wynn's new billion-dollar Bellagio Casino in Las Vegas. All critics generally concluded the same things — Vegas is interesting, fun and tacky, but it isn't the locus of great new architecture. Oh, and most of the critics sucked up to Wynn as much as one could without experiencing Vegas-style vomit inducement.

And these are the folks who are supposed to be enlightening the world with important issues of design. I'm supposed to believe these over-educated, under-experienced critics when they wax philosophic on our new architects.

Gehry is wasted on Los Angeles. In a city with a concentration of artists and brilliant people, Gehry's revolution is just another Hollywood deal. Besides, L.A. never has appreciated its architecture. Wright had Chicago — perhaps the best city in the world for modern architecture — as an incubator. Although much of it was not built at the time, the fact that it would be built is indicative of the spirit of the city.

Gehry would do much better had he been, as jealous as this sounds, a Kansas architect.

ELECTION '98

KANSAS ROUNDUP

Incumbents, Republicans fare well

TOPEKA — The general election shaped up as a good one for incumbents in the Legislature, and Republicans appeared likely to see little change in their majorities in both houses.

Republicans went into the general election with 77 seats to Democrats' 48 in the 125-member House.

In the Senate, Republicans had a 27-13 advantage over Democrats, with two senators facing special elections. All senators stand for election in two years.

Democrats picked up the seat vacated by House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, who won a race for state treasurer. The representative-elect is Doug Gatewood, D-Columbus, who won with 57 percent of the vote.

Republicans picked up the seat held by retiring Rep. Jack Wempe, D-Little River, with the election of Bob Bethell of Alden, who had no opponent in the general election.

In the Senate, Republican Ed Pugh, a Wamego attorney, initially trailed his Democratic opponent, Tom Kautz, owner of a downtown Atchison electrical-service business, but Pugh took the lead when results from Pottawatomie and Jackson counties came in.

Pugh and Sen. Les Donovan, R-Wichita, were on the ballot because they were appointed to fill vacancies in 1997, and voters had to decide whether to allow them to serve the final two years of their predecessors' terms.

Donovan defeated his Democratic opponent, Barbara Firestone, also of Wichita, receiving 58 percent of the vote.

One sign of the general strength of incumbents was the number of uncontested general election races for House seats.

In 60 of 125 districts, only one candidate was on the ballot. Thirty-six of those seats went to Republicans and 24 to Democrats.

Stovall cruises to re-election victory

TOPEKA — Attorney General Carla Stovall cruised to an easy re-election victory Tuesday, setting Republicans on a course they hoped would include retaining all state offices except insurance commissioner.

Stovall raced away from Democrat Dan Lykins after pulling out to a big early lead. With 98 percent of the vote tabulated, she had 75 percent of the vote to Lykins' 25.

Stovall, 41, succeeded Republican Bob Stephan as attorney general in January 1995. She is a former Crawford County attorney and Kansas Parole Board member. Lykins, 52, is a Topeka attorney in private practice who filed within minutes of the filing deadline in June when Democrats had no candidate other than Fred Phelps Jr. of Topeka, son of the anti-gay activist.

Thornburgh wins re-election bid

TOPEKA — The GOP's Ron Thornburgh also won re-election as secretary of state Tuesday.

Thornburgh turned back Democrat Don Rezac. He had a 64 to 27 percentage-point lead over Rezac with 98 percent of the votes counted.

Thornburgh, 35, is a former Washburn University basketball player who succeeded Gov. Bill Graves as secretary of state four years ago when Graves ran for governor. Rezac, 57, served 12 years in the Kansas House of Representatives until losing a race for re-election in 1994.

House speaker wins bid for state treasurer

TOPEKA — House Speaker Tim Shallenburger helped his GOP counterparts by winning the only open position on Tuesday's ballot for state treasurer. He had a 62 to 38 percentage-point lead with 98 percent of the vote counted.

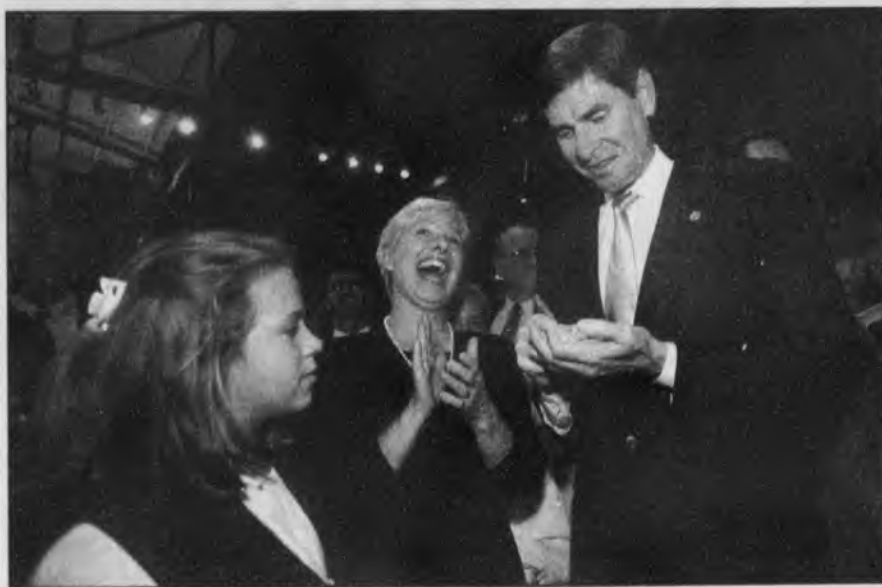

Shallenburger, 44, served 12 years in the Legislature and the past four as speaker. The last time a Republican won the office of state treasurer was 26 years ago when Tom Van Sickle of Fort Scott won in 1972. Joan Finney held it for 16 years, 1975-91, and Sally Thompson for eight years, 1991-1998.

Democrat retains Insurance Commissioner

TOPEKA — Incumbent Insurance Commissioner Kathleen Sebelius, a Democrat, had solid leads in early vote counting Tuesday, as the only Democrat who looked to retain a high-profile state office.

She was leading Republican Bryan Riley 59 to 41 percent with 98 percent of the votes tabulated.

Sebelius, 50, daughter of former Ohio Gov. John Gilligan and daughter-in-law of former Kansas Congressman Keith Sebelius, became the first Democrat elected insurance commissioner in history in 1994. She spent eight years in the Kansas House before 1994. Riley, 34, is an economics consultant who co-founded the Kansas Public Policy Institute in Wichita.

With his four children on stage with him, Republican Congressman Jim Ryun held his wife Anne's hand high in victory as he accepted a second term as the 2nd district delegate to the U.S. House of Representatives.

"Tonight, with God's help, you know victory," Ryun said.

Ryun cruised to victory over Democratic challenger Jim Clark of Topeka, collecting 61 percent of the ballots with 99 percent of precincts reporting.

Ryun, who fell under heavy criticism as a freshman legislator, endured a strong campaign assault from Clark. Ryun's 12-day campaign, which began after the legislative session ended in October, focused on core Republican principles such as tax relief, family values and military spending.

Ryun emphasized the role of his supporters and family in his campaign. He said the legislative session pushed most of the early campaign effort onto their shoulders and that they took his messages to the voters.

Ryun said he is eager to get back to the capitol to work on campaign issues such as tax relief, Social Security reform and military strength.

Ryun said Social Security was high on his agenda and that Congress needed to find a way to salvage the Tom Sawyer will go back to practicing accounting instead of politics.

The Democratic gubernatorial candidate lost to Gov. Bill Graves, receiving 23 percent of the vote with 99 percent of the precincts reporting.

"We fought hard and came up short," he said. The Wichita native and Kansas House Minority Leader said he would pledge to work with Graves in any way possible, if asked.

"By working together, we can make Kansas a better place as we head into the 21st century," he said. "For the hard-working Kansas families struggling to get by, I will see this vision through."

Sawyer said he ran for governor to bring issues like education and finding a better tax-relief system to the

GOP in control of Senate but Democrats make gains; former pro-wrestler wins Minnesota governor's race

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Republicans struggled to solidify their congressional majorities in Tuesday's midterm elections in the shadow of impeachment proceedings against President Clinton. Democrats claimed the single biggest prize of the night when Gray Davis was elected governor of California.

The GOP held control of the Senate even as Republican incumbents Alfonse D'Amato and Lauch Faircloth fell to their challengers.

In Illinois, Democratic Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun was trailing with nearly half the votes counted.

Incumbents of both parties fared well in House races, suggesting no significant shift of seats toward either party — portending a disappointment for Republicans whose leaders had forecast significant gains.

Democrats celebrated statehouse victories, ousting a pair of Southern governors and electing a governor in Iowa for the first time since 1966.

In a dynastic victory with implications for the 2000 presidential race, GOP Gov. George W. Bush won a Texas-sized re-election. His brother Jeb added the Florida statehouse to the Republican column. Republicans held big-state governorships in Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and New York.

Democrats countered in South Carolina, where Jim Hodges toppled first-term Gov. David Beasley, ironically the chairman of the Republican Governors' Association. Alabama Republican Gov. Fob James was defeated as well.

The most intriguing race of the night was in Minnesota, where an independent, former pro-wrestler Jesse Ventura, held a narrow lead over his two party rivals in the race for governor.

With the polls still open in the West, the leaders of both parties rushed to claim success in the final midterm election of the Clinton presidency.

Speaker Newt Gingrich and Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said that when all the seats were decided, Republicans would pad their majorities in both the House and Senate.

Steve Grossman, co-chairman of the Democratic Party, said a late-campaign series of commercials by Republicans reminding voters of Clinton's affair with Monica Lewinsky was "an abject failure.... This was not only a colossal waste of money on the part of the Republicans, but it also caused something of a backlash," he said.

GOP gains, if any, appeared likely to fall well short of post-World War II historical standards of losses to the president's party of 287 seats in the House and four in the Senate.

Some Republicans were less than enthusiastic about the party's showing, possibly portending problems for the incumbent leadership when the GOP has caucus elections later this month.

"I'm a bit saddened by our failures throughout the country," said Sen. John McCain of Arizona — himself a landslide winner.

In a closely watched Senate race, McCain's partner in campaign reform, Democrat Russell Feingold, had a narrow lead in his race for re-election.

Two Clinton nemesis tasted defeat. In strongly contested Senate races, Republican Sen. D'Amato lost his bid for a fourth term to Rep. Charles Schumer in New York. First-term Sen. Faircloth fell to John Edwards in North Carolina.

The trend in House races was overwhelmingly favorable to incumbents in both parties.

With nearly 300 of the House's 435 races settled, only one — Republican Vince Snowbarger of Kansas — had been denied a new term.

Election Day interviews with voters across the country showed 20 percent identified education as their most important concern when they cast ballots in congressional races. Another 19 percent cited moral and ethical issues, 14 percent named the economy and 12 percent each identified taxes and Social Security.

When asked about Clinton and impeachment, six in 10 voters said they disapproved of how Congress is handling the matter, with nearly as many saying Congress should just drop the issue without proceeding to impeachment hearings.

The polls were conducted by Voter News Service for The Associated Press and five TV networks.

Clinton said during the day that the election was not a referendum on him, and others said they agreed. "Is there some anger and intensity on both sides? Yes," said Ed Goetz, a Republican pollster. "But is it overwhelming or in anyway a referendum on impeachment? No, I don't think so."

Defensive tackles help open up holes for linebackers

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Defensive tackles often don't get the credit they deserve. However, lack of recognition isn't a concern for K-State's interior defensive linemen.

Sure, they don't rack up the huge sack totals like defensive ends or have their name called nearly as often as a linebacker or defensive back, who usually finds themselves at the point of attack when a tackle is needed. But defensive tackles are important nonetheless.

"If you don't have people up front that play well and that maintain the responsibilities that they have, then it doesn't make any difference how good your linebackers are, you're probably going to have some trouble getting them where they need to be," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "Linebackers can get cut off if you have guys up front that are knocked back off the line of scrimmage."

And it's evident the K-State linebackers are not getting "cut off," as Snyder said. Middle linebacker Jeff Kelly leads the team with 49 defensive tackles, and strong-side linebacker Mark Simoneau is second on the list with 48. Yes, it's the Wildcat defensive tackles who are responsible for allowing the Wildcat's heralded linebacker corps to make its plays. And it's the defensive tackles who have to lay the groundwork for K-State's No. 1-ranked rushing defense and No. 1-ranked total defense.

Despite low tackle totals, McIntosh, Rowe making difference on defense

Defensive tackle Damion McIntosh said the tackles just were doing their job, trying to keep a gap-sound defense.

"We all have our own responsibilities, and we all have our own holes to fill," McIntosh said. "Pretty much everyone has their own jobs, and I make sure that I take care of mine and my responsibilities."

Andrae Rowe has been equally as good as McIntosh at the other K-State tackle spot, and freshman DeVane Robinson has worked in as a back-up, earning more time with his experience. Snyder said all three players bring the same qualities to the position.

"Damion is the bigger of the group from the size standpoint, although I don't know if you could say anything about it other than just that," Snyder said. "Outside of that I can't think of a distinguishing difference between the three. They all play about the same, and athletically they all run about the same."

K-State's defensive tackles helped plug the holes last week against Kansas, which was kept to 44 yards offense on 47 plays from scrimmage. Shutting down an offense, like the Wildcat defense did last week, is what gives a defensive tackle the most pride, McIntosh said.

"We're just like an offensive lineman," McIntosh said. "He doesn't get all the stats, and all they hear about is total offense. As far as defensive linemen, we do care about stats, but I also care about the defensive unit as a team being top-ranked — just stopping a team cold like we did last week is great satisfaction for us."

Golf teams wrap up fall seasons

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With separate tournaments in the West this past weekend, the men's and women's golf teams wrapped up their fall seasons.

The men's golf team finished its fall season on Sunday in Palo Alto, Calif., with a 17th place team finish. Freshman Scott McNeely grabbed a 30th place tie with a 75-69-77-221.

Despite the low placing in the final fall tournament, head coach Tim Norris said he was happy with the fall season overall.

"We didn't finish where we wanted to be in the tournament," Norris said, "but overall, I'm happy with the way the fall season went. I'm happy with the way McNeely played. He had a good tournament. The rest of the guys struggled at times, but finished strong."

NORRIS

"We've already started our skill instruction for our off-season practices," Norris said. "The players know what they need to accomplish next spring. We'll be ready to go."

The men were led in the fall season by junior Mark Sears, who made a dramatic improvement this year. Sears won the Kansas State Invitational.

"To have a player that made such a turnaround like he did is great," Norris said.

"I think he served as an inspiration for others on this team. His approach is to go out and have fun. He doesn't go out and make golf life or death. He just went out and played golf."

Norris said he felt that at times, his team might have made the game harder for themselves.

"We tried too hard," Norris said. "You have to go up and hit it, chase it and hit it again. When we've gone out and just done that, we've finished well."

Norris said he was excited to get back to tournament play in the spring.

"We've already started our skill instruction for our off-season practices," Norris said.

"The players know what they need to accomplish next spring. We'll be ready to go."

The K-State women's team wrapped up its fall season in Las Cruces, N.M., with a 15th place finish, shooting 331-329-322-982. Senior Mitzi Taylor tied for 45th, with an 82-82-77-241.

Other placers for the women were junior Carrie Chambers, who shot 80-84-80-244 and finished with a tie for 58th.

Senior Jane Yi finished with a tie for 68th with an 86-79-82-247.

Cats lose 77-74; Dies, others view game from bench

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With four players riding the bench inactive and only three weeks of official practice time, the K-State men's basketball team opened its preseason schedule with a 77-74 loss to the California All-Stars.

As Manny Dies, Chris Griffin and Jay Heidrick nursed injuries in street clothes and Duane Davis sat out due to class, head coach Tom Asbury watched his adjusted line-up struggle to find its rhythm. The Cats shot 32 percent from the field in the first half and trailed the All-Stars 35-28 at the break.

Things began to even out in the second as K-State improved its shooting to 52 percent and went on an 8-0 run midway through the half. Down 52-50, Josh Reid nailed a three-pointer from the top of the arch to put the Cats up 53-52.

K-State had a chance to build on its lead after Tony Kitt was fouled by Ken Hotopp during Reid's three, but Kitt missed both free throws, a problem that would plague the Cats throughout the night.

With 9:35 left in the contest, the All-Stars regained the lead and never relinquished it.

In a nice blend of old and new, K-State was led by Reid and Kitt, who each contributed 16 points. Kitt, a junior transfer from Colby Community College, also added eight rebounds and a block.

Without the physical presence of Dies in the middle, Kitt said he was pleased with the team's performance but felt they needed to work on delivering a knock-out punch.

"Second half we picked it up, but once we got ahead, we kind of eased up," he said. "We've got to chop their heads off when we get them down, plain and simple."

Reid contributed most of his scoring from the charity stripe, hitting nine of 11 free-throw attempts.

Reid's performance was the only bright spot for the Cats at the line, as the team hit only 46 percent of its shots, going 18 of 39.

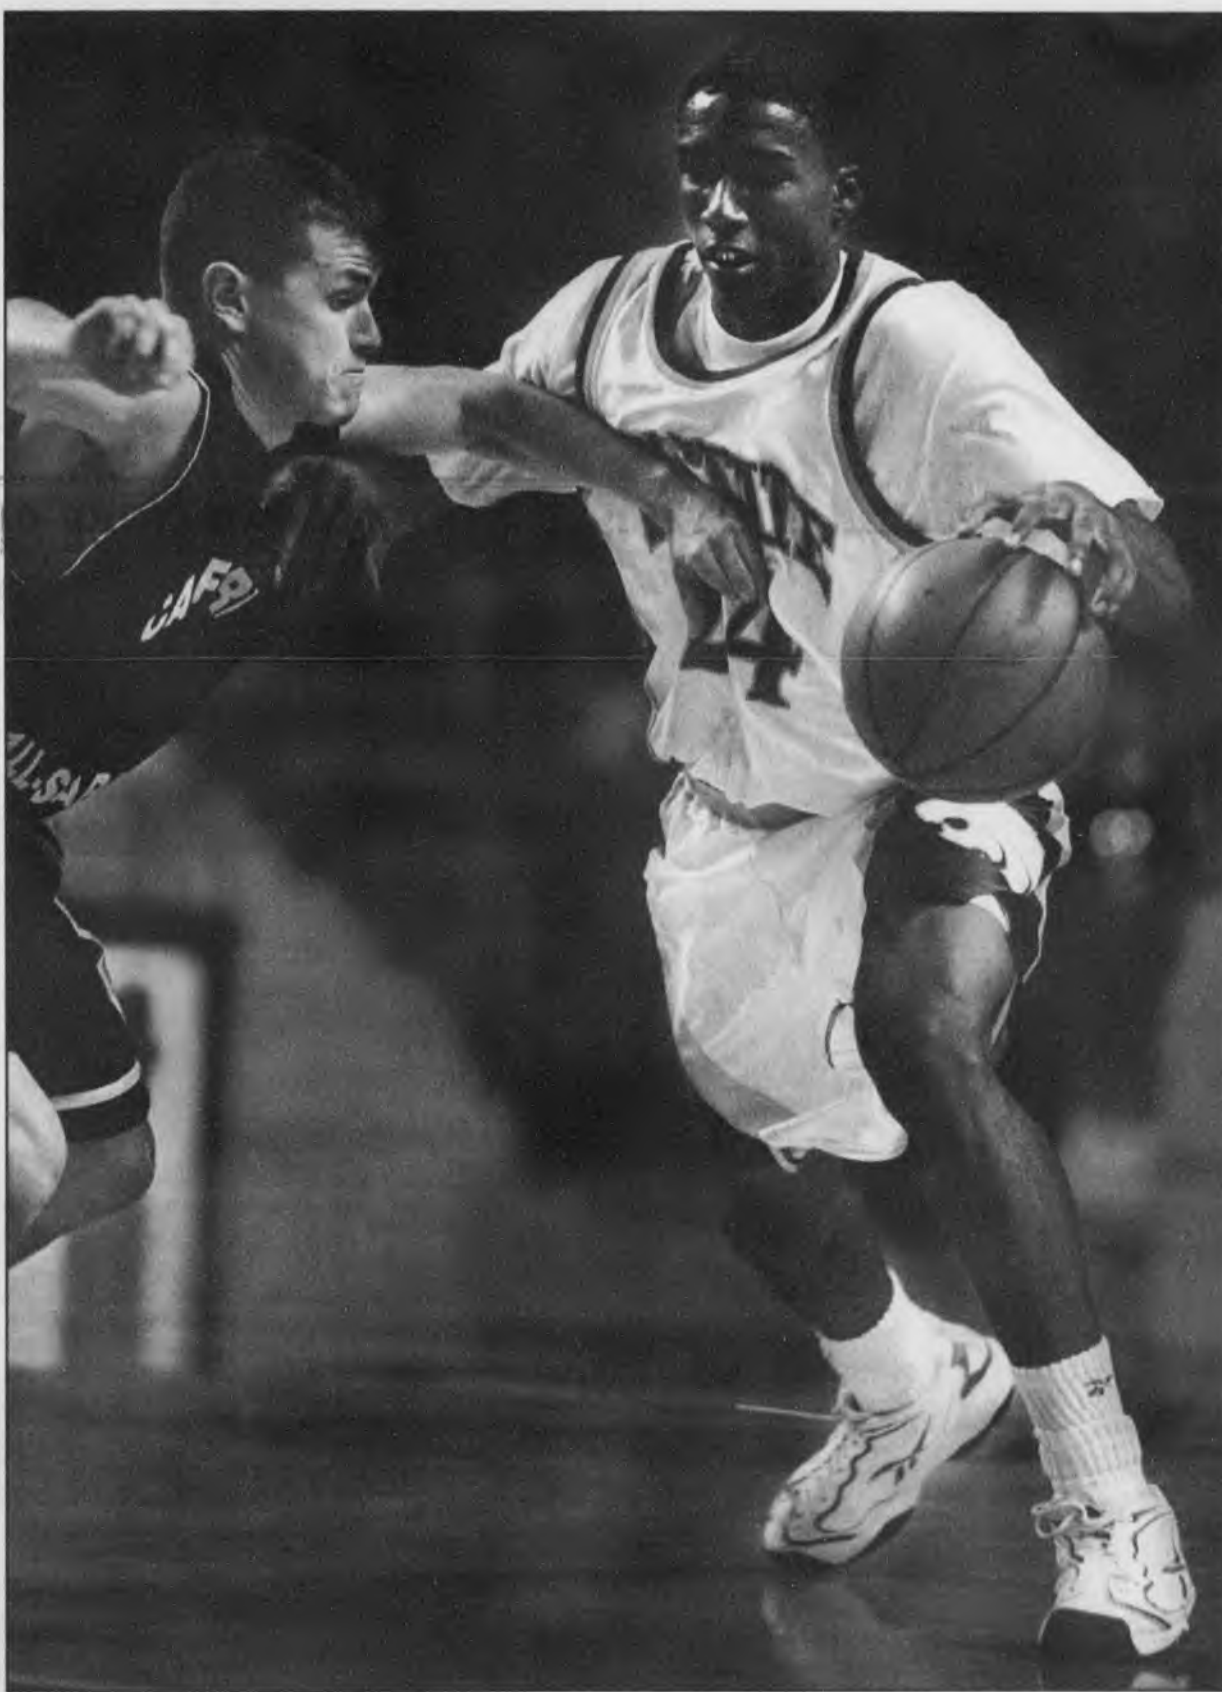

Asbury said that while the team has shot well from the free-throw line in practice, the need to carry that success into game situations is vital.

"Foul shooting is like four different beasts," Asbury said. "They're shooting them in practice; they're shooting them in games; they're shooting them in the last five minutes of games; and they're shooting them in the last five seconds of games. That's a whole different atmosphere. That cost us the game, clearly."

While Asbury can focus on shooting woes in practice, he cannot contribute to the recovery speed of his three players. Dies and Heidrick sat out due to injuries that Asbury said should keep them sidelined until next week, while Griffin will be out three to four weeks recuperating from a knee injury.

The Cats return to preseason action at 7 p.m. Saturday, when they welcome NBC Thunder Camps to Bramlage Coliseum.

Minnesota Vikings clearly NFL's best team; Washington Redskins in league's cellar

VIEWPOINT

BALMER

While clammed up inside my nearly water-tight household this past weekend, I spent my ample time doing what any like-minded college student would do in my place: procrastinate hard core.

This wasn't just any take-two-hours-and-lounge-type procrastination, either. This was the full effect. From the first signs of life around noon to the first flicker of street lights, my day was spent kissing former cranium associates Spanish and Mass Communication goodbye.

However, my time actually might have been spent for the better (My teachers might want to file a complaint here). During this marathon of missed education, I revived my relationship with the National Football League.

With a majority of my time allotted to the continuing rise of purple domination and the occasional need to study, my devotion to professional football has been on the decline.

But after an extensive Sunday afternoon, a greater perspective of the NFL at the midpoint was obtained.

BEST TEAM: The Minnesota Vikings. All right, I suppose you could make a case for the undefeated Denver Broncos, but remember one thing: John Elway is working on borrowed time. If his offensive line can perform at its current level the entire course of the season, they get my vote. If not, Elway goes the way of Joe Theismann and spends more quality time at his car dealership.

In the Vikings you have not only the league's top offense, but one of the most intense defenses, when motivated. Tampa Bay exploited the Vike's lack of focus this Sunday with 246 yards rushing, but don't expect this to become a recurring trend.

With John Randle leading the 'D,' Minnesota will rise to the challenge against the top teams in the league.

Besides this, how can you go wrong with Randall Cunningham under center? The ageless scrambler has done it all, making a case for a long-term stay as the starter when Brad Johnson returns from injury.

WORST TEAM: I can't force myself to brand my beloved Philadelphia Eagles with this tag, so the title belongs to the capital-city cream puffs, the Washington Redskins.

Head coach Norv Turner seemed to have a stellar defense assembled with free agents Dana Stubblefield and Dan Wilkinson joining the 'Skins, but an 0-7 start and an injury to Stubblefield proved money can't buy you a run defense.

BIGGEST SURPRISE: Quarterback Doug Flutie's performance. The pint-sized

Flutie has become a role model for the vertically challenged thanks to his emergence as the man in Buffalo.

With fans singing his praise and Flutie Flakes bearing his name, the former Canadian Football League standout has guided the Bills to a 5-3 record and a tie for first in the cluttered AFC East.

BIGGEST DISAPPOINTMENT: A fair case could be made for the Chiefs offense, Kerry Collins' drinking dilemma and Peyton Manning's rookie performance, but Pittsburgh quarterback Kordell Stewart sits atop the perch.

"Slash" has displayed signs of what made him one of the deadliest quarterbacks in the league last season, but consistent is the word missing from Stewart's vocabulary. Bad decision-making has resulted in 10 interceptions for six touchdowns this season, a mark that baffles head coach Bill Cowher, one of Stewart's biggest supporters. Until Stewart rises out of his slump, the Steelers will struggle for a wild card berth in the AFC Central.

This is only the tip of the iceberg. There have been plenty of memorable moments in the first half of the season, including the Chiefs-Seahawks H2O-Bowl, Saint Ditka, the Jets return to the old-school uniforms and Jamal Anderson and the Atlanta Falcons, but there's only so much space. Besides, I missed most of these highlights due to my obligations.

You best believe I won't let education get the best of me the second half of the season.

Domain name might change for Internet

By JESSE MCCURRY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State administrators and Computing and Network Services had a forum Tuesday in Union 212 to discuss the possibility of changing K-State's Internet domain name from "ksu.edu" to "k-state.edu."

"We want to be an easier university to recognize," said Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education.

"We want to make communication as easy as we can."

Unger said the administration wants to keep in step with public relations and marketing efforts to build "K-State" into the university's most recognizable name, and universities like Kentucky State University, Kent State University and others add confusion to those searching for K-State on the Internet.

"We're beginning to think K-State is the proper identity," she said.

If implemented, the decision would affect everyone with a K-State e-mail account, requiring technicians to change servers to the new system and provide information to anyone else trying to change their own e-mail accounts.

"We're just beginning the dialogue, to find a flexible way that will work best," CNS Director Harvard Townsend said.

Townsend said the K-State World Wide Web page can be accessed through either address, and some e-mail can be accepted under multiple names.

However, the goal is to have everyone using the same address eventually.

"Even if you have your old domain name, you'll still get e-mail unless we stop maintaining that old domain," Jeff Pihl, Unix administrator for CNS, said.

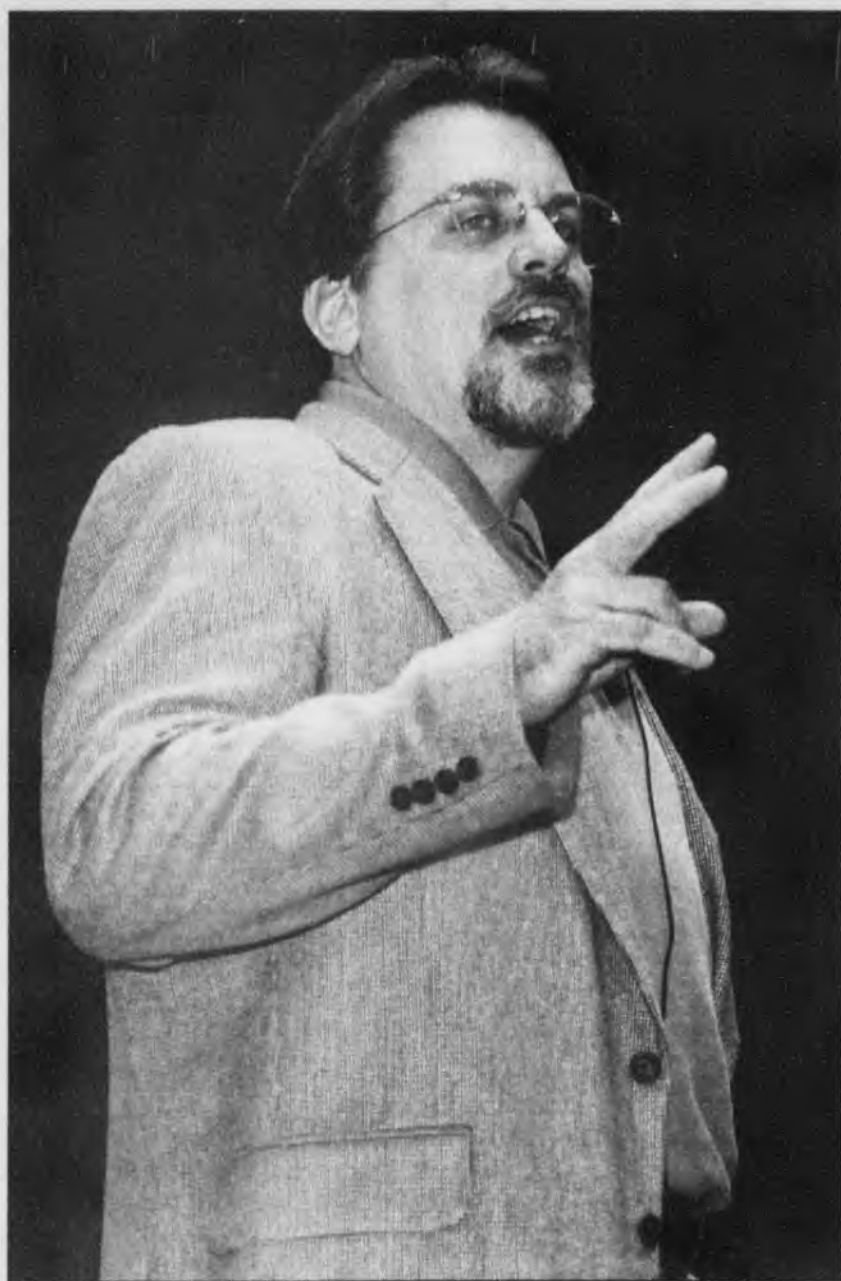

Pihl said he forecasts LISTSERV problems with the change.

"Outgoing mail is customarily sent from one address — ksu.edu," he said. "Switching addresses will cause problems with LISTSERV subscriptions."

Townsend said CNS would try to automate many of the changes.

No decision has been made on any specific plan, timeline or terms under which the change would be implemented. A committee of administrators and technicians has been charged with developing the best plan.

"It's not going to happen by mandate tomorrow," Townsend said.

Chuck Derry speaks about "Manhood, Rape and Power: Male Privilege and the Rights of Women" Tuesday evening in Union Forum Hall. "It is not a guy in a trench coat who leaps out of the bushes and attacks. It is brother Bob, the nice neighbor, the date ... long-time male friends are raping them," he said.

DEALING WITH SEXISM

Speaker shares story of self-realization

By LAURAN COWDREY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Never underestimate the power of one man telling another man an anti-woman joke isn't funny. To say nothing is to participate, and men can choose what kind of man they want to be.

This was the message of Chuck Derry, founder of the Gender Violence Institute, Tuesday in a speech delivered as part of K-State's Violence Against Women Awareness Week.

"Manhood, Rape and Power: Male Privilege and the Rights of Women," began with Derry's personal story of realization.

"Ninety-five percent of what I know about sexism I learned from women, more in particular, feminist women," he said.

Derry said being the only man working with a feminist women's organization changed his life, because he discovered how sexist he was.

"It is fun to put women down," Derry said. "Men have fun raping women, and men enjoy beating women as well. It is fun to have power over women."

Derry said men could be brought in from all over the world, and they would have nothing in common, except that they feel superior to women.

This male cultural phenomenon is taught while men are young, he said.

At age 4, Derry said he recalled the main message of his elders and peers being, "No sashay, squishy stuff. Don't cry like a girl, don't run like a girl, don't throw like a girl."

At ages 7 through adolescence, the worst insult he could remember was being called a girl.

"I guess boys are better than girls," he said. "I looked around and men were in charge. Even at home, my dad was in charge."

During puberty, young men learn violence through the news and entertainment media because it sexualizes and objectifies women, Derry said. Boys see sex being sold and violence being eroticized.

"Boys learn about sex from each other, the locker room and from pornography," he said. "Men bond around sexual objectification. Who's the biggest stud?"

This upbringing leads to men growing up being abusive and sexist.

"Men cannot be assaulting so many women without widespread cultural support," he said.

Female audience members said they appreciated the male perspective.

"I thought it was good that the awareness was directed toward the men in the audience," said Erica Armacost, freshman in criminology and sociology. "He was blunt and straightforward, and the humor made it interesting."

Derry also gave telling statistics on the rising occurrence of sexual assaults, battery and rape.

One in four college women will be a victim of rape during her college career. One in three women will be sexually assaulted during her life. Of the millions of women who are battered each year, 85 percent know who abused them.

"The most dangerous place in this country for a woman is in her home, with man who she is in a relationship with. One in every four women in a relationship are beaten."

"It is not a guy in a trench coat who leaps out of the bushes and attacks. It is brother Bob, the nice neighbor, the date ... long-time male friends are raping them," he said.

Derry then challenged the men in the audience with the question, "Can you be a good man in America and not do anything about sexism?"

He responded to the question by saying men are not to blame for being born into a sexist world, but they do have the option to be part of the war zone or part of the resolution.

"Men need to get up off the couch and do something. We need to become allies of women," he said. "It only takes four or five men to get it started."

cars need winter care

By SARA MARTIN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jack Frost is on his way and could be nipping at the pockets of car-owning college students instead of at their noses.

Not many realize the effect cold weather can have on their cars, and they often overlook the necessary steps of winterization to avoid expensive damage.

"Anti-freeze is the most important part to check over, especially if you had car problems over the summer," Lyle Shepard, manager at Texaco Express Lube, said. "Someone may have put just water in your radiator, and you may not have enough anti-freeze. Your lines could freeze, and you could have damage that ruins the engine. That gets real expensive."

Shepard said checking the anti-freeze level isn't difficult but requires test equipment. The apparatus can be found at any parts store, and employees usually are willing to explain how the procedure is done.

Other maintenance students can do on their own cars is checking the windshield wipers and fluid. Making sure the fluid is not all water can be very important.

"If you just have water in your wipers, especially in the winter when you go to wash off all that extra dirt on the windshield, the water will freeze. It's a really dangerous thing that could be easily prevented," said Chad Whittle, manager of Sky-Vue Quick Lube.

There are other systems for which preventative measures could be useful.

"If I was doing a cold-weather check, I'd be checking for dirty fuel systems, seeing if the oil's changed, check the tire wear — bald tires are much more hazardous on slippery roads — and I'd thoroughly check the cooling system," Whittle said.

Students who don't know much about cars can try their own maintenance, but it might not do any good.

"A lot of things are really simple things," Whittle said, "but if you don't know how to look for them, you can't help yourself. Unless you know what you're doing, it's always better to take it to someone."

Most auto shops do all of the necessary fluid and system checks when cars are brought in for oil changes. The average price is $25.

"Call around," Whittle said. "Check with different places. See what you can find out about getting exactly what you want done."

Getting a checkup could avoid breakdowns in freezing weather, and proper tire maintenance can provide safety on slick roads.

If questions arise about the quality of a car's tires, Barth Nicholson, store manager at Goodyear Tire, said to check to see if the tread has worn low enough to see the wear bar, a high spot in the tread.

"If they're anything below that," Nicholson said, "you're gonna have a lot of trouble on ice and slush this winter. If you can't tell how bad the tires are, just bring them in to a tire shop, and they'll let you know for sure."

Highlights of fashion week include relaxed fits, classics in pastel colors

By FRANCINE PARNES
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Ellen Tracy celebrated its 50th year in the fashion business on Tuesday with a return to relaxed fits and classic cuts.

The company's spring preview during Fashion Week was highlighted by perennial winners, most notably simple separates in pale colors.

Included were hip-slung pants, ribbed tube tops and silk camisoles — and practically anything that ties easily with a drawstring, be it a dimid skirt or wide-leg trousers. With clothing so high on the comfort scale, even the evening pieces had a sportswear edge, such as beaded pants with a soft drawstring.

"It's a return to classic sportswear, with a more relaxed feel, not so suited," Linda Allard, Ellen Tracy head designer, said.

Well, just make sure it's not too relaxed. One model gliding down the runway in a casual tube top became quite unrelaxed when it suddenly fell considerably lower than expected.

Elsewhere Tuesday on the runways at Bryant Park, Oscar de la Renta set the stage for his moneyed uptown clientele. Pastel cashmere sweater sets, scalloped hemlines and ladylike coats with matching shifts fairly whispered femininity. For evening, the time when de la Renta and his loyalists really shine, he pulled out all the big guns, in the form of taffeta gowns with ruffles, beading, embroidery and lace.

"Taffeta is such a feminine sound," de la Renta said. "You hear the rush of taffeta, and it can only be a woman. It's just a very promising sound of a wonderful time, even an intimate moment."

Geoffrey Beene has been designing for four decades, yet his preview at his garment district studio was positioned for the 21st century. In place of jewelry, details such as sleek zippers work as punctuation points.

"I love zippers," the 71-year-old designer said, presenting winding colored zippers on wool jersey dresses and jackets that curve and snake around the body from neck to hem.

"They look modern, they imply quickness of change, and their being metallic is what's so important and futuristic," he said.

As for fabrics, Beene has one word: plastics. Clear plastic shirt cuffs functioned as bracelets, while transparent chunky cubes were fashioned into chokers and arm bands.

There was no shortage of Beene signature styles, either. There were well-cut wool jersey minidresses, sheer, swingy bolero jackets that wafted around the body, and jumpsuits and gowns with cutout back and side insets.

On Monday evening, Carmen Marc Valvo captured the limelight with glistening crystals all over his gowns.

"Everywhere I travel, I have three or four crystals with me, since I do believe they have healing power," said the eveningwear designer whose show drew longtime customer Vanessa Williams.

Valvo, who recently delved into studying lost civilizations, dedicated his sea-themed collection to "Atlantis Rising." Long, lean column gowns in oceanic shades with freshwater pearl embroidery went over swimmingly.

Store apologizes for using ad featuring word 'rape'

By DENISE LAVOIE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORWALK, Conn. — How many points is the word "OOPS" worth in Scrabble?

The Caldor department store chain apologized Tuesday after 11 million copies of an advertising circular showed two smiling boys playing Scrabble around a board with the word "RAPE" spelled out.

Caldor said it does not know who did it or how it got past the proofreaders.

The discount chain learned about the problem late Friday when a customer called to complain about the advertisement, which appeared in a 44-page toy-sale insert that was distributed over the weekend in 85 newspapers in the Northeast, where Caldor operates 145 stores.

The word "RAPE" was spelled vertically on the board. At least two other words on the board were nonsense words.

"Obviously, it's a mistake," Caldor spokeswoman Jennifer Belodeau said. "It's not something that we would ever have done intentionally. While we do proofread these things very carefully, with the volume on that particular page, that was something that was missed."

Belodeau said the Scrabble board in the ad originally was set up by a creative agency hired by Caldor. She would not identify the agency.

"It could be that everybody got up and took a break, and some unknown source came in and fooled with the board — there's no way for us to know," she said.

Belodeau said both Caldor and the outside agency were responsible for proofreading.

She said the department store chain got about 10 complaints from customers.

"I just think that for something like this to be advertised is in poor taste," said Deirdre Armon, a parent and avid Scrabble player from Kensington who called a TV station in Hartford when she noticed the word.

program for those who will need it in the future.

"We will work on on your behalf on that issue," he said.

While Ryun reiterated common Republican themes relating to continued work on tax cuts, he received his strongest response on issues relating to education and the military.

A strong supporter of getting state funds sent to the U.S. Department of Education returned to the states instead of being used in Washington, D.C., Ryun said he was excited to continue to push for improvements in America's education system.

"We will continue to work on that in Washington as well as get that (money) back to the state," Ryun said.

Ryun said military benefits and readiness need to be addressed in the next session. As benefits for both active and veteran service members decline, fewer people pursue careers in the military, and America's readiness for action is threatened, he said.

"We will go back with a renewed interest in restoring the benefits and making it the strongest army in the world," Ryun said. "We need to restore that so this country doesn't have to worry about its enemies."

Ryun said his first two years have been a learning experience, and he is ready to get back to the legislature and make a difference.

"We need to work on restoring the kind of principles this country was founded on," Ryun said.

"That will be a commitment that I am making to you."

A Jefferson County resident, Ryun was an Olympic runner before opening his own public-relations firm.

campaigning earlier, but he was pleased with the agenda he set in the election.

"I ran for governor because I am optimistic about the future of Kansas," he said.

Many of Sawyer's supporters said they agreed Graves has a positive performance record.

"Being that I am a Democrat, I think Sawyer would have been a good governor," said Mort Hight, president of Kansas Democratic Veterans. "I also think that Graves has done a good job, but four years from now, we could have a totally different story."

Hight said Sawyer might reappear in a later election.

"When Graves leaves the picture and cannot run again, I think that Tom Sawyer would be a very viable candidate," he said.

forefront. He said the state would be better off with his Student Tuition Assistance Recognition Scholarship program, which was one of his largest campaign platforms.

The program would give students who earn a B average or better in high school up to $2,600 a year for tuition at a Kansas university, community college or vocational school, using proceeds from lottery programs.

"Working together, we can meet the challenges ahead," he said. "Tonight, I have a tremendous sense of pride for the state, the people and the party."

Sawyer, a graduate of Wichita State University, said he should have begun

LIBRARY

scenario.

George Strecker, professor of mathematics and chair of Faculty Senate's University Library Committee, said the library needs money it can depend on if it ever is going to budget ways to avert subscription shortfalls.

"It's a problem that needs to be dealt with year after year after year," Strecker said. "The Foundation isn't taking this seriously."

Strecker, who along with the committee is helping to draft a letter to send to Faculty Senate about the issue, said he thought the Foundation should feel a commitment to provide a certain amount of money per year to the library.

He said there is a sense of outrage and a feeling of helplessness within the committee.

Furthermore, Strecker said the "robbing Peter to pay Paul" scenario continues to hurt the library.

For example, to cover journal inflation in 1997-98, the library took $100,000 from its book acquisitions budget.

A further $120,000 came from general university re-allocations from the Office of the President.

"They can limp along for another year, but it's not what the task force envisioned as I read the report," Strecker said.

He said the underfunded library could have long-term effects of decreased research throughout the university.

Plans for the future

Although journal-subscription costs continue to out-pace the Consumer Price Index, Hobrock said he has not given up hope for a more comprehensive bailout.

He said he intends to make a $1 per-credit-hour student fee an issue with Student Senate.

Hobrock met with student government leaders in October to make his case. Student Body President Tracey Mann has made the library a priority but has said he will direct his efforts toward lobbying the Legislature for more money before considering a student fee.

On the national front, there are plans to lobby for federal legislation to require all research papers produced by public institutions to be in the public domain no more than 90 days following publication in an academic journal.

This concept was proposed in a report by Provost David Shulenburger of the University of Kansas.

"There hasn't been any substantial improvement to this situation in 12 years," Hobrock said. "Finally, there are some ideas with teeth."

limits, with governmental agencies being exempt.

The vote was 3-2 with Hall and Klimek opposed. The move is aimed at reducing costs incurred by the Riley County Police Department and other emergency agencies who respond to hundreds of false alarms each year.

The commission also authorized by a vote of 5-0, $1,256,000 and $4,278,000 in bonds to fund eight public-improvement projects and the city's share of the Anderson Avenue project, respectively.

COMMISSION

"I think it's unacceptable to deny public input," Snead said after the meeting. "That needs to be respected and accommodated."

Also approved 4-1 by the commission was a recommendation by the K-State Student Governing Association to reconfigure North Manhattan Avenue next summer between Anderson Avenue and Claflin Road. The present four-lane road will be changed to two lanes of traffic, a middle lane for left turns and bicycle lanes on both edges.

The recommendation was passed unanimously in Student Senate on Sept. 24 and is taken directly from the Bicycle Master Plan completed by the city and university from 1996 to 1997. Student Body President Tracey Mann said.

Commissioner Ed Klimek voted against the measure. He said more emphasis should be placed on the crossings themselves and not the number of lanes on the street.

Resident Mike Pusker said he didn't believe removing one lane was the answer, with football game days bringing in thousands of fans who would create a solid traffic column along the road.

"That's an area that gets a lot of use. They are No. 2 in the country, and interest is just going to escalate," he said.

The commission also passed an ordinance tabled from the Oct. 20 meeting establishing fines for more than three false alarms on alarm systems in city limits, with governmental agencies being exempt.

Officials say hurricane-related death toll 7,000

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

POSOLTEGA, Nicaragua — Hundreds upon hundreds of bodies are buried in the mud that cascaded down Casitas volcano, some with their hair and limbs entangled in the sugar cane stalks.

During a two-hour walk out of the Posoltega town center and into the sugar cane fields, 22 of the bodies were seen in plain, gut-wrenching view — bloated, scratched and crammed in trees, cane stalks and mud.

The tragedy occurred Friday morning after pounding rains brought by Hurricane Mitch.

Part of the volcano's crater collapsed, and the lake inside formed a deluge down the slope.

"It is full, full of bodies," said 26-year-old construction worker Ariel Mendoza, pointing at the volcano. "From where the mud starts, down to the sea."

Mayor Felicita Zeledon of Posoltega, the largest city near the disaster area, said in a live radio interview Tuesday that 1,930 corpses had been recovered in villages below the volcano.

Other officials gave lower, but still ghastly calculations of the death toll.

The Red Cross said 1,250, while the president's office said 1,338.

Bodies found Tuesday were being burned to prevent the spread of disease, Zeledon said.

Nicaragua's Health Ministry said it was dispatching medical brigades to help recover and bury bodies and to fumigate the region.

More than 1,000 bodies recovered in 1 Nicaraguan city

Villagers said they found about 200 bodies at the San Pablo sugar cane plantation, just outside of town.

Amid the crushed cane stalks lie muddy shoes, purses, tires and a colander.

The stench of death crops up every few hundred yards where bodies lie: a little girl with her hair braided into the cane stalks by the slide; a man still wearing boots, but nothing else; a boy, perhaps 8, snuggled under a tree trunk; or just an arm sticking out of the mud.

The government urged people living near Casitas and eight other nearby volcanoes to evacuate their homes Tuesday for fear of new mudslides. More heavy rains have been falling in recent days.

Another small mudslide on the northern slope of the Casitas volcano wiped out 34 houses Monday night, but there were no apparent casualties, Defense Minister Pedro Joaquin Chamorro said.

Residents "must be mindful of the situation and look for refuge," President Arnoldo Aleman said.

Central American officials say more than 7,000 people died in floods and mudslides triggered by Mitch, one of the strongest hurricanes ever to hit the Caribbean.

Ricardo Donaires, 34, his wife, and their baby boy spent three days in the open on a hilltop in the village of Rolando Rodriguez before hiking to safety on Monday.

"We suffered without eating and without drinking water for three days," Donaires said, now at a schoolhouse converted into an emergency shelter in Posoltega.

At first, soldiers struggled to bury bodies where they lay.

With the fear of epidemics growing, however, civilian volunteers set out from the nearby community of Chichigalpa to burn bodies.

"We need the government to send us gasoline if they want to avoid an epidemic," said Robert Lopez Marcia, a member of Chichigalpa's emergency commission.

At an improvised shelter at a Chichigalpa elementary school, doctors were in desperate need of medicine, antibiotics and bandages, and little clean water or food was available. Children lay on desks with bloody bandages on their heads.

Along the Pan American Highway, thousands of people walked in the pouring rain, some leaving the disaster area and others going in to search for family members.

"The only thing the federal government does is ask us for a number every half hour — how many dead, how many injured," complained Chichigalpa Mayor Elijo Palacio.

"But they they don't send us anything."

thank you, all of you, for all your support."

Graves said Democratic opponent Tom Sawyer ran a good campaign and that he had spoken with him briefly before delivering his speech.

"I commended him on a fine campaign, and I wished him the best," Graves said.

Graves said his vision for Kansas in his next term as governor is simple.

"We have a goal to create a better Kansas for every Kansan," Graves said.

Fred Polzin, of Topeka, attended the election-watch party at the Kansas ExpoCenter in support of Graves.

"He's done a good job, basically. He has always done what is best for the state," Polzin said.

Annabel Fredrickson, also of Topeka, was a volunteer for the Republican campaign. She said Graves was re-elected because he related to Kansans well.

"I think the state just sensed the credibility in his job. I don't think of him as a politician," she said.

George Hutchins, of Topeka, another volunteer for the Republican campaign, said he agreed and that he thought Graves had a strong term as governor.

"I think he's just doing a tremendous job," Hutchins said.

Graves, 45, bid to become the first Republican since John Anderson in 1962 to win a second term as governor. Bob Bennett in 1978 and Mike Hayden in 1986 both failed to accomplish that feat.

Graves also will be only the third governor in history to serve eight years, following Bob Docking in 1967-75 and John Carlin in 1979-87. Before 1974, Kansas' gubernatorial terms were for just two years.

Graves, a native of Salina, Kan., served eight years as secretary of state, 1987-95, before winning his first four-year term as governor in 1994, when he defeated former Democratic Congressman Jim Slattery.

Jim Frederickson, of Topeka, who was vice president at Kansas Wesleyan University while Graves was a student there, showed his support as a Republican campaign volunteer as well. He said he has known the Graves family for a long time.

"They're good people," Jim Frederickson said.

SALES TAX

Hall said the city might not have as many options for development without the money but will find other ways to bring businesses to Manhattan.

"We have some really experienced people working on economic development. These people are excellent at what they do," he said.

City Commissioner Karen McCulloh said the half-cent tax has been a good source of funds for the past four years.

Money from the development fund usually is allocated as loans to help new businesses open in Manhattan.

Businesses sign agreements with the city to repay the loans and generate a specific number of jobs within a period of time.

The repaid funds then can be distributed to other companies.

"Having a source of economic development money is good for Manhattan," McCulloh said. "I think we will revisit the issue in the April elections."

McCulloh said the city still has incoming money until the end of the year from the half-cent tax. After that money runs out, the city will have to find other methods, like a mill levy or revolving loans.

In order for the tax to pass next time, McCulloh said it's important to know why it failed in this election.

"We need to have a clear picture of why people disagreed with it," McCulloh said.

McCulloh said she proposes giving the tax a broader definition.

"There are different ways to encourage growth besides buying companies and bringing them in," she said. "By using the money to train skilled workers, we could attract businesses to Manhattan without giving them money to come."

Hall said the tax to fund the new law-enforcement center could have affected the results, since the proposed quarter-cent tax, though less than the half-cent paid for development now, would have increased the overall sales tax.

"I don't know anyone who likes to pay taxes," Hall said.

Hall said voters have to ask themselves what they are willing to pay for and what are they willing to do without in order to pay for it.

"It's a matter of priorities," he said. "Manhattan citizens always come to the top when something is important to them."

McCulloh said citizens are feeling over-taxed.

"Growth is very good for certain segments of a community, but others do not benefit that much," she said. "People want to see what new jobs the money will bring."

PETERSON

what to expect from the results.

"We didn't do any polling," Peterson said. "We really didn't have a benchmark. We thought we were doing well, but Sydney Carlin ran an excellent campaign."

Peterson said Carlin ran a positive campaign. Few challengers run as a clean campaign as she did, he said.

Campaign manager Karen Rogers said Peterson ran a good campaign by staying on the issues and keeping his focus no matter what. People responded to that, she said.

"The community has endorsed Jeff, and the student body has stuck with him," Rogers said.

Peterson said he felt like he ran a good campaign and talked about his own record rather than his opponent's, although it was a relief for the campaign to be over.

"As with anything you put a lot of time and energy into you want to turn out well," Peterson said.

Peterson's campaign focused on education among Kansas Board of Regents universities as well as K-12 schools.

"I'm going to continue to work with those issues, with K-State as my top priority," Peterson said.

Peterson's close connection with

K-State was brought into the limelight recently when a campaign ad he ran featuring quarterback Michael Bishop was thought to be a violation of NCAA rules by the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The ad was not a violation.

Peterson said the news media's coverage of the ads had little effect on the outcome of the race. While it might have caused the loss of a few votes, Peterson said once the record was set straight, most people understood.

Jesse 'The Body' becomes Jesse 'The Governor'

By ROCHELLE OLSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Jesse "The Body" Ventura's election as governor hit Minnesota's political establishment like the piledriver move the former professional wrestler used to inflict on his hapless opponents in the ring.

In an Election Night Nitro performance, the scowling, bald-headed Ventura, running as the candidate of the Reform Party, body-slammed the two major party candidates: Hubert Humphrey III, the Democratic attorney general for the past 16 years and son of the late Vice President Hubert Humphrey, and Republican St. Paul Mayor Norm Coleman.

"Anyone who tells you they predicted that this was going to happen with Jesse Ventura is lying. This is something totally outside the norm," state GOP executive director Tony Sutton said. He was "absolutely shocked" by Ventura's victory.

Democratic state chairman Dick Senese said he was baffled as to what his party could have done better.

On Wednesday morning, the governor-elect brushed aside questions of how he would govern without a single member of his party in the Legislature or a stock of experienced party leaders to appoint to the administration.

With the bluster of a pro wrestler, he said: "This isn't defying death, this is simply common sense and logic."

As for his plans over the next few weeks, Ventura, a volunteer high school football coach, wisecracked, "I'm not sure at this point. I couldn't even tell you what our game plan is for Blaine (High) on Friday night."

He immediately broke one of his less-than-serious campaign promises by not rappelling into the state Capitol from a helicopter.

And about that pledge to try to return about $1,000 in taxes to everyone in Minnesota? It didn't sound like the check would be in the mail at his first capitol news conference as governor-elect. A sleep-deprived Ventura muttered, "Oh, sheesh" when asked about it.

As the 6-foot-4, 250-pound Ventura grappled with the details of leadership, some people sounded unsure whether the state was in the grips of a half-Nelson, full Nelson or Ozzie and Harriet Nelson.

President Clinton offered his thoughts on Ventura's election with a chuckle: "I don't know — I think that you're going to have a lot of politicians spending time in gyms now."

Though Ventura's election might trouble some people in the state of Hubert Humphrey and Walter Mondale, he wouldn't be its first governor to raise eyebrows nationally. Gov. Rudy Perpich, a dentist by training, was dubbed "Governor Goofy" by Newsweek in 1990.

Among other things, Perpich used to make citizen's arrests of speeding motorists.

Graves might want to 'pump up'

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves is thinking about bulking up.

The slim Republican, an avid runner, expects to be sitting at national meetings near Minnesota's new governor-elect, former professional wrestler Jesse "The Body" Ventura.

Graves noted that the National Governors Association usually seats governors by the order in which their states were admitted to the Union. Minnesota was the 32nd state in 1858 and Kansas, the 34th in 1861.

Ventura, the Reform Party candidate in his state, won a stunning victory in a three-way race Tuesday night.

Graves said Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer already is pushing him to begin weight training.

"I'm running, which is actually probably making me skinny, if anything," Graves said Wednesday. "I guess I could just stop running and just kind of bulk up."

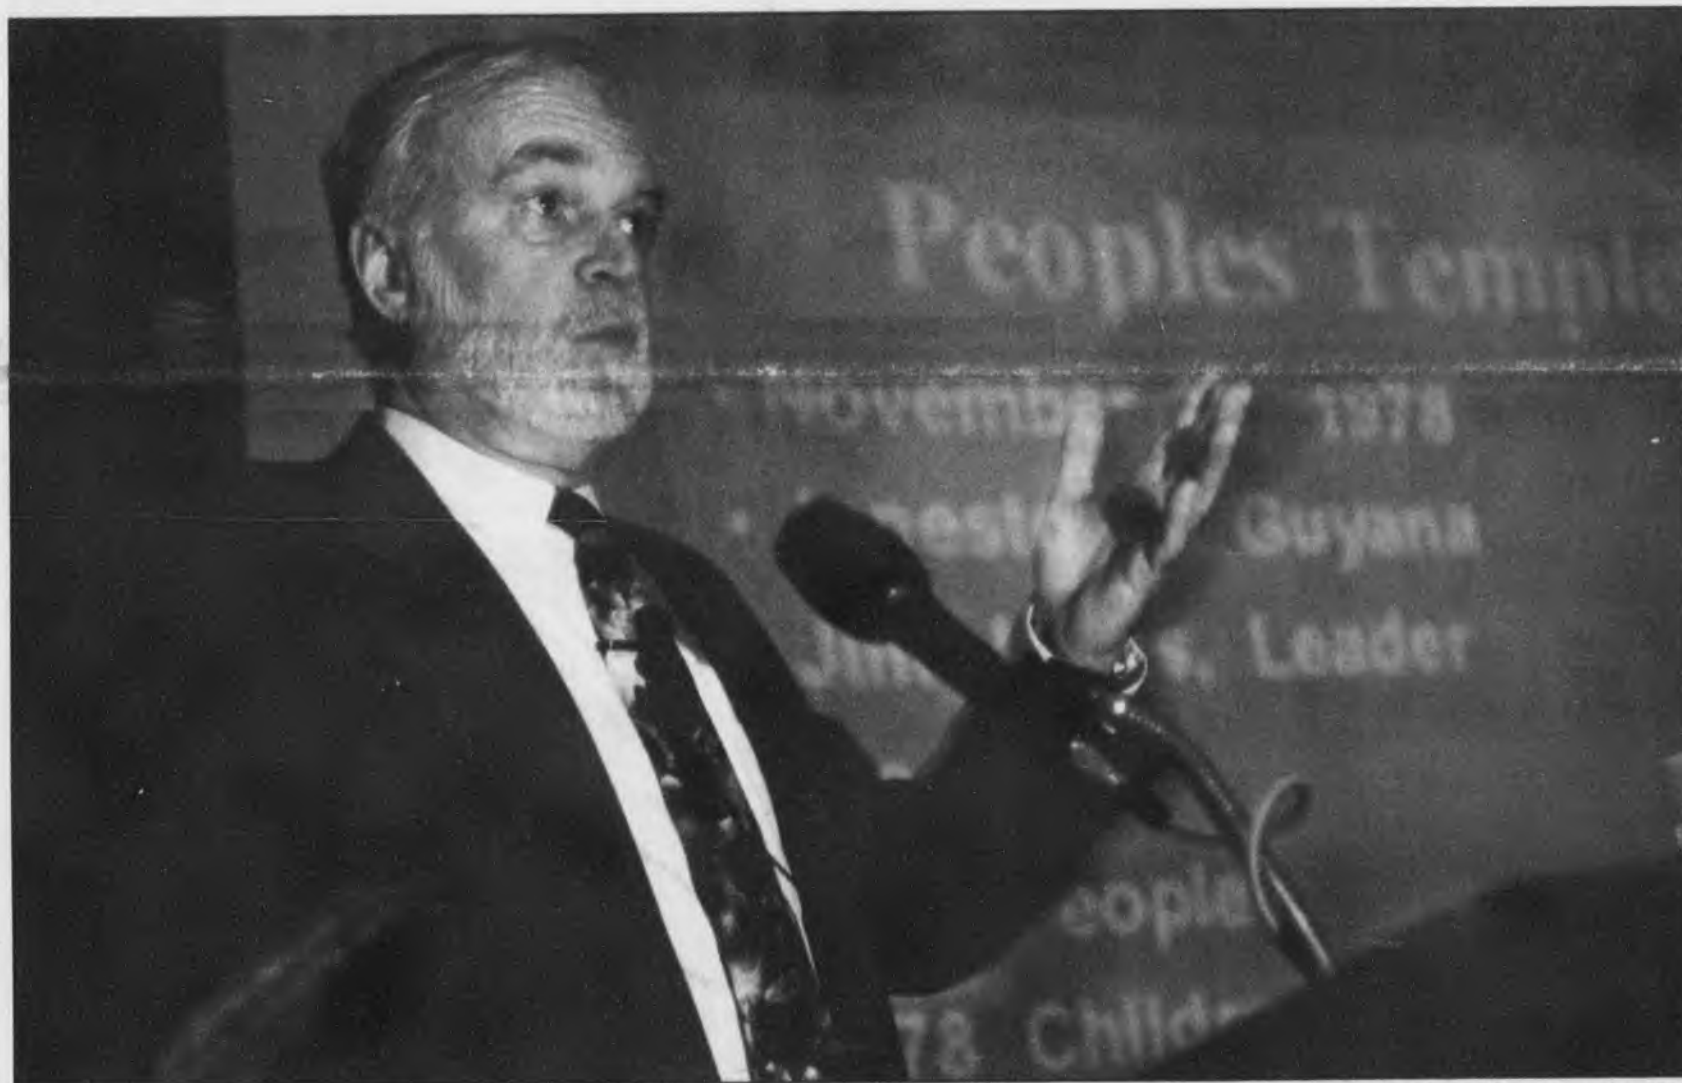

"I probably will avoid any direct confrontation, anything to irritate 'The Body' until we become better acquainted."

When asked whether he would send Ventura a congratulatory letter to get on his good side, Graves said, "It sounds like he's got plenty of attention right now, so I'll let him bask in that spotlight."

CULTS ON CAMPUS

JEFF COOPER/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ronald Loomis speaks Wednesday night in Union Forum Hall as part of his presentation "Cults on Campus: The Appeal, The Danger." Loomis is the director for the American Family Foundation, the nation's leading cult watch group.

Speaker says cults surviving, thriving in U.S., some even at K-State

Mass suicide. Cults. K-State. With recent news stories highlighting the activities of cults such as the Heaven's Gate mass suicide, many people would think that they are fully aware of cults.

Wrong. Approximately 5,000 cults are alive and well in the United States. Many have even been active on the K-State campus.

Ronald Loomis, education director for the American Family Foundation, the nation's leading cult-watch-group, highlighted these cult activities in his speech, "Cults on Campus: The Appeal, The Danger," Wednesday night in Union Forum Hall.

Loomis said he first became aware of cult activity in colleges while working at Cornell University.

"I became very concerned when I heard about the horrible things they did to people," he said. "I realized that you need to educate people, because you can't keep them off of college campuses."

Loomis highlighted recent cult activities including the Branch Davidians in Waco, Texas, the Oklahoma City bombing and the most recent activity in a group called the Concerned Christians.

In October, 38 members of the cult mysteriously disappeared from Denver, Colo. The group leader, who claimed to be the voice of God, often claimed the followers will die in Jerusalem in 1999. The members have not yet been found.

"I hope that we can find them and bring their leader, Kim Miller, in, but I fear you would hear about a tragedy," Loomis said.

Loomis said that approximately two percent of the nation's population is involved in a cult and that there are many more worldwide.

"This is an international problem. Twenty-nine countries have reported cults," Loomis said.

Loomis said cults often control their members by use of psychological manipulation. Techniques include fatigue, peer pressure and "love bombing," where a member of the cult makes new members feel special or unique and becomes their new best friend.

"Their manipulation of people knows no limits," he said.

Loomis said cult recruiters often prey on college students and that recruitment usually peaks during freshman orientation. Recruiters often single out students who are alone or are going through a transition such as being away from home for the first time. They will even stand outside of the universities' counseling center and approach departing patients.

"They will stoop to anything. They will try to recruit anybody. The primary target is you — college students," he said.

Loomis said many well-known groups will try to begin on campus under a front name or a name that is often misleading. Even, celebrities such as Bill Cosby, politician Jack Kemp and astronaut Sally Ride have been deceived by groups using a front name.

Loomis said K-State does have a history of cult activity. Within the last 15 years, a group using the front name Collegiate Association for World Principles (CARP) came to campus. The group was actually a famous cult called the Moonies, which was responsible for the brainwashing of thousands of victims.

Frank Tillman, former head of the industrial engineering department, said that his daughter, then a student, was recruited by another cult active on campus called Maranatha.

Tillman said his daughter first became involved in the group when she attended a Bible study. As her involvement grew, she became very detached and isolated from her family.

"If I started to question her, she would get a very cold stare. We couldn't persuade her," Tillman said.

Tillman said that the cult gradually began to run his daughter's life. She moved in with other members and announced that she had been paired up with another member whom she was supposed to marry.

Tillman and his wife then took their daughter and drove to Great Bend to see a family that had had a past cult experience.

"Quite frankly, we kidnapped her," he said. "We weren't going to let her out until she straightened out."

Tillman said that they succeeded, and their daughter left the cult.

Tillman said that Maranatha was kicked off of campus. Another cult that was active

Interim head at Salina back after accident

By SUZANNE WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After being involved in a helicopter crash at K-State-Salina this summer, Peter Kennedy, interim department head of aviation, returned to his office last week.

Kennedy was flying over the Salina air field on a routine maintenance check in July when one of the helicopter's engines failed. The helicopter hit the ground three to four seconds later, Kennedy said.

When Kennedy got to the hospital, doctors found a broken and a cracked vertebrae, three broken ribs, a punctured lung and a cracked sternum. Doctors did not think Kennedy would walk again.

Surgeons placed two steel rods on either side of Kennedy's spine to support it for the duration of the healing process. Kennedy spent three days in the Someone new will be taking on the sports programs, talk shows and music at KSDB-FM 91.9, K-State's student radio station.

A new student position of program director has been created by the station's advisory board not only to make all programming decisions but also to hire all executive staff members. These duties were previously assigned to the station manager, a full-time, non-student position.

The station still will have a full-time station manager but that person's duties will focus more on Federal Communications Commission regulations and financial issues.

Program and content decisions will be made by the executive staff in weekly meetings in which the program director will serve as chair. Todd Simon, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications and KSDB Advisory Board member,

Kansas residents cope with damage

■ 805 homes damaged by flood waters in Butler County alone.

AUGUSTA, Kan. — Outside of a grocery store, a lone cart filled with water-swollen boxes of macaroni and cheese was a sign of the massive flood cleanup efforts under way by the business owners and residents here.

More than 20 loads of condemned meat, produce and other debris was hauled out of the muddy grocery store Wednesday. It was just the beginning; early estimates put the number of flooded businesses here at 92, most located along U.S. Highway 54, which passes through town.

"Devastating. You really understand how much a local merchant is to his community when he is not there," said Ricky St. John, one of the store's Kansas City suppliers.

Grocery store manager Martin Yeager said he doesn't know when he'll be able to reopen. He had more than 20 workers and their families helping clean the store.

Man elected sheriff after serving jail term

COLUMBUS, Kan. — As Cherokee County sheriff, Pat Collins pleaded guilty to misusing public funds and evading income taxes.

He surrendered his office in April and served 30 days in jail, vowing to return to public office.

Collins kept his promise Tuesday as he defeated incumbent Democrat John Green for the Cherokee County Commission 1st District by a vote of 1,227 to 1,029.

Collins did not immediately return a message left by The Associated Press at the county clerk's office.

Collins entered the limelight last October when he and three deputies were arrested and charged with abusing inmates in the county jail. Collins was acquitted of all abuse-related charges.

Part of Collins' plea agreement with prosecutors was that he would not contest an ouster petition filed by Attorney General Carla Stovall, meaning that he would forfeit his office.

Stovall filed civil proceedings to oust Collins from office after he was charged.

The misuse of public funds charge involved funds from a telephone company that provided pay phones at the jail. Collins admitted that he did not give commission checks to the county twice a month as he was supposed to.

A judge sentenced Collins to two six-month terms, then suspended those sentences and ordered Collins to spend 30 days in jail followed by two years of probation. Collins was ordered to pay $1,300 in fines and repay taxes on income that he did not include on his state income tax forms.

Even after Collins was charged, he received overwhelming support from residents of Galena, Kan., where he has lived in the same house since 1953.

During the election, Collins noted that while in office, he implemented the county's 911 system and kept the sheriff's office under budget for the first time in several years. Collins, who has served the public for 29 years, also said that he felt qualified to use tax dollars efficiently.

Arsenic might be aid in stifling leukemia

A form of arsenic once used in ant baits appears to be an impressive new weapon against a rare form of leukemia, stopping the disease completely in two-thirds of terminally ill patients in a small study.

The results were spectacular, said one of the doctors who tested the treatment on victims of acute promyelocytic leukemia, or APL.

Of 12 patients given arsenic trioxide, 11 responded with remissions of their cancer, but the APL quickly returned in three. All traces of the disease disappeared for up to 10 months in the other eight patients. The 12th died of a brain hemorrhage caused by APL but unrelated to the arsenic treatment, the researchers said.

The side effects were few and minor, according to the pilot study done at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York and published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

All 12 patients were extremely ill when the arsenic compound was administered.

'Ally McBeal' episode causes Catholic furor

NEW YORK — Catholic activists are furious over this week's "Ally McBeal" episode that included jokes about nuns having sex and a priest videotaping off-color confessions.

The Catholic League for Religious and Civil Rights wrote to the FOX Network's chief executive for broadcasting standards on Wednesday, saying it was concerned about a "clear and intentional pattern of Catholic bashing" on the hit series.

Officials of FOX and David E. Kelley Productions, which produces the show, wouldn't comment.

Monday's show featured a nun who sued the Catholic Church after being dismissed for breaking her vow of celibacy. At one point, Ally McBeal joked that "nuns are not supposed to have sex except with other nuns."

The nun said at one point, "A priest has sex with a boy, he gets transferred. ... At least my lover was of legal age."

At another point, a priest videotaped confessions about sex for a documentary, "World's Naughtiest Confessions."

"I can't imagine anyone getting away with saying this if it were any other religious group," said Gregory Coiro, a priest with the Archdiocese of Los Angeles who acted as a script consultant for ABC last year for "Nothing Sacred," a short-lived series about an inner-city priest.

Coiro called the humor insulting and very demeaning.

The New York-based Catholic League said this follows a Sept. 28 episode where a Protestant minister told a lawyer about his affair with a parish worker and said, "I realize that doesn't make me an altar boy." The lawyer responded, "If you were an altar boy, you'd be with a priest."

Maine town considers refining nudity laws

NEWPORT, Maine — One woman wants to mow her lawn topless. Her neighbor doesn't like it. Solution: Let the voters decide.

With a vote Tuesday of 775-283, Newport residents nixed plans for an ordinance to punish women for displaying their breasts in public.

It all boiled over on Martin Stream Road a few months ago. Desiree Davis, who is in her 30s, wanted to cut the grass without a shirt. Her neighbor, Mary Thompson, called authorities and complained. Topless lawn mowing, she said, was indecent.

Besides, she warned, passing motorists might get distracted and cause an accident.

The law in Maine prohibits the display of genitalia or the committing of sexual acts in public, but Town Manager Kenneth Knight noted that breasts are not genitalia and lawn mowing is not a sexual act. No crime here, he reasoned.

So Thompson launched a petition drive to have the town's Board of Selectmen craft a law to stop topless lawn-mowing women. She rounded up 125 signatures to get the matter on Tuesday's ballot.

In the meantime, Shirley Davis, Desiree's mother, had a company design and print T-shirts for "official members" of the fictitious Topless Lawn Mowers Club. More than 100 sold in the first week. Two downtown businesses selling them have placed orders for more.

Davis said her daughter didn't plan on changing her mowing habits for next summer.

"She likes a nice tan," Davis said, "and I have a large lawn."

Labor dispute hurts ABC morning show

NEW YORK — ABC's "Good Morning America" called off next week's planned road trip to California in another casualty of a labor dispute that left 2,200 behind-the-scenes employees locked out of their jobs for the second-straight day Wednesday.

The network struggled to regain its footing after a shaky Election Night performance without its usual off-camera employees.

Members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, including camera operators, editors and producers, staged a one-day strike over health benefits Monday. ABC responded by locking out the workers until they promised advance warning of future job actions.

NABET's parent union urged politicians not to talk to reporters from ABC or its affiliates on Election Night, and many Democrats responded. ABC anchor Peter Jennings had to explain on the air why so few Democrats were being interviewed.

"It became abundantly clear that you're featuring guests from one party and not the other," said ABC News spokeswoman Eileen Murphy. "You have an obligation to tell the viewers."

Students given chance to study cattle digestion

■ Rumen fistula provides students with view into cattle's largest stomach.

By JAMI STUMP
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At first glance the K-State beef-research unit might look like it is the home for a strange group of foreign cattle with stoppers protruding from their sides.

Upon closer investigation, it becomes evident these animals are not strange or different.

What makes them unique is the critical role they play in several research projects conducted by the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry and the College of Veterinary Medicine.

T.G. Nagaraja, professor of microbiology in the College of Veterinary Medicine, said the cattle have had rumen fistulas. A rumen fistula is the surgical process of putting an opening into the largest stomach of a ruminant animal.

Animals such as cattle, sheep, goats and camels are ruminant animals. These animals have four stomachs, and the largest and first stomach is the rumen.

The opening in the stomach is then plugged with a flexible, soft plastic polymer called a cannula.

Once an animal has a rumen fistula, scientists can extract samples from the rumen to further their research concerning rumen microbiology, rumen nutrition, fermentation and metabolism.

The process is considered relatively simple and easy, causing little discomfort to the animal.

Bob Cochran, professor of animal sciences and industry, said the alternative is uncomfortable for the animal.

"To do rumen research, it is best to create a fistula in the rumen," he said. "You can do a better job of collecting the samples, and it is less uncomfortable for the animal. The alternative is to insert a tube down the esophagus, which is harder to do and more uncomfortable for the animal."

Most of the research done by the College of Veterinary Medicine is funded by companies that use the research results in the development of new projects, Nagaraja said.

These projects focus on the microbial aspect of cattle digestion, he said.

The research done by the animal sciences and industry department is both state and federal funded. Cochran said the majority is through K-State research and extension.

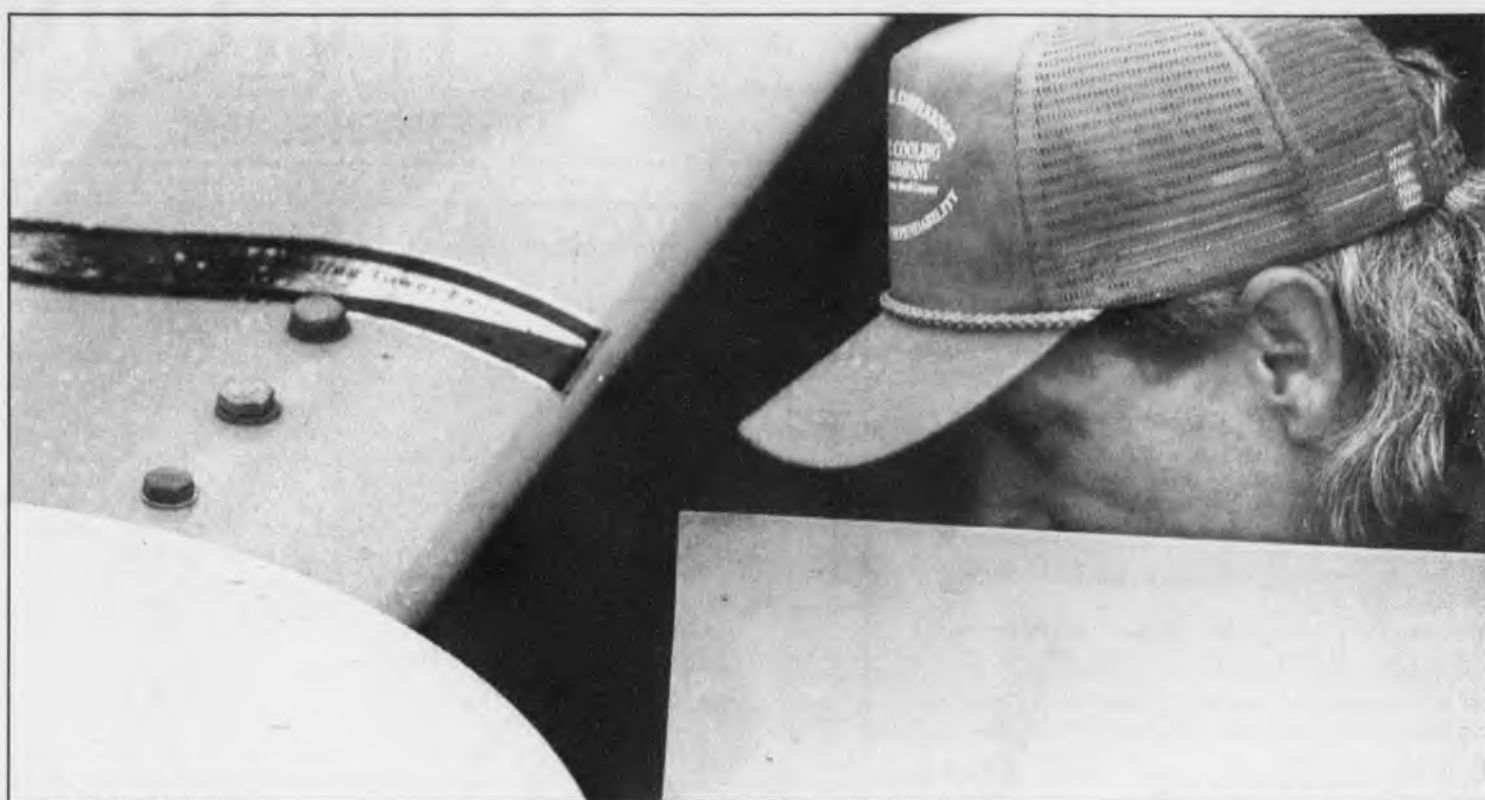

Cochran said the animal science department focuses on the forage nutrition aspects in cattle digestion.

"There are 18 million acres of range and pasture land in Kansas," he said. "This is a tremendous renewable resource for Kansas producers, if we provide the supplemental nutrients that improve production of ruminant animals."

Undergraduate and graduate students play several roles in the research done on these animals.

"Animals with a rumen fistula open the door for new research opportunities for students studying different aspects that affect the rumen," said Tryon Wickersham, research assistant in animal sciences and industry.

Students also assist in haltering the animals, collecting samples and feeding the cattle, Nagaraja said.

Bin Laden, aide indicted in embassy bombings

U.S. State Department offers possible $5 million reward for arrests, convictions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Fugitive Saudi millionaire Osama bin Laden and a top aide were indicted Wednesday in the U.S. Embassy bombings in Africa and accused of conspiring to kill Americans outside the United States.

Bin Laden and Muhammad Atef, identified as military commander of bin Laden's organization, were charged in an indictment returned in U.S. District Court in Manhattan. The U.S. State Department announced rewards of up to $5 million for their arrests and convictions.

"This is an important step forward in our fight against terrorism," Attorney General Janet Reno said in a statement. "It sends a message that no terrorist can flout our laws and murder innocent civilians."

If convicted, both men could face the death penalty.

They and four other men are charged with participating in a worldwide terrorist organization led by bin Laden in a conspiracy to murder Americans.

The targets of the alleged plot included members of the U.S. military in Saudi Arabia and Somalia and Americans employed at the U.S. embassies in Nairobi, Kenya and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania.

Other goals included setting up front companies, providing bogus travel documents and lying to authorities in various countries, prosecutors said.

The indictment alleged that bin Laden and his group, al Qaeda, forged alliances with representatives of the government of Iran, the National Islamic Front in Sudan and an Iranian group, Hezbollah.

Prosecutors alleged that bin Laden's organization acted on its own as well as through other organizations, operating under its umbrella.

Prosecutors identified other organizations as Al Jihad, an Egypt-based Islamic group led at one time by Sheikh Omar Abdel-Rahman, and a number of Al Jihad groups in other countries, including Sudan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Yemen and Somalia.

Bin Laden already was indicted by a grand jury in U.S. District Court in Manhattan, but the indictment returned Wednesday directly linked him to the embassy bombings Aug. 7. The blasts at embassies in Nairobi, Kenya and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, killed 24 people, including 12 Americans, and injured thousands.

The indictment said five of the defendants are charged with murdering all the civilians killed in the two embassy bombings.

The indictment alleges that bin Laden and a committee of his group's members issued fatwas or religious edicts urging other members and associates of the group to kill Americans.

Among those charged previously was Mamdouh Mahmud Salim, described as a top lieutenant of bin Laden.

Salim was charged in September in a criminal complaint in Manhattan with murder conspiracy and use of weapons of mass destruction in an international plot to kill U.S. citizens.

The grand jury was convened after 19 U.S. service personnel were killed when a bomb exploded in June 1996 at a military apartment complex in Saudi Arabia. There were suspicions that bin Laden was linked with the attack.

77% of Kansans believe it's time to let Southwestern Bell compete for long distance

It's been more than two years since telecommunications legislation was passed, designed to bring real competition to the telephone-service industry. All this time the big long-distance providers — AT&T, MCI and Sprint — have chosen not to compete for local residential services. By doing so, they have kept Southwestern Bell out of the long-distance market.

In a recent statewide survey, Kansas residential telephone customers were asked: "Should Southwestern Bell be allowed to compete for long distance if companies like AT&T, MCI and Sprint were allowed to serve local residential customers but chose to provide local service only to large business customers?"

The overwhelming majority of Kansans — 77 percent — said, "Yes, let Southwestern Bell into long distance."

In the same survey, three out of four Kansas customers said they believed competition would improve telephone prices and services more readily than regulation. And 80 percent said they would like to have the option of buying both local and long-distance service from a single provider.

Now recently, AT&T announced their intention to merge with Tele-Communication, Inc. (TCI), the nation's largest cable company. The merger would position AT&T to offer residential service to about one-third of the homes in America. We think that's great. We're ready to compete with AT&T and other providers for local and long-distance service.

Kansas telephone customers want the benefits of real competition. It's time to allow Southwestern Bell to compete for long-distance service in Kansas. That's why we're challenging the big long-distance companies to "Meet us in the marketplace. Now."

OUR VIEW

Monolith issue deserved debate

Technically, the monument that sits in front of Manhattan City Hall is merely stone and mortar — a simple gift from the Fraternal Order of Eagles to the City of Manhattan in 1958.

But lately, that monument has taken on a life of its own.

Carved into the granite are the words of the Ten Commandments, and that has some Manhattan residents in an uproar. It has stirred people up so much, in fact, that city staff members have reported getting more than 900 phone calls, 27 letters, 29 e-mails and 272 signatures on petitions addressing the monolith. Much of it was in favor of leaving the commandments where they are.

What brought all of this controversy to light was the (read: repositioning) of the monolith after the renovation of City Hall was completed last month. The monument has been on the front lawn of City Hall since the fifties but was moved to make room for the expansion. The repositioning of the monolith turned the face depicting the Ten Commandments to the north, making them visible to passersby along Poyntz Avenue and to the casual observer.

The ensuing uproar prompted city officials to vote on repositioning the monument Tuesday night at the City Commission meeting. Seeing the issue on the agenda prompted many Manhattan residents to go to the meeting to present their views on the monument. They expected to be given the right to speak to officials on the topic before the final vote was called, as is tradition in Manhattan — before the vote is called on any issue, the floor is open for discussion.

This time, however, Mayor Steve Hall decided that the case for the monolith was closed. He simply made a motion for final action without giving residents the chance to speak. Hall must have thought that the incursion of phone calls, letters and petitions was enough to gauge public sentiment.

The commission voted to reposition the monolith so it isn't as conspicuous, and they voted to leave the public out of that decision.

Many angry people left the meeting Tuesday night. Nobody could remember closing debate without first giving people a chance to speak their minds. It is clear that the three commissioners who voted to move the monolith already had made up their minds on the issue before the meeting began.

It isn't good to say that the city has a right to close an issue to public comment. The commissioners weren't the people taking calls about the monument; it was staff members. The people who cared enough to plan a meeting into their day expected to be given a chance to speak to their elected officials, and it was denied — in a brand-new City Hall built with public money and acoustically designed for open debate at meetings.

Why is a slab of granite that most people compare to a tombstone causing such turmoil? After all, it's just stone and mortar.

But then, the constitution is just paper, isn't it?

Cartoon offends reader

Editor,

I find that I have difficulty expressing myself. A particular cartoon has moved me to try.

In Tuesday's Collegian, a cartoon depicting a Native American shooting himself with a bow and arrow was allowed to be printed. I never thought I would see something so repugnant outside of a Sam Sackett column. Brad Good and Tyler Lansdown, the creators of this offensive cartoon, now have a special spot, with good ol' repressed Sackett, in my heart.

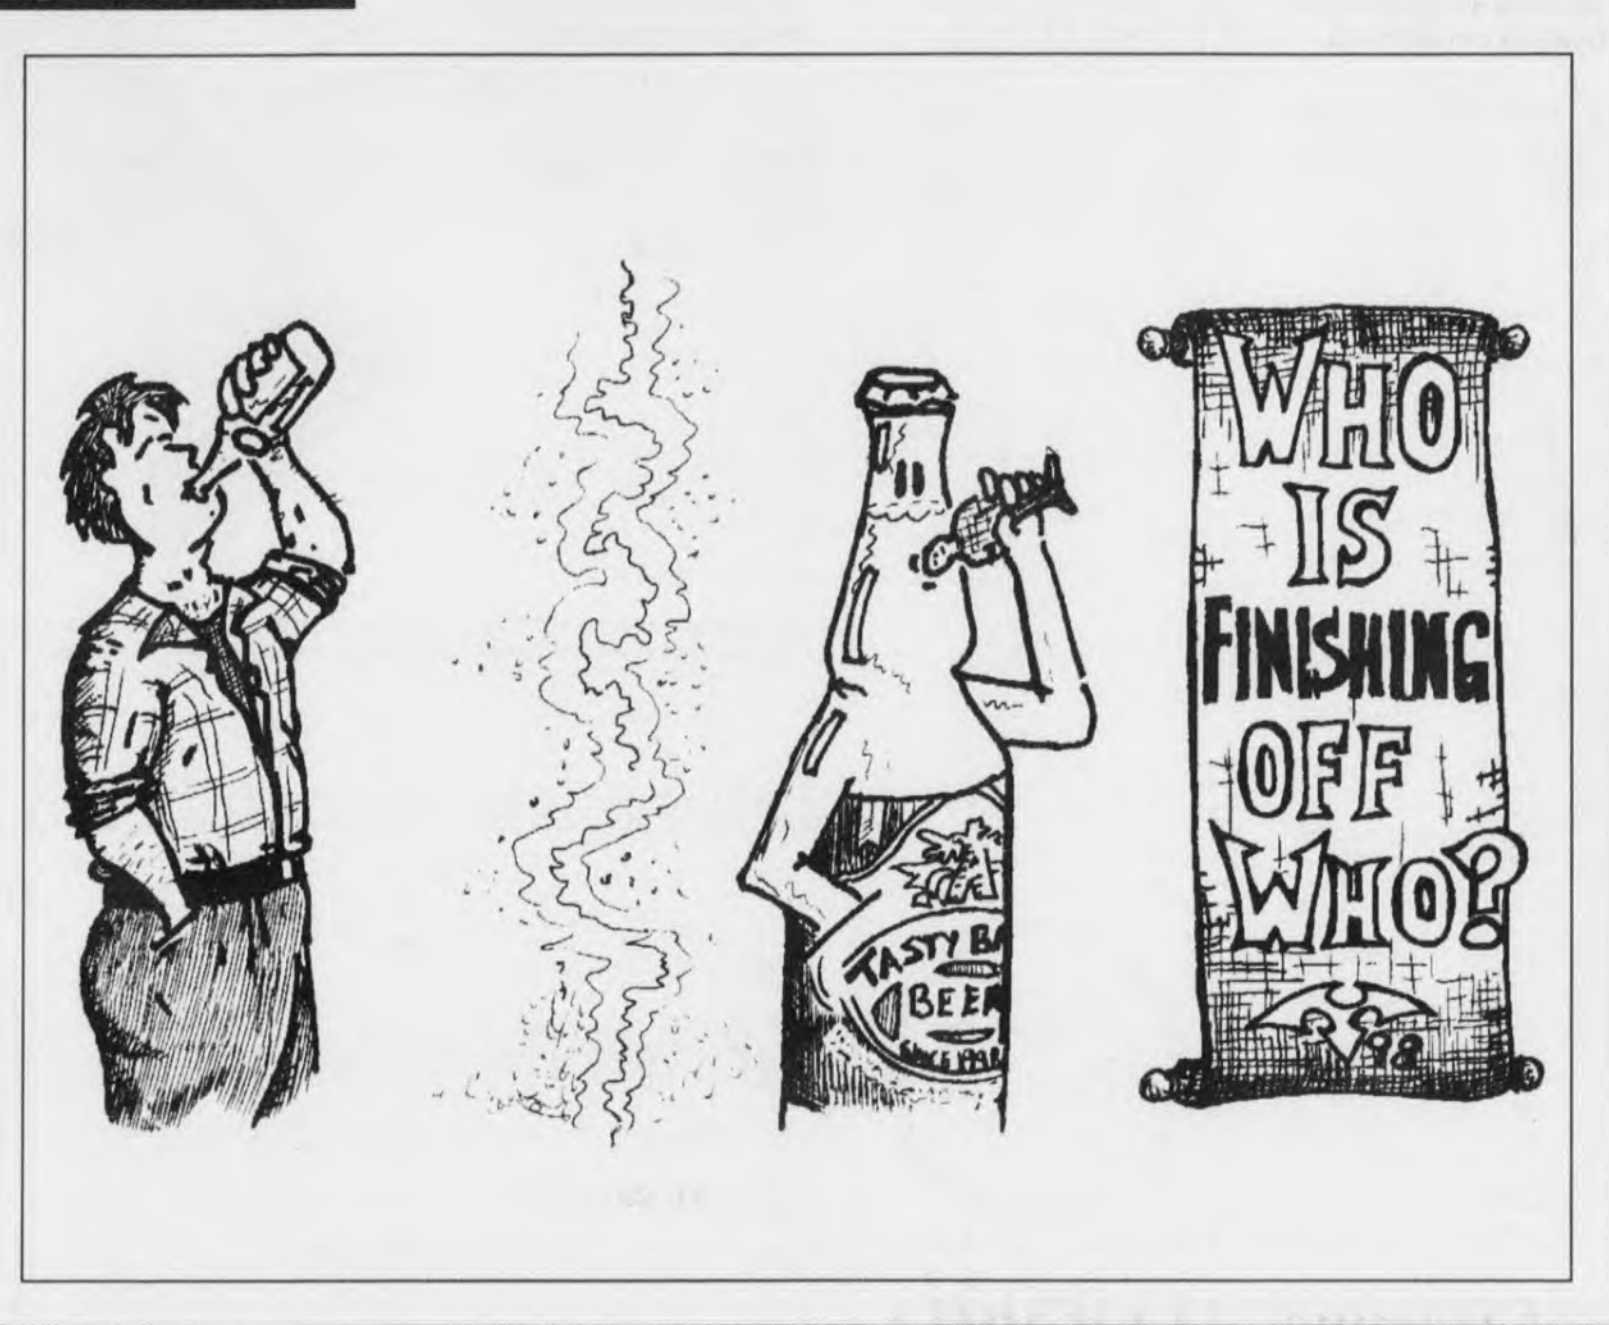

I feel they have crossed a line. I carry the cartoon around with me and show people, trying to make them aware of its existence and effect. Almost everyone I've talked to has had similar disgust and questions. WHY? Why would they draw something of this nature to be published? Was it intentional, or are they consumed by their ignorance? Why would an editor allow this to be printed? Why didn't the Collegian staff at least provide an explanation?

Even after the issue was raised, they failed to print something the following day. I guess they would like this monumental error just to go away. Like most, they wish the native people of this land would just disappear. It won't happen ... WE ARE HERE!

This week is American Indian Awareness Week. I encourage everyone to educate themselves and seek an awareness of reality. Sackett, Lansdown and Good, get a conscience ... please! Every one of us must not forget what Good and Lansdown did Tuesday. We must not allow those blinded by ignorance and hate to rule any longer. Please challenge stereotypes, myths, assumptions and blatant acts like the cartoon at each moment they present themselves.

DISAPPEARING ACT

What do you do when you're left far behind?

VIEWPOINT

KEN WELLS

My best friend in the city moved away yesterday.

It came as something of a shock — I had less than 24 hours warning, just enough time for a few phone calls between packing and a quick run to Wal-Mart for packing tape. This is not enough time for a true friend.

I don't have a lot of friends. Enemies, sure, more than campus has squirrels, but friends are few and far between. This doesn't bother me; I make up for it in the quality of these people.

I don't use the word "friend" loosely, either. That word has pretty heavy connotations to me. To me, it means acceptance, despite how uncomfortable the truth may be; understanding, or at least a willingness to listen; and dependability, knowing that there's always someone who'll help you defuse life's little explosive moments.

Acquaintances I have many of, and I'm grateful for such. Friends, though, are a rare breed.

I have perhaps a couple of these rarities in my department, a few at the paper and a handful lurking about campus. It's a hell of a job, too. I get moody enough to make a werewolf look relatively static. There are a few lines which, when crossed, earn my infinite spite and eternal enmity. I would be a lousy friend to myself. Guess that's why I need people like the person who's just disappeared into the rain in a large yellow truck.

The attrition has been ghastly since my undergrad days. Obviously, when your class finally graduates, they squirm free of the educational claw and swim every direction like a handful of minnows. (Apparently, I'm the minnow who got banged against the side of the boat and is constantly swimming around in circles.) Sure, a few will stay in town, and eventually, they too will blink away when you turn your back on them.

Obviously, the key is to make new friends. However, to do so, you need at least some semblance of a social skill. I can hit things really hard with my head. That's the closest thing I have to a social skill. Neither do I belong to anything resembling a social organization; the newspaper is apparently a construct devised to chew up social lives and spit them out thoroughly mulched. So people disappear, often never to be heard from again (promises and pledges to the contrary), making my life seem like a horror movie: "I Know What You Did in Grad School."

The most obvious advice I can give (other than "Get the hell out of Manhattan before you grow roots or get tenure!") is not to let the companion-casualty rate jade you to meeting new people. You could let the ghosts of all those you've known and lost dissuade you from opening yourself up again. If you do, you'll become this bitter old coot scuffing his feet across campus, muttering to himself and throwing ice at squirrels. Let me know if you do; I'll then officially be redundant.

So one of my most loyal friends steals away into the downpour. I've just been here too long. My oldest friends seem to be congealing around Wichita, with my best friend finding himself deep behind the maple leaf curtain in the heart of Quebec. (We're planning a rescue mission. If anyone has a helicopter, maybe some assorted automatic weapons that we could borrow for insertion behind enemy lines, let me know.) My best friend from high school works in Baltimore, and I have a few friends laying low in the heart of Ohio. I could think of it as an exodus. I'm beginning to see it as an infiltration. Soon my friends will assume the reigns of power in this country and seize control. Insert menacing laughter here.

Absurd, sure. Ridiculous even. But there's a pretty big gap in my life right now. If I can't at least fill it with laughter, I can at least enjoy the echo.

Sex needs to be kept within confines of marriage, love

VIEWPOINT

SAM SACKETT

Sex. It's fun. It's exciting. It's invigorating, but is there more to it than what meets the senses?

The present state of our society is one that casts less and less importance upon the necessity of marriage before sex. The marriage bed means little more than another opportunity to express what already has been shared on a regular basis.

Sex needs to be limited to the confines of marriage, and there is a good case to be made for this.

I think most people would agree with me that those who engage in sex solely for recreational purposes have a distorted and perverted understanding of it. The rational person understands that sex is much more than a feeling of the senses. It is an expression of love between two people. So why, if two people love each other, would anyone claim that sex before marriage is wrong?

I answer this by questioning whether or not the love is really love. Passion, warm feelings and pleasure can all be associated with love, and they all can result from love. But passion, warm feelings and pleasure are not synonymous with love. True love is giving what is best for the other person. A person who loves is one who denies self and looks after the other person first.

It is quite easy for two unmarried people to say in public they love each other, and their sexual relationship is simply an expression of that love. Both partners can claim that sex is necessary for the passion that exists between them. How do you argue that they don't love each other?

I say they have feelings and attractions toward each other, but they cannot share a true love. The kind of love that leads to sex insists on commitment — and a lifelong commitment at that. Conditional love based on how you feel is not true love.

It has to be a lifelong commitment, because love that expresses itself in that way cannot limit itself to the confines of time. The only requirement for this love is that life has to exist. Love that exists within the walls of a mutual time constraint is no love at all but rather a selfish or distorted form of love.

Emotions, feelings and expressions are all temporary. What kind of love establishes itself on the principle of whim or temporary feelings? Certainly not love worth the value of sex — unless sexual value has been reduced to nothing more than animalistic tendencies. And this, some would argue.

A person who engages in sex outside marriage does so on a temporary foundation. Even if the persons involved are doing so on a trial basis to see if it could last a lifetime, they are allowing for an escape.

In other words, they are conditioning their expression of love. They are giving themselves an out in case they lose the mutual attraction for each other.

Setting stipulations on how long you will remain together in the sexual relationship is nothing short of uncertainty. If uncertainty exists about the person with whom you share sex, what kind of love compels you to continue?

It is quite necessary for two people wanting to share sexual relations under the umbrella of love to do so with a covenant. Unless the two people are willing to remain together through the difficult times, there is no reason why either should finish out their relationship when the feelings fade. If you are seeking only temporary and shallow relationships, then you will have little problem engaging in premarital sex.

Within the confines of marriage as it's intended, sex can be expressed from the solid base of love for a lifetime. When there is a lifelong commitment, both partners can take assurance that the other is in it for the good and the bad. They know each is not in it for self but for the other person.

To the person who says that sex can be enjoyed without love, I agree. It can, but then we are back trying to justify sex for recreation or pleasure only. The consequences of this are extremely severe.

It hurts. It hurts bad. The vulnerability that each partner undergoes is tremendous. It is the single most intimate act you can physically do with another person. Because of this, the emotional damage alone can be detrimental.

If you don't believe you ever could find someone that would be willing to share this kind of lifelong love, I believe you are mistaken. You can find love for a lifetime if you are willing to be patient. You can find love for a lifetime if you are willing to strive for the higher standard instead of settling for what is readily available. Anyone can get what is easy in life, but it takes a strong-hearted and courageous person to discover and live what is best.

Professor wins research award

■ Macritchie honored for work on proteins, lipids in bread dough.

By NANCY GRATHWOHL
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Finlay Macritchie knows dough.

Macritchie, professor of grain science and industry, won the Thomas Burr Osborne Medal for his outstanding research on wheat proteins and lipids in relation to dough and bread quality, said Donald Kasarda, chairman of the committee that selected the award.

The American Association of Cereal Chemists presented Macritchie with the award at its annual meeting in Minneapolis, Minn.

He also received a $2,000 honorarium, a medal and fellowship status.

"Most of the members of the association are just members, but some people are named fellows to recognize outstanding contributions," Macritchie said.

It is the highest AACC award that recognizes outstanding research accomplishments.

"The recipients have generally made major lifetime contributions to some area of research related to cereal chemistry," Kasarda said. "It is not awarded every year, but only about 30 times in the past 70 years since the award was created and presented to the first recipient, Dr. Osborne, in 1928."

Macritchie's work at K-State is fundamental in nature.

"I characterize different proteins in cereal and relate them to quality," Macritchie said.

Cereal is only one application of Macritchie's research.

He also works with breads, pastas, noodles, pastries, cakes and cookies.

The association created this award in the form of a medal in 1926 and decided to name it for Osborne, who was a protein chemist and worked for the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station around the turn of the century.

"Osborne defined the classes of grain proteins, was instrumental in defining the nature of proteins in general, was one of the key researchers who discovered that certain amino acids were essential in the diet, and was a major contributor to the discovery of the first vitamins," Kasarda said.

Honduras makes appeal for international aid

Hurricane Mitch leaves 9,000 dead; thousands still missing in Central America

By JAMES ANDERSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras — Unable to provide Hondurans such basics as gasoline, food and water, a government overwhelmed by Hurricane Mitch's destruction made an urgent appeal for international aid Wednesday.

Across Central America, Hurricane Mitch has killed an estimated 9,000 people and destroyed roads leading to areas where authorities said thousands were still missing.

A revived Mitch was expected to hit South Florida on Thursday as a fast-moving tropical storm, bringing 4 to 8 inches of rain before heading toward the Bahamas. Mitch had sustained winds of 45 mph Wednesday when it was 250 miles west of Cuba.

In Honduras, the largest cities have become virtual islands accessible only by air. The U.S. Air Force was helping Honduras deliver aid to remote towns, Communications Minister Tomas Lozano said.

Honduran officials estimated their country's death toll at 7,000 on Wednesday, though no one knows how many really died and it wasn't clear what the number was based on. Some 10,000 people officially were listed as missing. As many as 1 million are homeless, said Col. Rene Osorio of the national emergency committee.

"We really don't know what the numbers are. There are places we haven't reached yet," Osorio said.

Mitch hit the Honduran coast last week and parked itself there, dumping several feet of rain onto the poor nation before moving across the Yucatan Peninsula and into the Gulf of Mexico.

It left behind a stunning wake of death and devastation across Central America.

"How do we continue, without food, without sleep?" said Yolanda Marvella Araya, 35, who has spent nights outside on a soggy mattress along the debris-strewn banks of the Choluteca River since flooding destroyed her family's home. "I don't know what to think. My mind needs help."

In neighboring Nicaragua, as many as 2,400 were believed dead. Rains there last week caused a crater lake atop the Casitas volcano to break open Friday and spill tons of mud onto villages along the slopes.

El Salvador declared three days of national mourning for the 239 dead there. In Guatemala, 194 were reported dead, and at least 77,900 had evacuated their homes. At least six people were killed in southern Mexico, and seven people died in Costa Rica.

The Nicaraguan government pleaded Wednesday for more helicopters to deliver food and medical supplies. Its air force has only six helicopters.

A U.S. Army base in Panama sent three helicopters to Nicaragua on Monday, and the U.S. government pledged to send another seven. Mexico said it was sending 10, and Panama will send two more.

Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo called President Clinton on Tuesday to urge that a large-scale international aid effort be made. Zedillo's office said Clinton was "highly sympathetic" to the Mexican leader's concerns and pledged to review aid efforts.

Obstacles to relief are daunting: Countless roads are out in Honduras, including main highways. Nearly all available aircraft are being used in the search for survivors and victims in isolated towns.

"There are medicines available, but the problem is the same: How do we transport it?" said a frustrated Andres Aguiriano Duarte, deputy commissioner of the emergency committee.

The government is coping with competing demands: to find and rescue survivors still isolated by flooding in remote towns, to establish a reliable information network to assess the disaster and the urgent need for drinking water and food in the capital of 800,000.

"The people's desperation is growing," Aguiriano said.

The country's roads sustained $2 billion in damage, which is nearly one-third of Honduras' gross domestic product and double the government's budget, Finance Minister Gabriela Nunez said.

Coffee and banana crops — the two most important sources of export income for Honduras — also were hit especially hard. Coffee crop damage in neighboring countries also was substantial.

The Honduran Red Cross continued its search operations in the countryside but was hampered by the lack of transportation and $2 million in flood damage to its Tegucigalpa headquarters.

"Tell the world that, really, our country has been destroyed," said Red Cross president Meneza de Mencia. "The Red Cross itself is homeless, and we're still rescuing living survivors."

Before you walk down the aisle, share the news with friends and family.

Latest recruiting class impresses baseball coach

■ Head coach Mike Clark puts 5 freshman on 2-deep after Fall World Series.

By MIKE VIETTI

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 13th-annual K-State baseball version of the World Series concluded after a series in which K-State's latest recruiting class played up to its previous billing.

Head coach Mike Clark had nothing but compliments for his latest recruiting class, which displayed their skills in the series, which ended Oct. 26.

"It's just a very good class," Clark said. "The thing that has impressed most everyone is how hard working they are."

"This class has a ways to go, but it is exciting because they are putting tremendous pressure on the returning players."

Freshman infielder and pitcher Brett

REID

Reid paved the way on the offensive side for the Cats in the seven-game series with a team-leading .409 batting average and tied for the team lead for runs batted in with eight.

Senior transfer Derek Andersen made his claim to be a part of the starting rotation, stifling his teammates with a 2.25 ERA and 17 strikeouts.

Currently, five freshmen are listed among the two-deep list for the team, an amazing fact when it is considered that the baseball team has been forced to practice this fall at CiCo Park, due to the construction of a new baseball field.

Clark listed several problems with practicing at CiCo Park such as no batting cages, a poor drainage system and only two bullpen mounds.

"There's some things at CiCo Park that don't allow you to get the repetition that you would normally have in a fall baseball situation," Clark said. "I'm sure that had a lot to do with the lack of consistency."

The diamond situation has forced the coaching staff to incorporate individual workouts into the practice regime on a higher level than in years past.

In addition to more individual workouts, the Cats will begin practice a week early in January in hopes of attaining the repetitions necessary to begin the season in February.

Despite the practice conditions, Clark said the team will be ready for the start of the season.

"We're not going to allow the disadvantage of practicing at CiCo to affect us," he said.

ANDERSON

Weather permitting, K-State will be able to open its 1999 season Feb. 20 in the newly constructed baseball stadium. With the drainage system already in place, soil will be placed on the field in the upcoming week, with the foundation for the stadium built afterward.

Both the coaching staff and players are awaiting the new stadium's completion anxiously.

"I hope everyone will drive by the stadium once a week during November," Clark said.

"The improvements will be dramatic. It's just a really exciting thing for people to see."

Flag-football teams travel for tourney

By NICK BRATKOVIC

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football team is not the only Manhattan squad playing football on the road this weekend.

On Saturday, while Coach Bill Snyder, quarterback Michael Bishop and company are on the road against Baylor, five K-State flag-football teams will be competing in Lincoln, Neb., in Nike's regional flag-football tournament.

The three women's teams participating are Kappa Alpha Theta sorority, Alpha Chi Omega sorority and Champs. On the men's side are the Naked Bootleggers and Polk High. All teams start playing Saturday in three-team pools. Teams who advance to the next round on Sunday will play in a single-elimination tournament, with an all-expense-paid trip to the finals and possibly the Sugar Bowl on the line.

For Theta player Jessica McPeake, junior in management information systems, the tournament is her team's chance at redemption.

"We want to show ourselves that we can compete against good teams, because there wasn't a whole lot of competition in the Rec league at K-State," McPeake said.

Jared Jackson, senior in finance, said he is excited to see how his team will compete in their regional, which is one of nine around the country.

"There is a lot of talent and good teams," Jackson said. "It will be interesting to see how we stack up against them."

This weekend's tournament has a few different rules than the teams are accustomed to, including only one forward pass, as opposed to two in Rec play. There also is a running clock, a change from the K-State league's set number of plays per game.

Players said the tournament's rule changes make it more like regular football. Courtney Call, senior in dietetics, said she and her Alpha Chi teammates are adjusting to the rule changes.

"It makes a difference, because we have to adjust to the different rules," Call said.

The five teams have been practicing against one another with four referees who will be accompanying the team. The referees also have the chance to go to the Sugar Bowl. While it's all fun and games, one player said winning is her ultimate goal.

"Our team has a lot of fun playing, but we go up there to win," Call said.

McPeake said she is excited about the opportunity to compete.

"How many times can you say you got to play in a Nike college football tournament?" McPeake said.

Jackson agreed and said the chance to win and go to the finals at the Sugar Bowl is motivating.

"It is our first real opportunity to do this," Jackson said. "And we are pretty excited to have a chance to go down there (Sugar Bowl)."

LEEPER JUMPS SHIP

High jumper allegedly left school Oct. 26

By FRANK FLATON

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State high jumper Nathan Leeper has disappeared from campus.

Leeper, a sophomore in social science and native of Protection, Kan., is the defending NCAA champion in the high jump. He allegedly left school Oct. 26, but he has not withdrawn from his classes.

Track and field coach Cliff Rovelto said he last saw Leeper on Oct. 20, but he did not know of his current whereabouts.

"All I know is that he is not in school, but he did not drop out," he said.

Leeper's mysterious disappearance surprised Rovelto, he said.

"To my knowledge, he did not tell anyone he was leaving," he said.

Teammate Keith Black said Leeper was a good friend, and his sudden absence was a complete surprise.

"I knew him well," Black said. "He is one of my best friends from the track team. It was a shock to me."

"I talked to him a week earlier, and he seemed to be fine," Black said. "I don't know why he would just leave like that. He just left and didn't say goodbye to anybody."

Black said the reasons for Leeper leaving were puzzling.

"He seemed happy to me," he said. "I mean, he was close to home, he won USA's and Nationals. He seemed fine to me."

Leeper's track résumé includes a 1998 NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championship, a Big 12 Conference title and a second-place finish at the USA Outdoor Championships.

His indoor accomplishments included two second-place finishes at the Big 12 Championships and USA Nationals and a 12th-place finish at the NCAA Championships.

Leeper's family could not be reached for comment.

Sophomore Nathan Leeper clears the bar during practice in Ahearn Field House. Leeper allegedly left school Oct. 26 but has not withdrawn from his classes.

Columnist's record falls to 6-3 after loss, looks for redemption against 2 new pickers

Nine days and counting. I have a few questions. They're rhetorical, though, so I don't really need any answers.

■ Will the Cats overlook Nebraska next weekend, considering they need a win over Missouri Nov. 21 to get into the Big 12 Conference Championship game, not a victory over the Huskers?

■ Why do three non-conference games seem to count so much more than eight conference games?

■ Will UCLA coach Bob Toledo ever shut up?

■ Can the Collegian start a poll next year that will factor into the BCS rankings?

■ How much do goalposts cost?

■ Why did the chicken cross the road?

■ Coach Snyder, will you please let the Mob play for the Chiefs during the Monday night game against Denver Nov. 16?

■ Will any pollster who thinks UCLA would beat K-State please speak up now?

■ Does anybody actually miss the NBA?

■ Should a bachelor's degree be completed in fewer than 6-1/2 years?

I suppose that's enough questions. It's time for business. Every week, in this space granted to me, I pick college football games against the spread. I go head-to-head with a guest picker. Last week, Jed Spencer beat me. I take my hat off to him — figuratively speaking.

I wish I really could take my hat off to him. Look at my mug shot with that hat on backwards. Tell me I don't look like I'm under the influence of something that's illegal unless I'm in California and I have a note from a doctor. I've asked for a re-take, but no dice.

Anyway, Jed beat me. At least Jed's a male. My record is now 6-3 (5-2 against men, 1-1 against women). Overall, I'm 56-39 picking games, while my guests have combined to go 49-46.

There's a new twist to this column this week. Apparently, I'm popular. I've had plenty of requests for guest pickers, so this week, I'm going with two.

Guest No. 1 is Chris Pultz, a 1997 K-State grad living in Denver. "Denver is awesome, but the sports coverage is terrible," he says. "I have to get all of my sports news off of the Internet and ESPN." He's also waiting for a Hibachi Hut to open out there, because he misses good gumbo.

Guest No. 2 is Dee Warren, who picked up a degree in graphic design here in 1993. His hobbies in college included stumbling from bar to bar on Thursday nights and tearing down the goalposts after big wins.

Good luck to both of them, but I'm going to win.

Here are our games:
1. K-State -29 at Baylor. If either of the guests wanted to pick Baylor, I wouldn't allow them in my column, because it would hurt my strength of schedule as well as my position in the Seattle Times. Me, both guests: K-State to cover.

2. Penn State -3 at Michigan. Penn State wins, but Michigan still beats Ohio State on Nov. 21. Me, both guests: Penn State to cover.

3. Michigan State +27.5 at Ohio State. The boyfriend of the woman who beat me a few weeks back swears that Michigan State is going to win this game. I'll root for the Spartans and probably lose this one to both of my guests. My pick: Michigan State to cover. Both guests: Ohio State to cover.

4. Purdue -13 at Northwestern. Northwestern would lose to KU, although I'd never pick the Hawks. Me, Guest No. 2: Purdue to cover. Guest No. 1: Northwestern to cover.

5. Oklahoma State +11 at Texas. The Cowboys' front seven are tough against the run. Major Applewhite will probably lead the Horns to victory, but I don't have visions of a blowout. My pick: Oklahoma State to cover. Both guests: Texas to cover.

6. Colorado +6.5 at Missouri. With two weeks to think about the loss at Kansas, the Buffs should be able to cover a touchdown. Me, Guest No. 1: Colorado to cover. Guest No. 2: Missouri to cover.

7. Nebraska -26 at Iowa State. Hell must be freezing over, because I think the Cyclones will cover against the Huskers. Me, Guest No. 1: Iowa State to cover. Guest No. 2: Nebraska to cover.

8. Oklahoma +19 at Texas A&M. As evidenced by game No. 7, Hell is freezing over. I still won't pick the Sooners. Me, both guests: Texas A&M to cover.

NBA bargaining session lasts less than 2 hours

By CHRIS SHERIDAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — With the NBA season slowly wasting away, collective bargaining talks went nowhere quickly Wednesday.

The opposing sides in the labor dispute had their shortest bargaining session since the lockout began, meeting for less than two hours as commissioner David Stern seemed to be moving to a divide-and-conquer strategy.

"I believe the people we met with today would like to make a deal," Stern said of Union Director Billy Hunter, President Patrick Ewing and their attorneys.

"Whether they'll be allowed to or not is going to be another issue," Stern said, naming agents David Falk and Arm Tellem as the main forces trying to scuttle a settlement that would benefit low- and middle-income players at the expense of superstars.

The pointed comments by Stern represented one of his strongest offensives to date in the increasingly contentious dispute that has caused the league to cancel games for the first time in its history.

Another 11 games were supposed to have been played Wednesday, and with each passing day, the likelihood increases that the season will not start until late December or early January, if at all.

"We estimate that we will pay out over a billion dollars (in player) salaries, and the representatives that sat in the room with us on behalf of those 400 players seem intent to have that billion dollars, along with the sand in the hourglass, just drip away," Stern said.

"My focus is trying to make the deal, not trying to cancel the season. But we're just worlds apart, and NBA players are losing an average of $14 million per game," Stern said.

From early in the day, when Stern and Hunter arrived minutes apart on a chilly morning and immediately started sniping at each other, it was apparent that the mood was negative and the prospects for progress were remote.

Stern began his attack on agents before he even entered the building, while Hunter blamed deputy commissioner Russ Granik for the breakup of the previous round of talks Monday.

Less than two hours later, Hunter and his negotiating team were exiting the building.

"We're leaving quickly because we're not making any progress. We need to back away until at least Friday," Hunter said. "We're just not going to capitulate at this moment."

Stern, Granik and their attorneys then made their exit 30 minutes later.

Stern began his remarks by pointing out that the league had offered increased minimum salaries for veterans, including a $1-million minimum for 10-year veterans, and a gradual phase-in of the union's proposal for an average-salary exception to replace the old $1-million exception.

He also said that owners wanted to establish a maximum salary equal to 25 and 35 percent of the salary cap.

"I believe, with good reason, that agents for the high-end players have now declared themselves, and they've decided that any deal that has a limitation that would affect perhaps 30-40 players, even though it would benefit the great mass of our 400 players, is a deal that doesn't deserve to get done. That, to me, is what seems to have changed the atmosphere of these talks since they ended last Wednesday," Stern said.

Stern specifically named Falk and Tellem as the forces preventing an agreement.

"That statement is ludicrous," Tellem said. "The union is looking out for all the players."

Falk, whose clients include Ewing, Michael Jordan, Alonzo Mourning, Juwan Howard, Allen Iverson and Stephen Marbury, said he did not take Stern's comments personally.

"I'm flattered they think I'm running the union, but clearly what David Stern is trying to do is tactically divide us — the agents from the players, the high-salaried players from the middle class," Falk said.

"This should be a wake-up call to the union to stay unified and not let them divide us."

Chris Canty arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass. — New England cornerback and former K-State standout Chris Canty was arrested Wednesday when officers noticed him in a parked car with an open container.

Canty was arrested at about 2:30 a.m. EST in the parking lot of a Merit gas station in North Attleboro. He did not enter a plea, and his case was continued to Nov. 17 in North Attleboro District Court. He was released on personal recognizance.

Canty, 22, said he was waiting to meet someone when he dozed off. He said there was an open bottle of beer near the passenger side of the rear seat.

Canty passed a sobriety test at the scene, North Attleboro police officer Michael Elliott said.

He was charged with operating a motor vehicle after his license to operate was suspended, operating while drinking alcohol, operating without a license and operating without an inspection sticker.

Canty said he was released after paying an overdue speeding ticket he had received during summer training camp, although the court clerk's office said it had no knowledge of that.

Canty, the Patriots' first-round draft pick last year, became a starter this season.

banned. CARP's request to begin at K-State was denied.

Loomis said that although K-State now has little or no cult activity, he suspects that K-State is a target for the infamous International Church of Christ, a cult which has recently been banned on the campuses of Butler County Community College, Wichita State University and the University of Kansas.

"I know of no other organization that has been banned on so many campuses," Loomis said. "That should tell you something."

Loomis said education is the best defense against cults.

FLOODING

"I was awestruck by the transformation from an open store to something like the devastation that was brought here," Yeager said.

As Yeager and others mopped out aisles and took inventory of the damage, residents in upscale subdivisions and mobile home parks alike treaded through spongy floors and hauled out stinking carpets and soggy furniture.

"You just feel dirty," said Betty Ledford as she stared at the growing pile of household items in her driveway.

Early Federal Emergency Management Agency put the flood damage at 805 homes in Butler County alone, including 230 mobile homes, many of which will be totaled.

Residents like Harold White were angry to learn that flood insurance only covered the structural damage.

"We have basically lost all our personal belongings ... mentally it is disturbing. We don't know where we're at."

Also receiving water damage were three museums and five city facilities, officials said.

Further south in Cowley County, the weekend rains that isolated many Kansas towns had ended. Floodwaters receded and river levels dropped. Most schools except for in August had reopened.

But life was far from normal for the flood victims. The luckier ones could get into their homes to begin cleaning. High and senior in marketing, said the new position will ease the workload of the station manager and create more structure for students working at the station.

Charles Lubbers, associate professor in journalism and board member, said most radio stations have both a program director and a station manager. He said creating the position of a program director will give the students working at KSDB a more similar experience.

Simon said he felt the station manager er should serve as an adviser to staff members and stay on top of more technical duties.

The decisions should be left to the students.

Weekly meetings will be something new to executive staff members, Simon said. In the past, student directors at the station came to the station manager if they had ideas.

"I think they'll love it," Simon said. "I've never known students to be shy when they're given the chance to make decisions."

Simon said the meetings will help the students work together as a true staff. "Ideas will flow better and process quicker," Peetz said.

Simon said audience members shouldn't expect big changes. He said changes in most media tend to be slow and subtle, and the program director should make programming decisions with the existing audience in mind.

intensive-care unit and then was moved to a private room. Five days after the accident, he was walking.

After an investigation of the accident, the Federal Aviation Administration concluded that contamination in the fuel pump got into the fuel-control unit, which shut off the fuel supply from the engine and caused it to fail.

"There's nothing I could have done," Kennedy said. "It would have happened at some point, anyway."

Kennedy made two calls to the radio tower and tried auto rotation to help the helicopter slow down, but it wasn't high enough. It fell 350 feet to the ground.

Kennedy said his progress has been slow. He said he still has trouble getting in and out of chairs and can't pick up heavy things but said he believes he'll eventually regain most of his strength. Kennedy said he hopes to start flying again by the end of the year.

The aviation department has provided great support since the accident, Kennedy said.

"My room became a flower shop," he said.

Four weeks after the accident, K-State-Salina sent a computer to Kennedy's home so he could start working again. Terry Kelley, maintenance training section head, said they moved meetings to Kennedy's home during his recovery.

"Nobody had seen him for a while," Kelley said. "This way, everyone could visit with him and see how he's doing."

Kelley and John Koehler, section head for the professional pilot program, were responsible for many of Kennedy's duties while he was away. Kelley said at times it was hard with all of his other obligations.

"We made it through it, but I don't think we want to do it again," Kelley said.

"We're glad to get him back."

'John Carpenter's Vampires' becomes display of gore, blood

By RYAN DOOM

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

"John Carpenter's Vampires" has more blood, gore, mutilations and decapitations than any film in a long time. The film is set as a Western filled with vampires that moves from one bloody showdown to the next.

"Vampires" revolves around the life of vampire slayer extraordinaire Jack Crow, played by James Woods. Crow leads a team of professional hunters who roam the southwestern United States searching for vampire hideouts and eradicating them.

The film starts with a promising scene that has Crow and his team taking out a group of what they refer to as "goons." After putting the skulls of the dead bloodsuckers on the hood of their Jeep, Crow notices that one is missing — the head of the master. They decide it is too late to bother with it, so they head back to town and throw a party, complete with prostitutes.

In the middle of the bash, that missing master, Valek (Thomas Ian Griffith), shows up and brutally slaughters the entire team — except, of course, Crow, his sidekick Montoya (Daniel Baldwin) and a bitten, but not dead, prostitute named Katrina (Sheryl Lee).

Because Valek communicates telepathically with victims, Crow plans to find this master using the prostitute. Once he does, Crow will eliminate him and save humanity.

Of all the vampire movies in the last few years, "John Carpenter's Vampires" definitely is the most gruesome. More blood and guts frequent this film than any movie in a long time.

The film is not frightening. The characters approach each situation so calmly that the audience feels no fear. Unlike films like "Blade," which was straight action, or "Interview with the Vampire," which was more of a drama, "Vampires" is somewhere in between.

No John Carpenter movie has been nominated for best picture. This film does not change his luck. "Vampires," like Carpenter's other films, has one tacky line after another. As always, it features a tough, cigar-smoking hero. And there is a damned, yet beautiful, heroine. This is what makes it a Carpenter picture.

Dedicated 'Cabaret' costume crew creates authentic, quality designs

By JENN DAVOREN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

At this moment, a small group of dedicated people are working up to nine hours a day in the basement of Nichols Hall, cutting, sewing and stitching theater costumes.

They're working to make garments that are as trashy and tacky as possible. "Cabaret," a past success on Broadway as well as a current sellout revival, will be performed in McCain Auditorium from Nov. 12-14 by K-State Theatre and the Department of Music.

The play, written by Joe Masteroff

In all, 30 costumes were made completely from scratch, and around 80 will appear in the show.

and based on the novel "I Am a Camera" by John van Druten, centers on the patrons and employees of a German cabaret nightclub on the brink of Nazi occupation. K-State's production will reflect the feeling of the times through creative costume designs, courtesy of the costume shop for the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre and Dance.

Dana Pinkston, K-State's costume designer for the past five years, began discussing costume designs with "Cabaret" director Lew Shelton last spring. After basic ideas were discussed and agreed upon, Pinkston decided to take a trip to New York's garment district in her search for interesting material.

"It's just cheaper to buy material there rather than in the Midwest," Pinkston said.

New York has contributed quite a bit of flavor to this particular show. Besides the costume fabric, K-State also has hired Mark Sorensen, a guest cutter and draper. He applied for the job through a theater magazine ad and quickly was hired for his experience and talent.

Sorensen has worked in many areas of fashion and theater. In his dealings with the fashion company Dolce & Gabbana, he has worked with Nicole Kidman, Demi Moore and Marisa Tomei. Sorensen also lent a hand to shows such as Broadway's "The Lion King," "Sunset Boulevard," and the Ringling Brothers Barnum & Bailey Circus.

After his K-State stint, Sorensen will travel to Washington, D.C., to work on the opera version of "Hansel and Gretel."

Anyone not familiar with the duties of a cutter and draper might take this particular job for granted. A cutter and draper takes a look at what a designer creates, and begins patterning. Afterward, the material is cut and stitched on its path to becoming a garment.

Actors are measured, and a fitting is done using cheap material to save the more expensive material from harm. After more measuring, the cut-and-draped material is made into the overall shape of the costume.

It is only after a second fitting that zippers and buttons are placed and the costume finished. In all, 30 costumes were made completely from scratch, and around 80 will appear in the show.

In "Cabaret," the specialized costumes make the characters. The Kit Kat Girls, the show's scene-stealing singing-and-dancing troupe, are prominent figures in the play; however, one of the girls happens to be a man. With a little bit of makeup and a few interesting costuming ideas, audience members get to guess who is really the Kit Kat cross-dresser.

"Cabaret" will be performed at 8 p.m. Nov. 12-14 in McCain Auditorium. Tickets may be purchased at McCain Box Office from noon to 6 p.m. weekdays, or call 532-6428. $8 students/seniors $11 general public.

Court reviews level of day care provided to disabled students

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court debated Wednesday how much nursing care schools must provide to disabled students, a significant issue for special education. An Iowa school district's lawyer argued it should not have to pay for a quadriplegic boy's all-day care.

Such continuous care should be considered medical treatment that public school districts need not provide to disabled children, Susan L. Seitz contended for the Cedar Rapids Community School District.

"A nurse just for you? Certainly there can be a line drawn there to say that's medical" and the school shouldn't have to pay for it, she said.

Douglas R. Oelschlaeger, a lawyer for 16-year-old Garret Frey, said schools cannot avoid providing care simply by arguing it is too expensive.

"Not having enough nurses shouldn't be considered when you define what is or is not a medical service" that a school need not fund, Oelschlaeger argued.

Some justices expressed frustration with Seitz's contention that Garret's continuous care should not have to be school financed even if some of the health-care functions he needs might be handled by the school individually.

"That's a very hard line to draw," Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said. "I don't think it's going to work. Do you have a fallback position?"

Justice Antonin Scalia later told Seitz, "I hate multi-factor tests. Can you give us any other clearer line?"

Injured in a motorcycle accident at age 4, Garret is paralyzed from the neck down and depends on a ventilator to breathe.

His daily health-care needs include urinary catheterization, suctioning his tracheotomy, providing him food and drink, positioning him in his wheelchair, monitoring his blood pressure and the alarms on his ventilator.

Garret needs some of those services only once or twice a day, Oelschlaeger said, and for the rest of the time "all he needs is someone within earshot," not necessarily a nurse.

Through most of his schooling, Garret has been assisted by a licensed practical nurse, paid through an insurance policy and funds from the $1.3-million settlement with the motorcycle company involved in the accident.

In 1993, Garret's mother, Charlene Frey, asked the school district to pay for an attendant, saying it is required by the federal Individuals With Disabilities Education Act. An administrative law judge ordered the district to reimburse Frey for nursing costs accrued in the 1993-94 school year and to provide for his future care.

Seitz has said hiring a nurse would cost the district $30,000 to $40,000 a year.

The district now provides a teacher associate for Garret at a cost of $10,000 to $12,000 a year.

The Individuals With Disabilities Education Act provides that all children with disabilities are to receive a free appropriate public education. School districts must provide various special education and related services, but most forms of medical care are excluded.

A federal trial judge and the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled for Garret and against the school district. Because the care Garret needs is not provided by a doctor, it is not considered a medical service, the appeals court concluded.

The justices will decide, by July, whether Garret's care should be considered medical care or a school health service that must be funded by the school.

Seitz acknowledged that the Supreme Court ruled in 1984 that a public school had to pay for catheterization for a disabled child — one of the services Garret needs.

But she added that the difference with Garret "is that he needs continuous monitoring and assessment to make sure that he is not in respiratory distress."

Justice Department lawyer Beth S. Brinkmann argued in Garret's support that only a doctor's care should be considered medical care that a school shouldn't have to pay for.

Democrats gaining ground

■ Republicans talk about wrapping up Clinton proceedings.

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Blindsided by midterm election setbacks, House Republicans talked Wednesday of quickly wrapping up impeachment proceedings against President Clinton and raised the prospect of challenges to Speaker Newt Gingrich or other party leaders.

"Look, I'm the speaker, so I'll take responsibility," Gingrich said at a morning-after news conference at home in Georgia as the names of potential challengers began to circulate. "We should probably have aggressively pushed cutting taxes and saving Social Security much harder than we did this year."

At the same time, the Georgia Republican spoke dismissively of any challenge to his own leadership. "I think the people who normally are quoted in this are people who would in fact take the party to a narrower base with fewer members," he said.

House Democrats had a campaign-style pep rally at which they depicted Tuesday's returns as a step on the road to reclaiming a majority in two years.

"This is a repudiation of trying to run a campaign without issues and their obsession with impeachment," said Dick Gephardt, the House Democratic leader.

"They spent $110 million more than we did, and they still lost."

Gingrich sidestepped a question of whether the House should be called into special session to consider the impeachment issue or wait until the 106th Congress is sworn in next year.

But Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., the incoming chairman of the House Rules Committee, said the likelihood of completing action on the issue this year is "very very great, and I think the election has played a role in ensuring that. None of us has a desire to drag that out," he said in an interview on CNN.

Another Republican House member, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the election pushes the issue toward a resolution that Clinton can live with — such as some "censure-plus" punishment.

The House Judiciary Committee is scheduled to begin hearings later this month, and the panel's chairman, Illinois Rep. Henry Hyde, issued a statement saying, "Our duty has not changed because the Constitution has not changed." Public opinion polls, including one taken of voters on Election Day, showed widespread disapproval for congressional handling of the impeachment issue.

As for the election results, with one race yet to be settled, the likelihood was for Democratic gains of five seats in the House. That would leave the GOP with a paper-thin, six-seat majority and mark the first time since 1934 that the party holding the White House had picked up House seats in a midterm election.

Search for Iraqi weapons continues; council divided on military action

By EILEEN POWELL
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Each morning this week, a convoy of U.N. cars — with the required Iraqi escorts — has headed into the field carrying weapons experts.

It suggests a certain normality in the search for Iraq's weapons of mass destruction as mandated by U.N. Security Council resolutions that ended the 1991 Gulf War.

But U.N. officials said Wednesday this is trickier aimed at world opinion as the Security Council debates how to react to Iraq's decision Saturday to cut off links to the U.N. Special Commission charged with ferreting out dangerous weapons.

The council is divided, with the United States and Britain leaning more toward military action. On Wednesday, Defense Secretary William Cohen was talking up a military strike to Arab allies but — publicly at least — he was not getting backing.

In Baghdad and New York, U.N. officials said that although Iraq allows the convoys to go out, things have changed markedly for UNSCOM, the commission searching for Iraq's long-range missiles and chemical and biological weapons.

UNSCOM spokesman Ewen Buchanan in New York said he sees the convoys, which carry only a few of the commission people, as another attempt by the regime to deceive.

"By letting our technicians go out, they (the Iraqis) give the appearance that some sort of monitoring is still going on," he said.

The convoys that leave U.N. headquarters in Baghdad these days mainly are carrying monitors from the separate U.N. body overseeing elimination of nuclear weapons, the International Atomic Energy Agency.

It's sort of a pat on the back to the Vienna, Austria-headquartered IAEA, which is close to declaring Iraq free of nuclear weapons. That's in contrast to insistence by UNSCOM that Iraq is hiding other dangerous arms.

The decision went further, barring UNSCOM from going to previously identified weapons sites and cutting off the long-term monitoring that Butler finds crucial to preventing a new Iraqi arsenal.

Task force adopts draft plan that creates 2 new boards

By LEW FERGUSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Bill Graves' task force on governing higher education adopted as its draft plan Thursday a proposal to create a new coordinating council for all institutions and a new board to supervise community colleges and vocational-technical schools.

The plan, outlined by Rep. David Adkins to the Task Force on Higher Education Structure for Excellence, will have details added by a five-member committee of the task force and then will be debated by the full group at a meeting later this month.

It received mostly favorable initial reviews by task force members. Several said it incorporated many of the ideas advanced by all segments of the higher education community during hearings this fall.

"This is a workable project," said Ken Havner, a member of the state Kansas Board of Regents from Hays, Kan., who serves on the task force.

"I think this is a good plan," said Don Slawson of Wichita, a former regent.

Initial reaction was not all positive.

Bill Wagon, a member of the state Board of Education from Topeka, said he didn't understand the need to create another board, as the plan would do, to take over supervision of community colleges and vo-tech schools when the state board already does that.

Others noted the plan would create more educational bureaucracy by setting up the two new boards.

Lt. Gov. Gary Sherrer, the task force's co-chairman, said he believes the plan would require a constitutional amendment to implement, because it shifts regents and Board of Education functions to the new boards.

One new entity would be a higher education coordinating council. Among its responsibilities would be strategic planning, review and certification of budgets, resolving conflicts among institutions and approving affiliations and mergers for all the schools.

The other would be a board of post-secondary education, which would take over from the Board of Education's supervision of the state's 19 community colleges and 11 vo-tech schools for such things as strategic planning, accreditation standards, course and program approval and budget requests for state funding.

The community colleges' boards of trustees still would set their own budgets and retain authority to hire and fire their presidents.

The Board of Education would retain supervision of kindergarten through 12th grade public education, and the regents would continue to run the state's six universities. The regents, however, would have to funnel the universities' budgets through the coordinating council.

The regents also would provide oversight for state-funded programs at Washburn municipal university in Topeka, but Washburn would continue to be governed by its own board of regents.

What power the proposed coordinating council would have over budgets of the institutions remains to be decided as the task force puts detail to a plan it expects to submit to Graves early next month.

Instead of having the 19 members of the task force discuss and debate those details, Sherrer suggested a five-member committee be appointed to flesh out the plan.

Sherrer and co-chairman Gene Bicknell of Pittsburg, Kan., will serve on the committee. They said Adkins, chairman of a House committee that developed a plan last legislative session, also would be on it, and two other members will be named by next week.

Sherrer said he wants the committee to prepare a draft that the full task force can consider at its next meeting in three weeks.

Unveiling of the draft plan came after the task force learned that agreement among university and community-college presidents over creating a board and giving it broad powers to coordinate all of higher education in Kansas had collapsed.

Presidents Ed Hammond of Fort Hays State University and Laura Meeks of Fort Scott Community College told the task force that changes schools under the regents wanted in a proposal formerly agreed upon are unacceptable to the community colleges.

Tri-Delt member alleges hazing

A new member of Delta Delta Delta sorority said she was hazed during activities in the house this year, the chapter's alumnae adviser and a spokeswoman for the sorority's national office confirmed Thursday.

Renee Baker, Tri-Delt adviser, said the sorority's national office had been contacted to investigate, but the house hasn't received an official reply from the office yet.

"There was a hazing — well, there was a question or a concern brought up. Nationals was contacted, and they are looking into this," Baker said. "We're waiting to hear back from them in response to the questioning that was done."

Baker said a freshman Tri-Delt said

Student Governing Association allocated $227,173 in total funds for 22 different groups.

Students light candles in preparation to walk around campus Thursday night in the free-speech zone. For "Take Back the Night," men, women and children carried candles and circled campus, chanting as part of the Violence Against Womyn Awareness Week.

Lori Kieffer (left), senior in social work and women's studies, and Jennel Nicely, senior in family studies and human studies, lead a chant as part of "Take Back the Night" on Thursday night outside Seaton Hall. Kieffer and Nicely organized the week-long Violence Against Womyn Awareness Week.

"RAPE DOES HAPPEN HERE,
HERE AT THIS SCHOOL,
HERE IN THIS COMMUNITY.

IT HAPPENS EVERY DAY OF EVERY WEEK."

— MELISSA DIVINE, PROFESSOR OF WOMEN'S STUDIES

Women, men participate in march protesting violence against women

"However we dress, wherever we go, yes means yes and no means no."

These were the words chanted by the women, men and children gathered Thursday night in the K-State Student Union free-speech zone to rally, march and "Take Back the Night," as part of Violence Against Womyn Awareness Week.

The program began with the lighting of candles and the song "Independence Day," by Martina McBride, for inspiration.

The Clothesline Project was on display. It was K-State's first project of its kind, displaying clothes with words printed on them from actual victims in the Manhattan community, said Lori Kieffer, senior in social work and women's studies.

After the song, the participants marched down campus sidewalks and up Manhattan streets shouting the words, "Join together for our lives, we will not be victimized."

Those who fought the cold and attended the march said they came not only for themselves but for all women.

"I attended the march tonight to express the need for women to feel safe in their community," said Jennifer Kehler, sophomore in electronic journalism. "Not just for myself but for my mother, my sister, my friends and all of the women who have yet to come into this world."

Melissa Divine, instructor of women's studies, gave a speech after the march returned to the Union.

"Rape does happen here, here at this school, here in this community," she said. "It happens every day of every week."

Divine said in Manhattan and on the K-State campus, only two rapes were reported last year by the authorities, but more occurred.

"We know the numbers, and we made them known," she said. "One in three women will be raped and one woman is raped every two to three minutes."

Society blames women for carnage and victimization, she said. Women are taught to be afraid of parking lots and the boogie man. Women walk quietly and small and shrink into themselves. Women become passive and meek, turn to men for safety and are told to sit down and shut up, Divine said.

Because women spoke incorrectly, spoke to the wrong people or wore the wrong clothes, they become the victim, she said.

"When we are violated, we're to blame," Divine said.

Divine said what women are not told is that 80 percent of rapes occur in the home by someone who is known to the victim, "by the men we call friend or husband or date or uncle or Dad."

"Men we turn to may be violators," she said.

"Rape is not the price we pay for being female. We are told rape is natural. I don't believe it. I refuse to stop believing in the humanity of men — I believe in men."

She said it was time to stop playing crazy games with crazy rules.

"Take Back the Night" was created to give women a space where they can choose to live, not just exist, Divine said.

"If we hold onto this space and transplant it into our daily lives, we will truly begin to take back the night," she said.

After the speech, audience members were encouraged to speak out by volunteering at a crisis center or a women's clinic. They were encouraged to educate themselves and others about legislation and to vote for women. They also were encouraged to be safe by taking a self-defense class, walking confidently, drinking responsibly and using the Wildcat Walk escort program.

At the closing of the rally, the poem, "I Dream of a World Beyond Rape," was read, and the crowd was asked to sing along with the song, "Closer to Fine" by the Indigo Girls, which was printed in the program.

Floodwater damages topping $37 million

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan. — With the murky floodwaters receding, damage from this week's flooding in south-central Kansas is expected to top $37 million, the state Emergency Management Agency said Thursday.

More than 1,600 homes in Butler, Cowley and Sedgwick counties were damaged in the flood, caused by heavy rains that began last Friday and didn't let up in some areas until early this week.

About 805 homes were damaged in Butler County alone.

Gov. Bill Graves asked President Clinton on Thursday for a federal disaster declaration. Graves is asking the president for $12.6 million in individual assistance for Butler, Cowley and Sedgwick counties.

"The resources we can provide are very limited, so a presidential declaration will provide some of the financial assistance people need to finish the clean-up process and get their lives back on track," Graves said Thursday.

Authorities in Arkansas City were stunned Wednesday afternoon when a man presumed dead turned up two days after he jumped into the raging floodwaters of the Arkansas River.

Larry Dale Hotchkiss, 41, was seen walking about six blocks from the spot where witnesses said he went for a swim in the river on Monday. He had no visible injuries and was taken to Wichita for a mental evaluation.

There was one confirmed flood-related fatality in Kansas. Cynthia A. Thomison, 50, of Newton, Kan., was swept to her death when she drove her car onto a road that had been barricaded.

Graves has placed 14 counties on a state list of local disaster emergencies. In Cowley County, between 800 and 1,200 people are still displaced. The damage estimate of $37.8 million includes individual and public assistance, mitigation programs and housing.

After damage assessments are completed in Douglas, Lyon and Sumner counties, Graves said he also may request help for those areas from the federal government.

Chewing gum brings tears to Glenn's wife

SPACE CENTER, Houston — The night before he rocketed away last week, John Glenn gave his sweetheart a pack of chewing gum, a gesture that brought tears to her eyes and memories of 36 years ago when the dashing young astronaut called from the launch pad to say he was "just going down to the corner to get chewing gum."

During the past week, Annie Glenn has carried that pack of gum everywhere in a pocket over her heart. The whole family — grandsons included — will chew the pieces once the world's oldest space traveler returns to Earth on Saturday.

"That was the last thing he handed me. That was the last thing," Annie Glenn said Thursday, pulling out the gum. "It has memories of every time he would go overseas into combat, on his last launching a long time ago and then this. I didn't know he was going to give it to me, so it was a really, very touching moment."

Glenn's family said he looks happier than they have ever seen him and that he has the giddiness of a child, especially in the e-mails he has sent them from the space shuttle Discovery.

"He is really like a kid," Glenn, 78, said of her husband of 55 years. "He looks like a young man, you know what I mean? He looks great. He's not 77."

Annie Glenn was adamant when asked by reporters if there might be a third space flight in her husband's future. The only trip in his immediate future, she said, will entail "taking at least five days alone in our car as Mr. and Mrs. John Glenn."

"As far as I'm concerned," she said, "there are going to be no more other flights."

David Glenn said if his father even thinks about going back up, he plans to tell him: "'Forget it, Dad.' And less politely, probably."

Trucker turns himself in for killing 4 women

EUREKA, Calif. — A trucker walked into the sheriff's department carrying a severed breast and admitted his role in the slayings of four women, authorities said.

Wayne Adam Ford, 36, of Arcata, was to be arraigned Thursday on murder charges. He was jailed on $1 million bail.

Details on how the women were killed were not released.

One of the slayings dates to 1997, when the torso of a woman, whose age was estimated to be between 18 and 25, was found floating in a channel near Eureka, investigators said.

The breast was from another victim, who was killed recently and was a stranger to Ford, Sheriff Dennis Lewis said.

U.N. Security Council demands cooperation

UNITED NATIONS — The U.N. Security Council unanimously demanded Thursday that Iraq resume cooperation with U.N. weapons inspectors immediately. Baghdad already has announced it won't comply.

The Security Council made no explicit threats to use force if Iraq doesn't obey, but the United States and Britain said they already have authorization to take military action from previous council resolutions.

The resolution didn't include a timetable for lifting crippling economic sanctions, which Iraq has demanded as the price for reversing its decision to cut all dealings with the inspectors.

Council members reaffirmed their readiness for a comprehensive review of Iraq's compliance with U.N. resolutions, which could lead to the lifting of the oil embargo if U.N. inspectors declare Iraq has disarmed. This offer is contingent on Iraq resuming cooperation with weapons inspectors, however.

Iraq reacted angrily when the council sent a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan last Friday with the broad outlines of a review that didn't explicitly mention the possibility of easing or lifting sanctions.

Blaming Americans for cutting all references to ending sanctions, Baghdad on Saturday banned inspectors from monitoring previously searched facilities, leaving them with little to do.

Soil judging team advances to nationals

For the fifth consecutive year, K-State will send a team to the National Soils Judging Competition.

Each year, the top two teams placing at regional soils judging competitions are selected to compete at the national contest. This year, the seven-member K-State team placed first at its regional competition Oct. 1-2 in Brookings, S.D.

The team will travel to the University of Arizona in April to compete in the national competition.

The soils judging competition is a complex process, Skye Grillo, senior in agronomy, said.

"Basically, we evaluate the different properties of a soil profile," Grillo said. "We look for a variety of physical characteristics of the soil and also evaluate other factors such as water movement."

The competition consists of evaluating five sites, which have large trenches dug into the ground. The soil is evaluated based on color, structure, distinct layers and other factors. In addition, the rooting depth of plants and water movement through the soil is considered. The percent slope of the surface and the surface-water runoff also is considered.

Two of the five sites are judged individually by the team members. The other three are evaluated together by the team. Teamwork is a benefit of the competition, Grillo said.

"Each team member has their own specialty," she said. "We help each other out. It's definitely a team effort."

The competition provides a unique educational experience, said Michel Ransom, soils judging coach and agronomy professor.

Throughout the competition, students are exposed to soil types outside of Kansas and get to apply what they learn in the classroom, he said. Team members also get to interact with other college students throughout the nation.

"We really stress the educational benefits of the contest more than the competition itself," Ransom said. "The competition is great, but it is not the main reason we do it."

House asks Clinton to answer questions for impeachment inquiry

By LARRY MARGASAK
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde asked President Clinton on Thursday to answer 81 questions for the House impeachment inquiry including whether he made false and misleading statements under oath.

In a letter to Clinton, Hyde, R-Ill., said the questions should be answered under oath and the answers would be used only for the impeachment inquiry, not in other legal matters. It was unclear how the president would respond.

The detailed questions delve beyond the grand jury questioning of Clinton by Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's prosecutors on Aug. 17, which was limited to four hours by agreement with Clinton's lawyers.

Hyde's questions focused on allegations of perjury or obstruction of justice by the president. None sought details of his sexual encounters with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

At a news conference in Chicago, Hyde said the purpose of the questioning was to narrow the issues and bring this matter to a close more quickly.

"The president is free to dispute, of course, whatever he wants, but by agreeing to those facts that he does not dispute, he will allow us to narrow the issues and bring this matter to a close more quickly," said Hyde, who reiterated that he hoped to finish the inquiry by the end of the year.

Among the questions:
— "Do you admit or deny that you gave false and misleading testimony under oath in your deposition in the case of Jones vs. Clinton when you responded 'once or twice' to the question, 'Has Monica Lewinsky ever given you any gifts?'"
— "Do you admit or deny you had knowledge that any facts or assertions contained in the affidavit executed by Monica Lewinsky on Jan. 7, 1998, in the case of Jones vs. Clinton were not true?" That question refers to Lewinsky's affidavit for Paula Jones' sexual harassment case against Clinton. In the affidavit, Lewinsky falsely denied having a sexual relationship with the president.

Clinton also was asked about his public statements. One question asked about the truthfulness of his assertion in January that "I never told anybody to lie, not a single time, never."

White House press secretary Joe Lockhart said Clinton's lawyers were still looking over Hyde's letter and had no immediate comment.

The questions weave through the testimony of key figures in the impeachment investigation, including Lewinsky, presidential friend Vernon Jordan, oval office secretary Betty Currie and others. If Clinton denies the statements of other witnesses, Judiciary Committee investigators "will have to prove them and that will take time," said a Republican committee official, speaking on condition of anonymity. "We'll have to put on a case."

Hyde's questions ask Clinton about his assistance to Lewinsky in obtaining a job in New York as Jones' lawyers sought her testimony; his conversations with Currie after the Jones attorneys surprised him last January with questions about Lewinsky; and whether he lied to his closest staff members as well as the American public.

In an attempt to learn whether obstruction of justice occurred, Hyde asked Clinton whether he admitted to employing individuals to gather "information about witnesses or potential witnesses" in any court case.

Specifically, Clinton was asked whether he had knowledge that private investigator Terry Lenzner "was contacted or employed to make contact with or gather information about witnesses or potential witnesses" in any case involving Clinton.

The same question was asked using the names of another investigator, Jack Palladino, and a Clinton staff member when he was Arkansas governor, Betsy Wright.

Lenzner was hired by Clinton's attorneys in connection with the Jones case and also was used by the Democratic National Committee to investigate questionable campaign donations. Palladino was hired by Clinton's 1992 presidential campaign to investigate allegations about Clinton's relationships with other women.

The president also was asked whether he made a false and misleading public statement on Jan. 26 when he gave Americans his now-famous quote: "I did not have sexual relations with that woman, Ms. Lewinsky."

A number of questions concern the frantic days after Clinton was extensively questioned about his relationship with Lewinsky in a Jan. 17 deposition for Jones' suit.

The Clinton-Lewinsky story became public on Jan. 21.

Like a rapid-fire cross examination, Hyde's letter asked about a series of contacts between Clinton and people who ultimately wound up testifying before a grand jury about Clinton's actions:

— "Do you admit or deny that on Jan. 18, 1998, at or about 11:02 p.m., you telephoned Betty Currie at her home?"

— "Do you admit or deny that on Monday, Jan. 19, 1998, at or about 8:50 a.m., you telephoned Betty Currie at her home?"

— "Do you admit or deny that on Monday, Jan. 19, 1998, at or about 8:56 a.m., you telephoned Vernon Jordan at his home?"

Government to fund new program

■ Nutrition to be taught to low-income families.

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The U.S. Department of Agriculture has given $1.3 million to K-State researchers to develop a program that teaches nutritional skills to low-income families.

The Family Nutrition Program is a research-based program that focuses on educating people who are eligible to receive government food stamps. It is part of the Food Stamp Nutrition Education Program, a national program sponsored by the USDA.

"K-State Research and Extension was contracted by the Kansas Department of Social Rehabilitation Services to develop and deliver the nutritional education needed to meet the requirements of the program," said Karen Hudson, coordinator of FNP.

Hudson said the mission of the national program is "to promote the general welfare and safeguard the health and well-being of the U.S. population by increasing the level of nutrition among people of limited resources."

Paula Peters, associate professor for the Department of Foods and Nutrition and director of FNP, said the mission statement could be broken down into two basic goals.

"First, we want to help those eligible for food stamps to learn how to spend their food money wisely — basically, to teach them to buy healthy foods," Peters said.

"Secondly, we want to teach them how to stretch their food dollars so they can buy the maximum amount of food possible."

Hudson said the program has been a success in the four years since it was initiated.

"Surveys have shown increased awareness of nutrition and changes in both food purchase and consumption as a result of our program," Hudson said. "Nearly 60,000 participants said they planned to or have changed the way they eat to improve the nutritional adequacy of their diet."

Peters said FNP is gaining popularity across the state.

"Fifty-five counties in Kansas are supporting the Family Nutrition Program this year, a dramatic increase from the 20 counties with the program last year," Peters said.

"In 1997, those 20 counties facilitated over 67,000 participants. We expect these numbers to more than double this year."

The USDA only has two requirements counties must meet before receiving government funds: There must be a coordinator for the program, and the county must secure the money for the USDA to match.

Funding can be provided by the county, state or individual contributors. State and local government, hospitals, churches and food pantries are examples of organizations that endorse FNP in Kansas.

Peters said because the program is only four years old, researchers cannot tell the long-term effects of FNP. She said they view it as a success, but researchers will continue to gather data to support the program.

Manhattan art market thriving as local art galleries see an increase in interest

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since last month's show of Jim Hagan's watercolors closed at the Manhattan Arts Center this week, almost all of the artist's work offered for sale has been sold.

A show of paintings by artists who were displaying their works in Manhattan for the first time garnered respectable sales at Strecker Gallery. Add in a few sales at Aggieville coffee shops and Manhattan might be experiencing what could be called a heated art market.

"I think the Beach Museum has made the town wake up a little bit," said Carole Chelz, art director at the arts center.

Chelz said she also credits last year's art auction at the Columbian Theatre and Gallery, which was organized as a fund-raiser for the Department of Art, as aiding a renewed interest in collecting.

"That was a nice kickoff," she said.

"We're seeing new faces in town. There's a sense of vitality in the air."

At Strecker, new artists are finding an audience with out-of-town collectors and younger people just starting to develop an interest in purchasing art.

Julie Strecker, Manhattan's single gallery owner for more than 20 years, said she's seen an increase in interest, but not necessarily in sales, over previous years.

"I think the art market is quite alive and doing well," Strecker said.

She said younger people tend to buy more three-dimensional art than the older collectors who tend to lean toward paintings by artists they've collected for a number of years.

However, she said she enjoys showing new artists like her last show of Kathleen King, Elisa Stalker Coats, and Beth Neuer — all new to the Manhattan scene. Each of those artists sold a few pieces.

A show that opens tonight features four artists, none who have shown at Strecker before.

"In a lot of ways, we are a transient community," Strecker said. "We sell a lot to people who have just moved here or are passing through."

But there remain a few local artists, such as Jim Muncie and Yoshiro Ikeda (whose wife, Ester, shows tonight at Strecker), who have a built-in audience of collectors who will turn out to see their new work.

Chelz said many of Hagan's buyers were older collectors who already own work by the artist. Hagan, who is a local artist with a loyal following, paints prairie landscapes from places in and around Manhattan. One series of paintings focuses on prairie fires.

Chelz said his collectors "reminded about the prairie and the Flint Hills — that really evoked a sense of space and place for most people."

With two new gallery shows opening tonight and a reception at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, the art season is perhaps at a peak.

As Strecker said tonight, "It could almost become a real city gallery walk."

Safety, responsibility best defense at night

Thursday night a group of men and women chose to "Take Back the Night," an activity in which participants walk together across campus in defiance of rape and other crimes against women.

The program is more than just a stroll around campus. "Take Back the Night" is designed to bring people together not only to give participants a sense of solidarity and common cause but also to provide them with an opportunity to share stories about the times they were victims. "Take Back the Night" is for support, and it takes the night back by giving participants the solace they need to move on and move forward.

We need to examine some of the reasons the night was stolen in the first place.

According to the U.S. Department of Justice, each year before 1995, women were the victims of more than 4.5 million violent crime including approximately 500,000 rapes or other sexual assaults. In 29 percent of the violent crimes against women by lone offenders, the perpetrators were those intimately related to the victim — husbands, former husbands, boyfriends or former boyfriends.

Many people would argue that the numbers of women who are the victims of sex crimes and domestic violence are actually much higher than the above statistics would indicate. Not enough women report sexual abuse or domestic violence when it happens to them. It is estimated that as many as one in three women who make trips to the emergency room are victims of domestic violence. Many don't report it.

We live in a campus that has been classified as the safest in the Big 12 Conference, but with the indication that millions of women are victims of some sort of violence or sexual abuse every year, we have a responsibility to make certain that we take necessary precautions to keep each other safe.

People who participate in "Take Back the Night" are men and women who are already aware of campus safety issues and are trying to do something about it. Our task is to become as concerned and as aware as we should be about campus safety. People need to take the initiative and become concerned for their personal safety. Avoid walking around campus by yourself late at night. Drink in moderation, and be careful when you do so. Be aware of your surroundings.

This does not only apply to women.

There is a service on campus that the students created called the Wildcat Walk Escort Program. It was designed as a mechanism to help get students who are studying late home safely. Although services were once limited, Wildcat Walkers now will go off-campus to get their patrons home. That means members of sororities and apartment-dwellers don't need to take risks any longer.

If we are careful, the night won't slip away.

READERS WRITE

Reader believes recent cartoon degrading to American Indians

Editor,

During the second day of our first American Indian Awareness Week at Kansas State University, I was appalled to find a cartoon picture in the Collegian of an American Indian, scantily clad, with an arrow pointing toward himself and not the obvious target in front of him. Not only was this cartoon degrading to anyone of American Indian descent, as it implied that natives to this land could not hunt a rabbit if it were directly in front of him, but it simply was not funny. The space used to print this cartoon could have been better used to publish the events associated with American Indian Awareness Week.

Again, the Collegian has shown blatant disregard to the rich cultural heritage brought to K-State by multicultural students on campus. How is it that a cartoon as damaging as the one published could squeak by the editor? The whole point of cultural programming is to promote awareness and sensitivity. How can we successfully achieve this when the very vehicle we would like to use as a catalyst for change (the news media) is still perpetuating damaging stereotypes that make people of color look like ignorant buffoons?

While you may dismiss my response as another complaint by an overly sensitive person of color, know that I am not alone in my sentiments. The cartoon was in very poor taste, and if this is the type of coverage you prefer to give our multicultural students at K-State, I would ask you to revert to the days where there was none at all.

TAKE THE TIME TO LISTEN AND COMPREHEND

If you don't, society could be disrupted and people will just start swinging

VIEWPOINT

Tom PACEY

Being a fan of both Kevin Spacey and Brad Pitt, I recently could not pass up the opportunity to re-watch "Seven." One thing lead to another, and then I started thinking.

I usually don't do that while watching those big-budget flicks.

John Doe (Spacey), the intellectual murderer, while riding in police custody, told Detective Mills (Pitt) that, "Wanting people to listen, you can't just tap them on the shoulder anymore. You have to hit them with a sledgehammer so you'll see you have their strict attention."

I'm not saying I am a genius, so never mind that sledgehammer in my back pocket.

This statement was at the crux of the Unabomber's Manifesto. Ted Kaczynski wanted people to listen, and he felt he had to resort to terroristic acts in order to get their attention. After 23 years of unannounced terrorist attacks, his sadistic dream finally came true, and people listened.

While I believe this statement to be true, it is never a defense for certain actions.

We generally hear of terrorist acts happening around the world, but recently, they have been occurring on America soil. There are all these people with sledgehammers just waiting to start swinging them when people ignore them.

And you thought handgun legislation was difficult?

Society would be the easiest thing to blame for such tragedies next to insanity, which is used to get a lesser sentence.

However, the Massachusetts Supreme Court last week decided it is illegal to place the organization responsible for the actions of its anonymous members.

The government doesn't get this protection. I am not defending the actions of Kaczynski or Timothy McVeigh in any way. I will not. Their motives may have been noble, at least in Kaczynski's case, but they both crossed the line between words and actions.

There are many, however, who are willing to talk, waiting on the talking side of the line.

Certain events have caused people to rally: Matthew Shepard, Leonard Peltier, Mumia Abu-Jamal, Ruby Ridge, Waco, Tupac Shakur, Notorious B.I.G., John F. Kennedy ... what else do I have to say?

Thank you, Piano Man Billy Joel.

Vengeance is a strong motive in some, but what people really are looking for is justice. When their pleas are ignored, they become vigilantes. Then, enter the Napoleonic complex, thinking they can get away with it.

I've seen it hundreds of times.

We must remember to remain open-minded and to always leave communications open so their ideas of justice do not turn to vengeance. This can be difficult to accomplish in a society so caught up in the moment.

This is what the technological revolution has done to us.

Everybody is talking, but no one is listening. Instead of being the Brad Pitt asking if these people wonder how messed up they really are, be the Morgan Freeman and listen to what people are trying to tell you.

We may not be as crazy as you think.

Actions may speak louder than words, but they generally are never fully understood. Listen to people, and you might help them. Think before you act, and you might save yourself from doing something you will regret in retrospect.

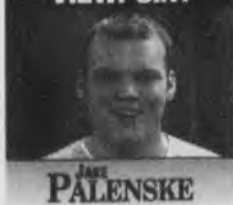

It is entirely up to you, according to the book of Jeppers Creepers from "Mr. Show."

These have just been the ramblings of someone tired of seeing and being hit by swinging sledgehammers.

The Sunflower Showdown. Students from the University of Kansas and K-State clash on the football field, over e-mail, in the bars in Lawrence and everywhere else you can think of.

But it's all in good fun, right?

While I was in Lawrence this weekend, I learned there are some people who take our little rivalry way too far.

It wasn't the fact that people flashed their lights at me and made the typical K-State jokes every time they saw the purple license plate on the front of my car. It wasn't the fact that as I was shooting a video of the crowd at the game, I realized I was going to have to edit out some creative hand gestures and language directed at myself and my purple coat. It wasn't even the fact that I actually worried about my personal safety while walking through the KU student section.

That was all fun and games.

But one particular incident really disturbed me.

As I was walking to the stadium, a family of Wildcat supporters were walking in front of me, completely covered in purple. The family consisted of a man, a woman and three young children. The kids were probably ranging in age from five to eight years, and you could tell they were excited to have the opportunity to cheer on the Cats.

While I was watching this family walk hand-in-hand toward a crosswalk, a black car with KU paraphernalia plastered all over it pulled up to the intersection. The occupants obviously were KU students on the way to the game.

The car stopped right in front of the K-State family, blocking the crosswalk in the process. The windows of the car rolled down and no less than four of the occupants flipped off the family. The rest of the passengers in the car were shouting expletives at the K-State fans, much to the dismay of the parents.

This behavior makes me question why so many KU people think they attend the best academic school in Kansas. At least six of their students obviously have the collective IQ of a German shepherd, and I am sure this was not an isolated occurrence.

Seeing this incident makes me wonder if fans from other schools who visit our stadium have been treated this way. Will Nebraska fans who travel to Manhattan to cheer on their team have to worry about their cars getting keyed or their children getting sworn at? How many Texas fans were verbally assaulted as they walked to Wagner Field? Should Missouri fans avoid Aggieville for fear of physical harm?

I would hope that fans of competing teams would be welcomed in Manhattan. Without those fans and their team, K-State wouldn't be the football powerhouse it has become in the past few years.

When a group of Nebraska fans walks by, wish them good luck. If you see a car with a big Cornhuskers sticker in the window, leave it alone.

The image of the entire university could be riding on your actions.

Besides, if they have been to a KU game recently, they probably received all the abuse they could handle.

the EOF committee to determine which groups received money for fiscal year 2000. He said the regents' guidelines were too broad, and the committee needed to specify them.

The criteria included continuing to fund existing programs, funding programs with predictable outcomes and maximizing the return students get from the allocations.

"We wanted to fund groups who have definite predictable outcomes and who directly affect the student body," Macklin said.

The Academic Assistance Center and the KSU Child Development Center account for a large share of the allocations. The money funds AAC's tutoring program and childships, or discounted child care, for non-traditional students.

Three amendments were proposed to the bill during the debate.

One amendment that failed would have taken $7,000 from the development center allocation to fund a peer-violence awareness program at the Women's Center.

Arts and sciences senator Dustin Petrik said that a Collegian article detailing an assault on a victim who wouldn't file a report and a march and rally for women's awareness encouraged him to write the amendment. The original bill didn't include any money for the proposed program.

"Campus safety affects everyone on this campus, including non-traditional and minority students," Petrik said.

Macklin said he disagreed and said the Women's Center proposal didn't meet one of EOF's requirements — that the money be used to fund programs for students on campus who are under-represented.

"Statistically, K-State is the safest campus in the Big 12," he said.

Student Body President Tracey Mann said non-traditional students are extremely under-represented at K-State compared to women.

He also advised SGA to look at the guidelines set forth by the EOF committee to see what group met the specified criteria.

"I could sleep better knowing we didn't fund the Women's Center than cutting something that benefits many others," Mann said.

Arts and sciences senator Joey Bahr said while it was a tough decision to support the amendment, there was an obvious issue which was overlooked.

"For every one rape reported, there goes four rapes unreported," Bahr said. "This definitely affects the entire student body."

The amendment failed on a vote of 7-38-2.

Two other amendments proposed cutbacks in other areas to support funding for the Women's Center and international programs at K-State. Both failed. Angela Allison, director of the development center, said she was content with the outcome of the bill. The current bill placed funding for the center at $65,000, more than any other group. One hundred student families receive support through center funds; with the EOF bill, that support will continue through fiscal year 2000.

"We are grateful for the families," Allison said.

"This money goes directly to the families, not to the center, and helps reduce their tuition bill."

Cole was awarded for his season Wednesday after the results of the Big 12 coaches' votes were released. Coaches vote on coach of the year and freshman of the year after the conference championship. Cole said he was pleased to receive the award and gives credit to his coaching staff and athletes.

Cole said when he learned of his victory, several things went through his mind.

"I thought, one, of the support and partnership I have with Mike Smith," he said. "I think it's a staff award, because he's been my assistant, but he's been right there with us all the time, so it's an honor for him, too."

"Also, I thought it's just the recognition of the team doing well. I've always thought that if the team does well, the coaches do well," he said. "I've tried to bring about some growth and success for our athletes. If they can improve and succeed, then I can improve and succeed."

Cole coached at Barton County Community College for 12 years before coming to K-State two years ago. He said his switch from junior college coaching to coaching in Division I and the Big 12 has been an exciting and great opportunity.

He said as a coach, one must learn not only to coach but to also teach the athletes.

"My philosophy is try to help people learn the process of getting better, reminding them how to get better, and when it's time to roll, let them get out there and go," Cole said.

Cole's history and awards speak for his coaching abilities. According to Cole's runners, there are several things that make a good coach, such as the ability to make practice enjoyable as well as the ability to push the athletes.

"He's really serious about wanting us to work hard, but at the same time, he wants us to have fun with it," runner Amanda Crouse said.

"He makes it fun to go to practice even though we're working real hard the whole time."

The championship this year was K-State's first since 1992. Cole said the program has been successful due to attention to details and the talent of his athletes.

"If you try to go from point A to point Z without going through B, C, D and everything between, you're not going to have the same success," he said.

HAZING

she was hazed after taking part in one of the house's traditional activities.

"There was an incident that was obviously interpreted as hazing and has been dealt with and obviously will not happen again in any form," Baker said.

"Basically, certain things that have been tradition for a long time obviously were handled differently and misinterpreted."

Katherine Helms, chapter services coordinator for the group's national office, said the office had yet to send anyone to Manhattan to investigate the incident.

"We've got to be really careful about talking to the press, you know," Helms said. "We haven't had anyone from this office go up there and investigate, but yes, we have heard of some problems at Kansas State."

Helms would not comment further, and the associate director of chapter support, who Helms said is in charge of the case, did not return phone calls.

Tri-Delt president Lori West was out of town — along with many of the house's other officers — and could not be reached at press time.

Greek Affairs adviser Barb Robel also could not be reached.

Baker said officials are investigating the incident to see how it was interpreted by different members of the house. She said, though, that hazing has no place in the sorority.

"We obviously are very concerned about each and every member, no matter how long they have been a member, and want to make sure that they understand that hazing is not part of Tri Delta in any way, shape or form," Baker said.

Baker would not offer specific details about the incident.

"I'm not going to say anything specific right now, because nothing specific has been attached to anything," she said.

8-0 Cats travel to Waco, Texas for Baylor homecoming

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On most occasions, a homecoming opponent is scheduled based on the school's belief that a win will be easier to achieve. This, in turn, adds to the weekend celebration.

In Baylor's case, the Bears might have overlooked this common principle when they scheduled No. 2 K-State.

The 8-0 Cats, 5-0 in the Big 12 Conference, put perfection on the line Saturday when they return to Waco, Texas, for the first time since 1969 to battle with Baylor (2-6, 1-4) in the school's homecoming game. Kickoff is set for 1:05 p.m.

The Cats solidified their No. 1 position nationally in scoring defense and scoring offense with a rain-soaked 54-6 victory over in-state rival Kansas last Saturday. The Mob held KU to 44 yards of total offense while quarterback Michael Bishop added 225 passing yards and 95 yards on the ground for two touchdowns, a performance good enough to earn the Big 12's offensive player of the week.

Baylor was on the receiving end of a blowout last weekend after a 27-3 defeat by Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind. The loss was the third consecutive for the Bears in a four-game stretch that head coach Dave Roberts is referring to as "Bloody October." Baylor has played Texas A&M, Texas, Notre Dame and now K-State on consecutive weekends.

Regardless of their current woes, K-State coach Bill Snyder said the Bears' losses have been decidedly close, for the most part.

"You go back and look and you see a field-goal loss to Texas Tech and Colorado, by two-point margins in both those ball games," Snyder said.

"They played, obviously, a very good Texas team, and that's a ten-point ballgame."

"I think they're there. Some days, it falls in the right direction, some days, it doesn't," he said.

Snyder pointed to Baylor's victory against North Carolina State on Sept. 19 as an example of things falling into place.

One week after N.C. State's upset of Florida State, the Bears built a 26-0 lead on the Wolfpack before triumphing 33-30.

"I thought they were extremely well prepared," Snyder said. "I thought the emotion that they played with was at a very high level of intensity."

The Bears probably will need a similar approach to preparation if they plan on prolonging homecoming celebrations Saturday afternoon. The Cats bring the nation's top defense to town to face a Baylor offense that ranks 12th in the conference, averaging 283 yards per game. One of the bright spots for the Bears has been the play of versatile fullback Derek Lagway, a player Snyder said can flat-out play.

Although Snyder said the team probably will be without the services of line-backer Travis Ochs and cornerback Gerald Neasman again, the Cats proved their depth against KU with solid performances by Travis Litton and Jerametrius Butler.

On the offensive side, K-State appears to be clicking on all cylinders. The Cats rung up six touchdowns and four field goals in Lawrence, keeping punter James Garcia's talents on hold for the weekend.

While many would expect the offensive domination to continue in Waco, wide receiver Darnell McDonald said the team expects a serious challenge from the Baylor defense.

"They have a guy who has three interceptions already, so it's going to be my hardest task of the season," McDonald said.

Being scheduled as a homecoming guest in the past wouldn't come as much of a shock to K-State, but given the current position of the football team, inviting the No. 2 team in the nation to town for the celebration was a shock to some of the Cats.

"We find that kind of interesting," right guard Jeremy Martin said. "I hope they have a good homecoming, either way."

DOMINATING DEBUT

Women's team cruises to exhibition victory, 75-37

K-State forward Brandy Harris brings the ball down the court on Thursday's game with Svaja-Edroma Lithuania.

By FRANK FLATON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brandy Harris and the K-State Wildcats invaded Svaja-Edroma Lithuania's zone defense en route to a 75-37 shellacking to open the 1998-99 basketball season at Bramlage Coliseum Thursday in exhibition play.

From the opening tipoff, K-State controlled the game both defensively and offensively. The Wildcats forced 27 turnovers and grabbed 18 steals, allowing the Lithuanian's to shoot only 33 percent from the floor.

"I think we did so well tonight," Harris, sophomore shooting guard, said. "In practice, all we've been talking about is defense and rebounding. We went out there and did those things."

With 16 minutes to go in the first half, K-State sped to a 14-5 lead as the 5-foot-11-inch Harris and 6-foot-1-inch junior forward Nicky Ramage compiled all seven of the Wildcat's opening baskets.

Lithuania took the lead with just more than four minutes to go in the first half, but the Cats fought back, scoring 10 unanswered points to end the half leading 28-19. After the half, the Cats didn't look back, going on a 34-19 tear in the first five minutes.

"I was pleased with the second half and about six minutes of the first," Coach Deb Patterson said. "I thought we maintained an aggressive posture through the second half. We started to get a feel for the passing lanes and some gaps in the defense."

Shifting from forward to guard in her sophomore season, Harris caught fire in the season opener, scoring 17 points, pulling down 7 rebounds and shooting 8 of 14 from the field. Also contributing for the Cats was 5-foot-11-inch senior guard and forward Jenny Coalson, who poured in 14 points including two three-pointers.

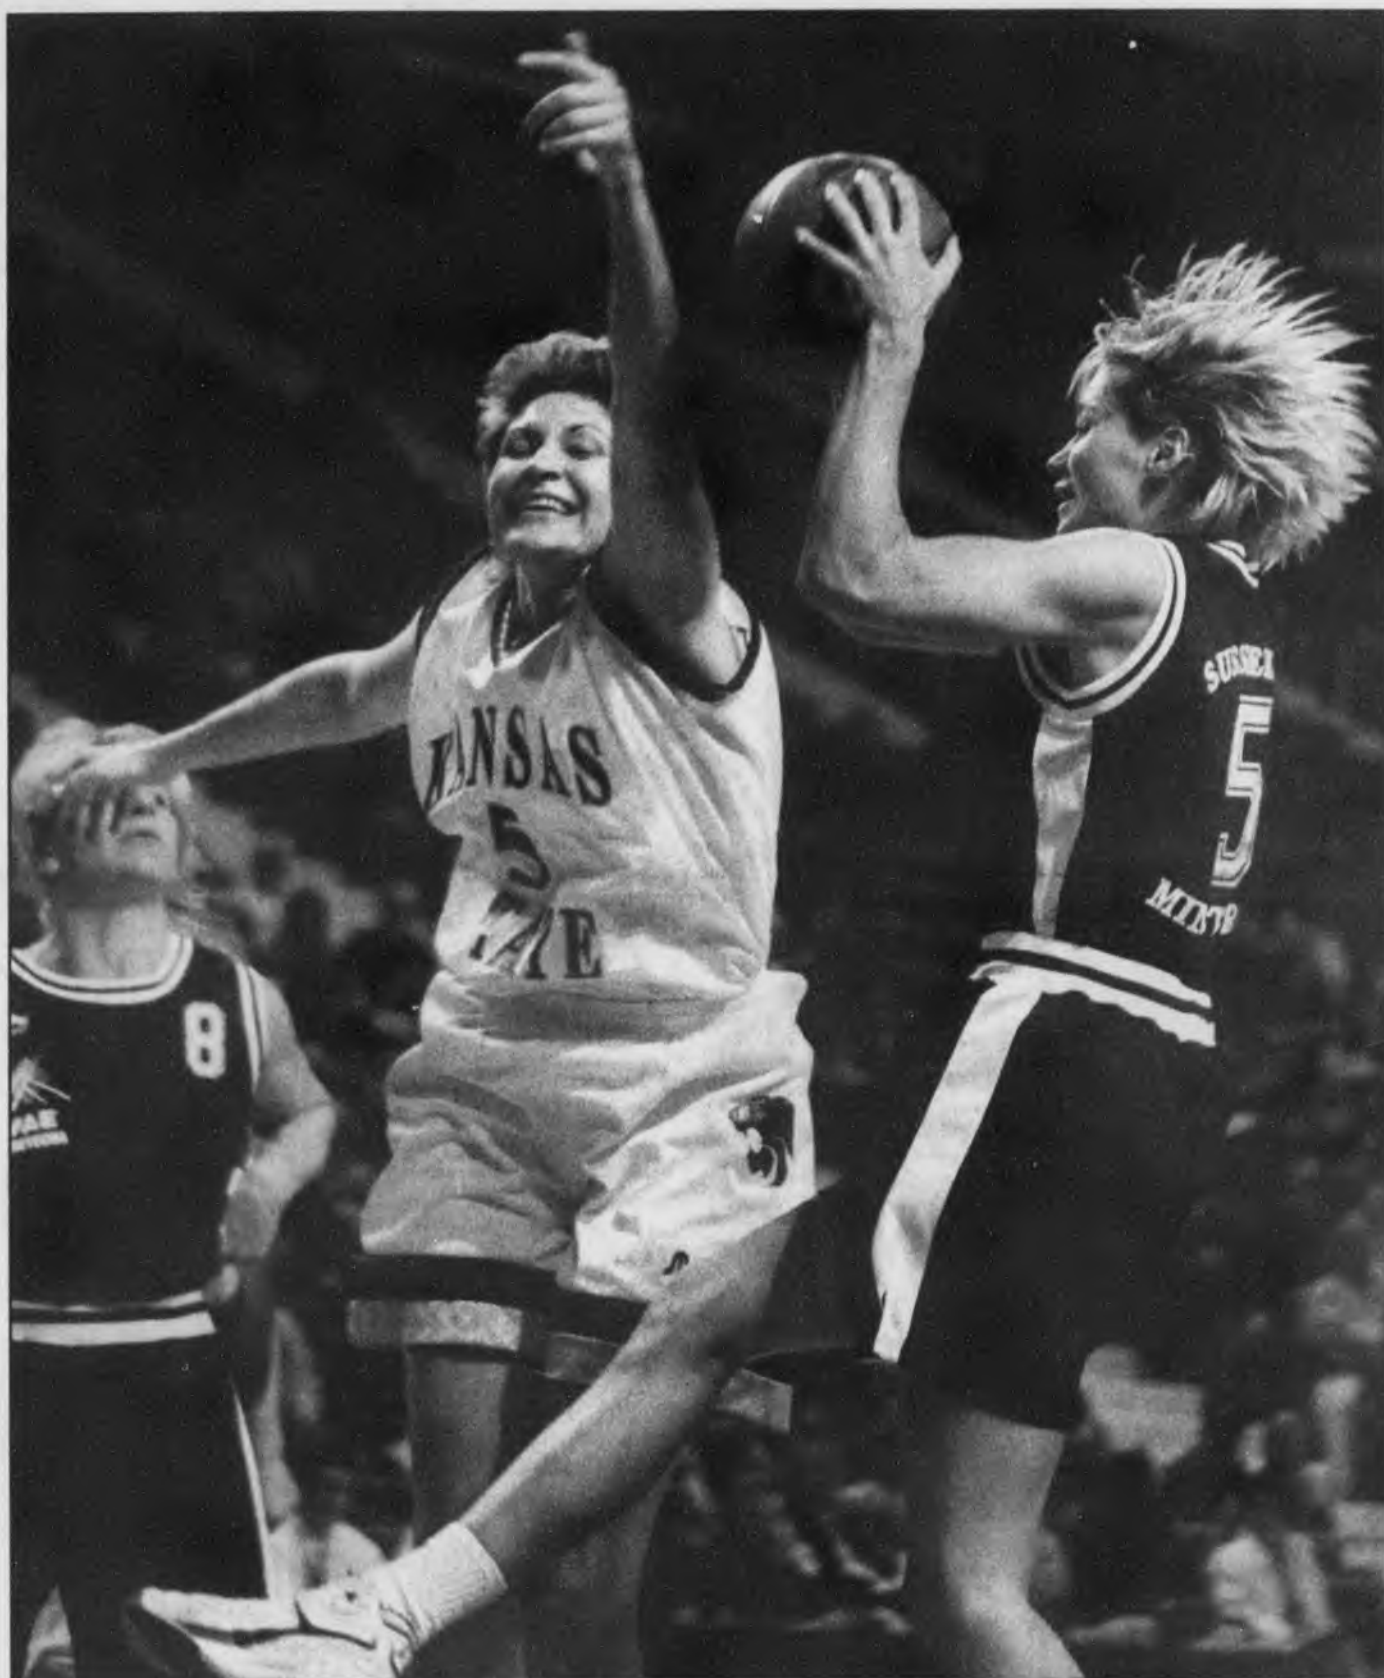

"It was nice to see Brandy Harris come out and be aggressive," Patterson said. "In a game against a zone, it's tough. That type of zone keeps you standing still and tries to keep you thinking. She stayed real aggressive, and I thought was a catalyst for our team."

Two Wildcat newcomers started their K-State careers with a bang. Six-foot-six-inch junior center Olga Firsova, a transfer from Weatherford (Texas) Junior College, took down 7 boards and shot 4 of 7 from the floor. Five-foot-six-inch freshman point guard Essence Perry scored 9 points while grabbing six steals.

Patterson said she was pleased with the overall performance, but the team still could improve.

"We thought we'd come in and just do what we could with what we had," she said. "But 75 points was a good effort, and I'm pleased with it, although I see a lot of room for improvement on both ends of the floor."

K-State will take on the BB Travelers next at 6 p.m. on Nov. 13 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Loss of Ayome May will force Josh Reid, others to step up offensively, defensively

For the last two years, off-court adversity has surrounded Tom Asbury and the K-State men's basketball team. Unfortunately, the Wildcats were struck with their first taste of it this season when Ayome "Paco" May announced he would not return this year after suffering intestinal problems earlier this week.

Though May's announcement was a shock to every fan in the area, it wasn't a total surprise to his teammates and coaches. May battled stamina problems through last season, and his teammates knew something was wrong when practice opened this season, and he couldn't complete a session without vomiting.

Nonetheless, May's absence this season will be a huge blow, especially while the team jumbles its lineup to fill the void.

The discrete things May brought to the lineup, such as the experience of being a fifth-year senior and knowing K-State's offense as well as anyone ever could, surely will be missed. But the not-so-discrete things, such as his defensive skills, which were probably the best on the team and his mid-range jump shot, where he could spring straight up in the air through traffic and nail a high arching shot over anyone, and his presence on the boards are what has to make Asbury a little uneasy with May's departure.

Though May's 1997-98 season didn't pack as much luster as he would have liked — he only averaged 7.6 points a game — he was able to deliver when K-State needed him most. Remember that game at Wichita State that K-State nearly lost last year?

It was May who hit his patented 10-foot jumper with seven seconds left in regulation to send the game into overtime and eventually a K-State win.

May put up his best numbers as a freshman, however, when he started 26 of 29 games for the Wildcats. He had the top field-goal percentage among regular freshmen in the Big 8 Conference that year, shooting .467 from the floor. He also joined an elite group of Wildcats such as Askia Jones and Norris Coleman ranking high on the K-State all-time list for points scored and shooting percentage by a freshman.

K-State had hoped May would return to his freshman offensive form this season to boost the Wildcats, who are known annually for shooting terribly. Now someone else will have to step up.

These off-court misfortunes are beginning to become commonplace for Asbury, who has had to deal with Manny Dies' and Duane Davis' problems over the past two seasons. Maybe these types of things are becoming so common that it doesn't even affect K-State anymore. The Wildcats are hoping May's absence will push K-State's younger players into improving at a faster rate.

"It always seems like we have to deal with things like this, but I think that builds a lot of character for teams," Wildcat men's guard Josh Reid said.

"Hopefully this time, it's happened early enough in the season that we'll be able to adjust and get people ready to play some other positions."

Hopefully Reid is right, and hopefully K-State won't have to deal with any more off-court problems this season.

Volleyball team to play Huskers, Buffs

By BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not many teams have a better tradition in college volleyball than the University of Nebraska. The Cornhuskers are ranked third in the nation at 21-0.

K-State will travel to Lincoln, Neb., on Friday night in hopes of breaking that perfect record.

A top-10 fixture in most years, Nebraska reached the pinnacle of college volleyball in 1995 with a national championship, a feat that Wildcat head coach Jim McLaughlin said reflects its focus.

"They've won a national title, and that's not magic," McLaughlin said.

"They've been good for many, many years. They're well coached, and they've got depth, but we're pretty positive about the thing. It's a great opportunity for us."

History stands on the side of Nebraska. K-State has never beaten the Huskers in 57 tries.

This year's version of Nebraska is being called perhaps the best Cornhusker team of all time.

The Huskers are led by an offense which leads the Big 12 Conference with a .304 team-attack percentage. Nebraska also leads the league in blocks at 3.85 per game.

Middle blocker Megan Korver is making a bid for Big 12 Player of the Year, leading the conference with a .398 attack percentage. She is second in blocks at 1.70 per game.

"They're big, and they're strong, and they're fast," McLaughlin said, "but no one is unbeatable. We feel that if we play well and get on the right tendencies, we can beat them."

The Cats will turn around and play the University of Colorado on Saturday night in Boulder.

The Buffaloes are second in the league with an 11-1 conference mark, their only loss being to Texas in five games. CU is currently ranked 13th in the nation with a 17-2 overall mark.

Colorado ranks first in the Big 12 in kills with more than 18 per game.

The Buffs are second in attack percentage at .268 and tied for first in assists with nearly 17 per game.

Kristin Dorsch leads Colorado with 217 kills and a .377 attack percentage. Sarah Lodge averages 3.59 kills per game for the Buffs.

McLaughlin said the 21st-ranked Cats won't be intimidated heading into the weekend.

"We feel like we can match up with anybody, because we can do a lot of things pretty well," he said.

K-State currently stands fourth in the Big 12 with an 8-4 conference mark after a win against Kansas and a loss to Oklahoma last weekend.

"We're making good progress," McLaughlin said.

"We can't worry about the past or the future. The match will take care of itself."

Tonight's match against Nebraska starts at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday night's contest versus Colorado begins at 7 p.m.

Keynote speaker emphasizes importance of respecting American Indian values

By LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jerry Shaw read stories about Dick and Jane while in grade school.

He wondered why they didn't look like his mother, a full-blooded Osage Indian, but soon realized he had a different background than his fellow students.

Shaw, a K-State graduate and instructor of minority studies at Wichita State University, was the keynote speaker Thursday for American Indian Awareness Week. In his speech, he said it is important to accept people from different backgrounds and to understand each other. This involves two-way communication, he said.

Linda Williams, treasurer of Native American Student Body, said she agreed with Shaw's idea of two-way communication. "I think it's important that people find within themselves what they're about and be aware of that and then be aware of the people around them," she said.

Shaw described the culture of American Indians and said spirituality is a large part of their culture. Part of this spirituality is seeing God through the music of the drum, he said.

"We don't worship it. We pay homage to it," he said. "Sometimes it's hard for people to understand that."

Shaw also said there is power in what American Indians do and believe.

Shaw said he thought people can't understand this power without experiencing it. The feeling is similar to walking into churches of Christians, he said.

"You have to be part of it to relate," he said.

Shaw said American Indian spirituality continually is challenged, and the only way to face these issues is to go to the U.S. Congress. He said this does not always achieve the desired result, however.

Rainbow Bridge in Arizona is a special spiritual place to the Navajo people, which Shaw said recently has been chosen for the construction of a recreational area. The Navajo use the area to listen to spirits. Shaw said it has become a conflict of chasing spirits away or taking economy from an area.

Shaw also said American Indians have differing opinions with the government, because the medicine used by the Native American Church has been considered a hallucinogenic agent by some states.

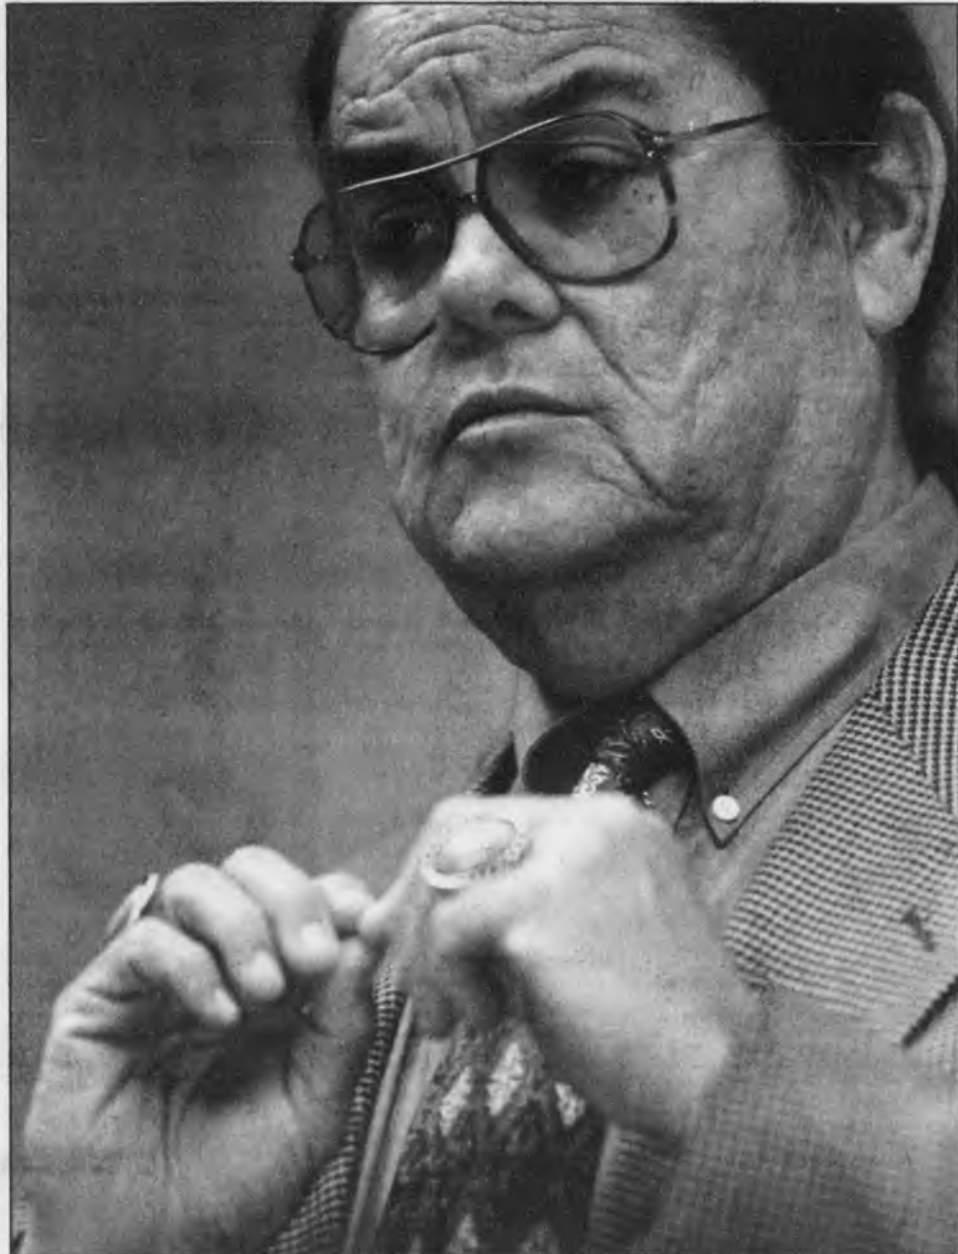

He said he thought people are beginning to search the American Indian spiritualism. People who work in other spiritual places and take money are stealing from the spirituality of the experience, however.

Shaw said a lack of respect for the spiritual side of the American Indian culture includes the mascots of sports teams. He said the Kansas City Chiefs' mascot is one example; the painted faces and use of feathers comes back to their spirituality, he said.

The paint is put on American Indians for a reason, which comes from God, Shaw said. The feathers represent the eagle, which God sent in front of the American Indians when they came to earth, he said.

"It is making a mockery of something that is very special to us," he said.

Shaw said he thought teachers shouldn't allow students to wear feathers in their hair for Thanksgiving. Instead, they could make paper vests with fringes and allow the students to paint what they want on the vests, instead of designs from an Indian book, he said.

Shaw said the future of the American Indian people will be their sovereignty water rights and the gaming issue, and that he encourages people of American Indian decent to explore their backgrounds.

"It doesn't matter how much blood you have, it's what is in your heart," he said.

Questions abound in 'The X-Files'

By RYAN DOOM
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"The X-Files," the hit TV series that made the Kennedy conspiracy look like a walk in the park, finally has made into a silver-screen adventure.

Creator Chris Carter promised some of the show's big secrets would be revealed and some new ones would be uncovered.

Well, he couldn't be more right. If you never have seen the show, you might want to take a few notes.

The story involves, of course, Fox Mulder (David Duchovny) and Dana Scully (Gillian Anderson), who now have been removed from their X-Files and placed on an anti-terrorist unit. While working on a case in Dallas, they become the target of an investigation after a federal building is bombed and a federal agent is killed.

While Mulder knows something is fishy (he always thinks something is fishy), a man named Kurtzweil (Martin Landau) reaffirms his suspicion. He is supposed to be one of Mulder's father's old friends and has more questions than answers for the FBI's man of paranoia. Without giving away too much, the basic idea is that there is an alien conspiracy to take over the planet by a virus known as the black oil.

Some of the most popular characters from the series worked their way into the film. The Cigarette-Smoking Man (William B. Davis) is here, smoking a cigarette in every scene he appears in. His role has not expanded much. He simply appears in every suspicious situation, lights a smoke and barks a few orders. Mulder and Scully's former boss, Director Skinner (Mitch Pileggi), serves no purpose except to provide another familiar face in the picture.

What makes "The X-Files" work is its basic idea. There are so many questions that it puts its audience into a whirlwind. After a question finally is answered, an entirely new conspiracy is discovered and all new questions begins to surface. There is no true drama here. It is just one suspicious act after another. That is what makes both the show and this film so good. If all the answers were revealed, what would be the fun in watching? It is the paranoia that makes it all work. Or does it?

Benefit to raise money for Habitat for Humanity

By AMY MILLER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Raising money for Habitat for Humanity will be as easy as enjoying live music tonight.

Four Manhattan bands will perform at the Wareham Opera House to benefit K-State's chapter of the organization.

Elizabeth Verderber, chapter president and junior in chemical engineering, said the group has had similar fund-raisers the past few years. She said the concerts are a way of raising money and having fun at the same time.

"We try to do it every year," she said. "This is the best way to get student awareness."

The show will begin at 7:30 p.m. and will feature Horshak, Money Penny, Porphyria and Ruskabank. The style of the music, Verderber said, will range from rock to reggae.

"There should be a really good variety of music," she said.

All bands are playing for free, and Lucky BrewGrille is providing security and part of the sound system at no cost, she said.

Dave Spiker, singer for ska band Ruskabank and senior in music, said the band has played for Habitat benefits before.

"We've had a lot of fun doing shows for Habitat for Humanity in the past," he said. "We don't see it as donating our time. We see it as rocking out."

Ben Schierling, fellow band member and senior in music, said he enjoyed the opportunity to help the community.

"We've been playing in Manhattan for three years," he said, "and this is a good opportunity to show that we appreciate the support from the college and the community."

The K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity gives all its money to the Manhattan chapter, Verderber said. Past Habitat benefit shows had $10-15 cover charges, but this year, the organization chose to lower the fee to $5.

"We really want a lot of people there," Verderber said. "With more people, we'll have the same profit as before."

Proceeds from the event will help complete a house under construction at 510 Colorado St., and a future house, whose location has not been determined.

Verderber said her goal for tonight was to make $1,000-$2,000, close to what past Habitat concerts have raised.

The benefit will be open to those over 18 years of age.

Both parties left questioning fate of NBA

By CHRIS SHERIDAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Is David Stern bluffing when he says he'll cancel the season?

Is Billy Hunter being held back by David Falk?

What is the final date for saving the 1998-99 season?

Those are the big questions in the NBA lockout, and none of the answers were clear Thursday. Of course, the biggest question — When will it end? — was the greatest mystery of all.

Although there have been no conciliatory signs from either side, the league expects to hear from Hunter on Friday. A negotiating session could be scheduled for Monday if the sides think it will lead to progress.

"We're just worlds apart, and NBA players are losing on average $14 million per game," commissioner David Stern said.

Union director Billy Hunter said until a compromise is reached, little will happen.

"When the owners show some willingness to engage in compromise ... we'll be glad to recommend the deal to our players," Hunter said.

The sides remain far apart on both the framework for a deal and the percentage of revenue owners will be devoting to salaries. The players, who received 57 percent last season, are asking for 60 percent. The owners, who wanted to pay no more than 51.8 percent last season, want the percentage scaled back to 50 percent.

The compromise would seem to be 55 percent, yet Stern practically recoiled in disgust when it was suggested the sides simply meet in the middle.

Pointing out that the old deal didn't work for the owners at 52 percent, Stern said it will be hard to get him to budge.

"If the question is whether to close things out, the players could squeeze me to pay a little more than 50 percent. First get me to the close-out of the negotiations," he said. "But we're nowhere near that."

Hunter had no answer when asked what was wrong with 55 percent, but he has said in the past that the players shouldn't accept less than what they are currently getting (57 percent), especially in light of the other concessions the union has made (lengthened rookie scale, possible decrease in cap growth, luxury tax and an escrow tax).

That leaves the sides apparently dug in for the long haul.

Stern is threatening to cancel the season, but Hunter and several agents think the commissioner is bluffing and will do a deal at the last possible moment.

Stern and deputy commissioner Russ Granik have refused to give an exact date, but Granik said recently that it would be somewhere in mid-December.

So if an agreement were reached Dec. 20, for example, the season could start Jan. 14.

Each team would have only 50 games left, but an additional six could be added if the All-Star game were canceled and an extra week was added to the end of the regular season.

This would allow for a 56-game schedule in which each team played every other team twice.

Stern has charged agents such as Falk, who represent the highest-salaried players, with slowing the process. Hunter responded by saying Stern was trying to divide the union.

Hunter further insists that he and union president Patrick Ewing have been in charge of the negotiations since the beginning.

Falk seems to be upset with the proposals on the table because the union has offered a mechanism to limit high-end salaries.

Falk's clients Allen Iverson and Stephen Marbury will not have the opportunity to cash in with a $120 million contract like Kevin Garnett did.

If their contracts are limited to a maximum of $60 million, Falk and his clients will have sustained a huge loss.

Students battle weather, each other in weekend paintball tournament

By LAURAN COWDREY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KEATS, Kan. — Despite the cold and rain, nearly 160 students from residence halls participated Saturday in a paintball tournament at Krazy Kris'.

The event was organized by Tom Lechtenberg, junior in education and athletic training.

"It has been a work in progress," he said. "I've had a great support group."

Lechtenberg, the fitness coordinator for Moore Hall, said the tournament originally just was for Moore Hall residents.

Each team that entered had to pay an entry fee, and he said there was a chance the hall could have lost money on the deal.

"We could have lost up to $200," Lechtenberg said.

But based on an overwhelming response from Moore Hall residents, the tournament was opened to students in all halls. Lechtenberg said the response was so large that members of greek houses and students living off campus also participated.

Jonas Stewart, resident assistant in Putnam Hall, said that he enjoys playing paintball and that the tournament was a good floor activity.

"I thought it would be a good activity to get the guys on our floor together," he said.

"It's kind of a hobby of mine."

The tournament was from 9 a.m. to dark on Saturday.

There were four brackets in which teams could compete, and each team was able to choose a captain and a team name.

Stewart and Lechtenberg said the team names were extremely creative and varied from "Hay 8" to the "Spandex Warriors."

Though he organized the event, Lechtenberg said he had not played paintball before. He was a member of a winning team.

"Everyone thought, that I was some sort of paintball stud, he said. "It was great."

Despite bad weather, Lechtenberg said participants still had a good time. When their team was not playing, participants gathered in a nearby garage to warm up and listen to the K-State-Baylor football game on the radio.

"They still had a great time," Lechtenberg said.

Participants were provided with the paint, guns and even lunch — all included as part of the entry fee.

The tournament raised nearly $300 for Moore Hall's fitness program. Lechtenberg said he has plans for a first-aid and CPR program, and he said that some money will go toward the third-annual Sports Man/Woman of the Year contest that Lechtenberg created during his freshman year.

Lechtenberg said he would be happy to donate any of the remaining funds to other residence-hall programs.

PASSING OF A LEGEND

K-State's winningest basketball coach remembered for love of game, school

Jack Hartman coached K-State's men's basketball team from 1970 to 1986 and compiled an overall record of 295-169.

BY AMY MILLER

K-State's most successful basketball coach died of apparent heart failure Friday while vacationing in Santa Fe, N.M.
Jack Hartman, 72, coached the men's team from 1970 to 1986 with a record of 295-169.

Sports Information director Kent Brown said Hartman remained a faithful fan of the basketball program until his death, even offering Coach Tom Asbury his advice after games.

"He would drop notes to Tom about what he saw on the floor," Brown said. "He had coached so long, he noticed things that other people wouldn't. He was a good sounding board for Asbury."

In a press conference Saturday, Asbury said Hartman would be missed, especially by the team's upperclassmen.

"The older guys all know him," Asbury said. "Not only did they know who he was, they knew him, because Jack was around all the time. He was in the office and he was at practice and he was at gatherings."

Brown said Hartman was private when it came to discussing his health. Although Brown knew Hartman had a bout with pneumonia earlier this fall, he said he was surprised by Hartman's death, because he had regained his strength since the illness.

"He seemed to have his energy back," Brown said, "and it's always a shock when someone's popular and you're used to seeing them around."

Although Hartman was not at as many practices this season as in past years, Asbury said he seemed to have recovered from his recent illness.

"He was just in our office last week and ... he was in great spirits," Asbury said. "He was on top of his game last week, and that's all anybody can ask. He was a great man, and we miss him tremendously."

Recycling efforts kick off at game

By JESSE MCCURRY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This Saturday's game against Nebraska is only the beginning of ambitious plans K-State is developing to improve recycling efforts on campus and in city parks.

Twelve colleges and universities, including the universities of Kansas and Nebraska, have accepted Stacy Meredith, organizer of the America Recycles Day event, and Student Body President Tracey Mann's challenge to see which school can collect the most aluminum cans this week.

"It's turning out to be quite a big thing," Meredith, junior in geology, said.

K-State's main collection effort will be on game day, the day before America Recycles Day — a national event to increase awareness for recycling and buying recycling products.

John Woods, director of facilities services, is coordinating the placement of recycling trailers on game day, donated from Howie's Recycling. Volunteers collecting cans, including members of Students for Helping the Environment and Golden Key National Honor Society, will put them on either of two trailers, 30 feet in length, located on each side of KSU Stadium.

Howie's has agreed to count the weight of aluminum cans collected from K-State students. Golden Key is joining the competition, collecting aluminum tabs for the Ronald McDonald House, their philanthropic fund raiser. Proceeds from the aluminum sold to

Memorial service set for Tuesday

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A memorial service for K-State student Tom Richardson will be at 5 p.m. Tuesday in All Faiths Chapel.

Richardson, freshman in business, was shot to death on Oct. 26 in his apartment at 2265 Buckingham St. — Manhattan's first homicide since January 1997.

Brent Lawless, 36, a Junction City parole officer, also was found dead in the apartment, located in the Westchester Park Apartment Residences complex. Police said Lawless shot Richardson before turning the gun on himself.

Richardson, 22, had been a student at K-State since August 1997.

Jason Musick, senior in hotel and restaurant management, was one of Richardson's friends and helped plan the service. He said they met last year at the K-State Student Union.

"I didn't know him all that well, but there is just an aura about him. He was quiet and very humble, but he was always willing to help," Musick said.

Musick said Richardson wasn't very involved on campus, but he was trying to find a place to belong.

"He pretty much kept a low profile. Tom was a shy, laid back kind of guy," Musick said. "Tom was trying to make friends. He was pretty confused and

Collegian, yearbook win Pacemaker honor

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Collegian and the Royal Purple yearbook were honored with Pacemaker awards from the Associated Collegiate Press on Saturday, ranking them among the top university publications in the nation.

The Pacemaker, considered the Pulitzer Prize of collegiate journalism, was awarded to five college newspapers and three yearbooks nationwide. Saturday's awards marked the third time in the 1990s that K-State's newspaper and yearbook have won the award in the same year.

K-State was the only university to be honored in both categories.

The Pacemakers were given for the 1997-98 Collegian, edited by Scott Ladd in the fall and Kelly Furnas in the spring, and the 1997 Royal Purple, edited by Ashley Schmidt.

Both publications also were honored in the 1998 Best of Show competition, making K-State the only school whose publications were honored in both contests.

The Royal Purple's 1998 edition placed first in the competition; the Collegian's Oct. 26 edition earned fourth place.

The awards were given at the annual convention of College Media Advisers, which ended Sunday.

Former Collegian advertising adviser Gloria Freeland, now the director of the Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media, was honored as CMA's distinguished business adviser for 1998. Freeland is also an assistant professor in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Other schools winning Pacemakers for their daily newspapers were the University of Arizona, Michigan State University, the University of Pennsylvania and the University of North Carolina-Charlotte.

Representative hopes Congress will listen

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In his first remarks on President Clinton's troubles since the Republican upheaval, the leading contender to succeed Newt Gingrich as House speaker said Congress must take into account the public's view that the presidential affair and cover-up do not warrant impeachment.

"I don't know if he's home free or not," Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., said on television Sunday, the eve of a House Judiciary subcommittee hearing on what constitutes an impeachable offense.

Livingston said he would vote for impeachment "if the evidence is there."

"We cannot simply disregard the fact that there are other people in our society, in the military and in various other walks of life, CEOs or principals of schools, who have been likewise charged and have lost their jobs," he said.

Discovery, Glenn land after historic mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — After a shaky reintroduction to gravity, John Glenn was "95 or 98 percent back to normal" on Sunday, walking briskly, telling jokes and urging old folks to follow their dreams.

"I feel very elated that things went well. We got a lot of the data we were looking to get and worked very hard up there," NASA's 77-year-old geriatric test subject said his first morning back on Earth.

In his first post-flight news conference, Glenn admitted he "didn't feel too hot" when he stood and walked out of space shuttle Discovery on Saturday.

He said he was determined, though, to join his six crewmates for the traditional walk around the shuttle.

"If I would have been on my hands and knees I was going to do it," said Glenn, who beat the oldest-spaceman record by 16 years. "I wasn't quite to that point, but obviously, I was not doing my best gait out there."

Glenn said before going to Johnson Space Center in Houston for a welcome-back ceremony and three more weeks of medical tests that his shuttle mission was every bit as satisfying as his history-making ride aboard Friendship 7 back in 1962.

"I got great satisfaction the first time out of just being up there and being the first one to do this for our country," he said, "and here I am all these years later."

Avalanche hits resort; one snowboarder dead

SALT LAKE CITY — An avalanche swept five snowboarders down a rocky slope in the Wasatch Mountains on Saturday, killing a New Hampshire man and seriously injuring a woman.

Salt Lake County sheriff's deputies did not release the names of those caught in the avalanche, pending notification of the family of the 21-year-old man who was killed.

The group had ventured into Alta and Snowbird ski resorts, neither of which was open. The snowboarders were descending Mount Baldy at Snowbird when the snow broke loose and swept them down the cliffs and exposed rocks.

The woman, who was taken to Alta View Hospital, was in serious condition with leg, back and chest injuries.

The body of the man who was killed was found under about two feet of snow but was not recovered. Winds of up to 75 mph forced officials to abandon their efforts for the day.

Livingston, Cox lead bid to replace Gingrich

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Republican leadership battle took to the airwaves Sunday as candidates to replace departing House Speaker Newt Gingrich and his lieutenants sought support from colleagues who want the GOP to show a friendlier and more effective face.

Momentarily interrupting their fevered phone campaigning for a parade through the Sunday talk shows, the GOP contenders differed less on policy issues than on whether to work with Democrats next year in a narrowly divided House. A common campaign platform seemed to be, "I'm not Newt."

Rep. Bob Livingston, R-La., hoping to succeed Gingrich, spoke of working with Democrats to produce legislation on which a broad majority can agree.

"I intend to reach out and bring anybody who wants to together to formulate the legislation that we need," Livingston said on ABC's "This Week with Sam Donaldson and Cokie Roberts."

His only opponent thus far, Rep. Christopher Cox, R-Calif., proposed a cooperative agreement with the Republican Senate — something that seldom occurred under Gingrich — and promised to keep social policy issues out of basic spending bills, a legislative tactic that often tied the House in knots.

"This is not just about who is going to be the next Speaker of the House, it's about the direction of the country," Cox said on CBS' "Face the Nation."

A third House Republican who was weighing a run for speaker, James Talent of Missouri, withdrew his name and threw his support to Livingston.

Two additional potential candidates for a House Republican leadership position might be ready to make a move.

Rep. Jennifer Dunn, R-Wash., is giving renewed consideration to challenging Rep. Dick Armey, R-Texas, as House majority leader. Dunn's announcement could come as early as today, said GOP sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Rep. Dennis Hastert also was considering entering the race, said a source close to the Illinois Republican. That would make it a four-way race for the No. 2 House post; Rep. Steve Largent, R-Okla., already has declared his interest.

Hastert is a close ally of Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas, the House majority whip, who is backing Livingston for speaker but who has been conspicuously silent about the majority leader's race.

The Democrats' five-seat gain last Tuesday means the next Congress will have 223 Republicans, 211 Democrats and one independent who usually votes with the Democrats. The number of immediate concern to Livingston, Cox and others seeking lower-level leadership posts is 112 — a majority in the Republican caucus.

The incoming GOP House members will vote for leaders by secret ballot on Nov. 18, the same day that Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr will be testifying in front of the House Judiciary Committee. A vote by the full House for speaker would take place after the 106th Congress convenes Jan. 6.

Incoming Republican senators will meet the first week of December to vote for leaders. Although no challenges have emerged as yet, there are rumblings of dissatisfaction with Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., and Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee. The GOP had hoped to increase its Senate majority to a filibuster-proof 60 seats, but wound up making no gains. The Senate has 55 Republicans and 45 Democrats.

Far removed from the political maneuvering he set into motion, Gingrich visited his ailing mother in Mechanicsburg, Pa., on Sunday. Talking to reporters before he went in, Gingrich said he has given no thought to running for president and will discuss his political future tonight in Washington at a meeting of GOPAC, the Republican fundraising group he once led.

"In the next couple of years, I want to be an active citizen in public life," he said.

An ABC News poll released Sunday showed 2-to-1 popular support for Gingrich's departure. Respondents nearly were unanimous for reducing partisanship in Congress. Overall, 58 percent disapproved of the way Gingrich handled his job. The telephone poll of 503 adults was conducted Saturday and had a margin of error of 4.5 points.

What seems certain amid conflicting claims of support from competing Republicans was that the new speaker's leadership style will be more attuned to day-to-day business than Gingrich, who used the speakership as a national bully pulpit.

Livingston said on ABC that Republicans must accept that they will not be able to force their conservative agenda into law unscathed.

"When you have slim margins, 12 or six votes, you can't do everything that you want," Livingston said.

Running the House, he said, would require coalition-building, not a battering ram.

Livingston said he had more than 100 votes of support, and Cox said that at least 90 House Republicans had pledged their support to him or expressed a willingness to vote for him. But with a secret ballot, both are trying to get more than 112 votes, as one House Republican staffer put it, "to counter the ones who aren't telling you the truth."

Native American Pow Wow

Ahearn Field House event raises money for future pow wow

By CORY LAFFERTY
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The drum beats start, and dancers rise slowly to the rhythm. The drum beat grows louder, and the chanting begins.

Ahearn Field House was filled with many types of dancing and celebration Saturday — all part of the Native American Student Body Pow Wow.

"We have a Pow Wow in the fall and in the spring," NASB member Quinton Shaw said. "This is our benefit Pow Wow. We have this so we can hold our competition Pow Wow in the spring."

Saturday's dancing featured a gourd dance in the afternoon, honoring veterans for Veteran's Day next week.

The dances include the "drum," which denotes the entire area in the middle where the head singer and the other singers sit and play the drum.

The drum sits in the middle of the circle, a sacred place where dancers can communicate with the spirits. Most of the dances represent an action or event, and there is a head man and woman dancer, Shaw said.

"Our evening dance is the intertribal war dancing," NASB President Tammy Goodson said. "It's an exhibition dancing for all of the categories of dancing. There are four categories of dancing for the men, and four for the women."

The dances attract people from throughout the Midwest. The dancers' ages range from 2 to 78, including one man who participated from a wheelchair.

"The different regalia — we don't call them 'costumes,' that's what you wear on Halloween — that the dancers wear represent their tribe and what type of dance they perform," Goodson said.

The dances give anyone involved a chance to strengthen their heritage, the participants said.

"Many years ago, my grandmother had always told me, 'Never forget who you are and where you came from, and always present yourself with dignity and pride,'" said Lillie Kaulity, the head woman dancer at the Pow Wow. "There are people who have never seen a Native American — always represent your Indian people in a good way wherever you go."

The event began at 3 p.m. and lasted through the evening. Group members accepted donations throughout the day and sold food outside Ahearn so they would be able to have their competition dance in the spring.

A majority of those who attended the event were involved in the dance in one way or another.

"We mainly have these powwows so we can make new friends and see old friends," Goodson said. "It's like a homecoming or celebration — the camaraderie is really high."

Ira Toshavik, Shawnee Mission, Kan., dances at the Native American Student Body Pow Wow at Ahearn Field House Saturday evening. The event started at 3 p.m. and lasted throughout the evening.

OUR VIEW

Hartman's legacy will prevail at KSU

It will be difficult to describe the effect that the death of Jack Hartman will have on K-State.

We can recount the facts and figures and statistics of Hartman's career here as the coach of the K-State men's basketball team from 1970 to 1986. We can tell you that he was the most successful coach in K-State history, earning our school several conference titles to rival our basketball neighbors in Lawrence.

We can tell you that in 1981, Hartman won the title of Coach of the Year from the National Association of Basketball Coaches. We can tell you that he led the United States to a gold medal for basketball at the 1983 Pan-American Games.

That would barely scratch the surface.

Hartman touched the lives of thousands of people. He was a father figure, not only to his three daughters or his grandchildren, not only to the players he coached but to anyone who ever came to Ahearn Field House to see what all the fuss was about in a town in the middle of Kansas. Hartman reached out to so many people that his memory still burns brightly in the hearts and minds of people all across the country.

Nowhere is that more apparent, however, than here in Manhattan. Hartman's heavy presence has been felt around K-State since his retirement in 1986. When Tom Asbury needed tips on the men's basketball team's performance, he was there. When broadcasters on the Wildcat Television Network needed someone to give analysis at basketball games, he was there. When the NABC needed strong leadership, he was there to serve as president.

In 1996, when NCAA violations threatened to end the women's basketball season, he was there.

When then-coach Brian Agler left the program after he came under fire from the NCAA for providing his players with summer jobs, Hartman returned to the floor to get the job done. He left retirement to coach the K-State women. Hartman's influence was not enough to turn an already difficult season around in its late weeks, but he had a strong effect on the members of his team that year and was proud of their performance.

His love for our school and his dedication to it are the stuff of legend, and nowhere will you find a more fitting example of honor and self-sacrifice.

Now we bid farewell to a man who seemed larger than life. Ahearn is a fitting place for his funeral, but even in its huge volume, it never could be large enough to house his greatness. Jack Hartman will be missed.

READERS WRITE

GTAs must pass 2 exams, undergo extensive training

Editor, After reading the "Readers Write" segment of the Oct. 28 Collegian, I became concerned about some students' experiences with graduate teaching assistants they had encountered.

They specifically pointed out the Department of Physics as a source of problems. Because I am in charge of the undergraduate labs where all the GTA-student interactions take place, I checked to see who the GTAs were that these students had had in physics. Lo and behold, not one of the authors ever had taken a physics lab. It is quite interesting that despite their complete lack of contact with even a single GTA in physics, they felt that "they must express their opinions" about this department.

As for the qualifications of the physics GTAs, they all are required to pass the TOEFL exam with high scores before being admitted to K-State. Then they are required to take the Test of Spoken English administered by the English Language Program. Only if they pass this test are they allowed to be in contact with students.

They then go through an extensive departmental teacher-assistant training that includes videotaping and class observations. As a final measure of their ability, the Department of Planning and Analysis gives a survey to the students regarding their communication skills in English. Based on the student feedback so far, out of all the GTAs in this department, only two people have been recommended for removal. One GTA was removed from the lower undergraduate labs the following semester, and the other student was from Ohio, and we really felt that an Ohio accent probably wasn't a hindrance to communicating in English.

director of undergraduate laboratories, physics department

TODD PETERSEN

November can make or break people

To be quite honest, fall is my least-favorite season. More specifically, the month of November is the proverbial thorn in my side right now.

October is over, thank God. This is the most depressing month of the year for many people I know. Midterms make for that last minute cramming that cuts into your social life (please note the sarcasm, as my social life is practically nonexistent), summer has ended, and the sun sets earlier and earlier every day.

In the area of the months I absolutely loathe, however, November runs a close second.

Dangerous to your academic and emotional life is the month of November, which I have dubbed "the apathy month." Midterms are over, and you tend to settle into your own comfort zone; after all, finals seem like years away. You can rest easy. You've earned it, because you worked hard for those midterm grades — or maybe you haven't.

I, for one, am doing my best to battle the state of indifference that has so many in its grasp. I've forced myself not to slow down, even in the shadow of the dreaded midterms. Most of the grades in my classes are dependent upon test scores, so I usually have little homework. Instead, my grades are dependent upon the scores I get on the tests. With this in mind, I haven't succumbed to apathy yet, but the potential to do so is present. Looking at those around me, I can see everyone has given up for the time being.

The other night, I was in my friend's room down the hall with the usual group of about five others. I was lying on his sofa, intently reading Nathaniel Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter" for my American Survey class (OK, so I skipped the 30-page introduction). The other five, meanwhile, were engrossed in their video and computer games, a nightly ritual for the inhabitants of the room and those who frequent it. I doubt I've ever seen an open textbook in that room this semester.

"I skipped my Expository Writing class today," one of the guys said during his James Bond game, seemingly out of nowhere.

I didn't even look up from my book. "That's nice," I said in a monotone whisper.

"I'm so bored," he continued, his eyes glued to the video game on the TV screen. "I guess I should do my physics homework, but I just don't feel like it."

The rest of the room mumbled its approval and resumed its video games; I muttered to myself and turned a page. Even my ever-studious roommate, the most academically gifted person I know, was lost in a world of his own, thanks to the magic of computer pinball. I'm not sure, but I think he was putting off some philosophy homework at the time.

Needless to say, the physics homework sat, I assume, on that guy's desk for the rest of the evening, untouched by anyone.

It is this type of apathy that seems to have students in an especially strong headlock this time of year. I admit, sometimes I find myself telling my roommate,

"Quick, talk me out of doing my French homework before I come to my senses." Nine times out of 10, he manages to persuade me to put it off for another couple of hours.

Personally, I think he just likes to see me feverishly conjugate French verbs ten minutes before class begins.

You know what they say: Admittance is the first step to recovery. If I can procrastinate from getting involved with procrastination, perhaps the month will go by much faster.

Like some of you, I need to face each day with the desire to learn and not let the mood of November drag me down into the depths of indifference.

For now, I'm having way too much fun watching my friends with their eyes glazed over and mouths salivating from video games, while their homework sits, lonely and dejected, in dusty corners of their rooms.

President Neff would put office in brand new light

My intent today is to provide a public service to you, the reader.

To further your education at K-State, I will introduce you to a little-known and little-used literary device called sarcasm. I can do this because I am an English major, which makes me an expert in everything pertaining to language. To help you understand what I really mean, I have included side notes (in parentheses).

Since we have had elections recently, I also will tell you what I would do as an elected official — namely, the big dog, the head honcho, king of the hill. I would be nothing less than the president of the United States — President Neff.

The first thing I would do if I were elected president would be to change the official name of the president from the boring "Mr. President" to something more interesting, like "Your Astounding and Colossal Fearless Leader." (Not really, you see, Congress would probably never allow it, so Neff wouldn't bother.)

I would enact several important policies, like it would be legal to pillage small neighboring villas, as long as no one got hurt, and people found driving below the speed limit would have their license revoked and would have to perform amazing daredevil feats to get it back. (That also wouldn't happen, what Neff means by saying that is slow drivers often annoy him.)

I would make drastic changes in the entertainment world, such as bringing back roller derby, ordering the arrest and torture of male figure skaters, forcing all referees to undergo rigorous vision tests before games, disbanding the NCAA Rules Committee and making every sport full-contact. (What Neff means by saying this is that he feels sports have gotten touchy and boring because of the lack of action.)

Staying on the subject of referees, I would push a bill that would cause a referee to have a cinder block tied around his neck for every bad call proven by instant replay. We easily would know who the worst referees were by how many blocks were around their heads, keeping them from holding their heads up so they couldn't see to make more bad calls.

Moving on to technology, I would use an exorbitant amount of the taxpayers' money to hire engineers to construct a real light saber for me. Also, I would make it so every American could afford to buy an F-14. I figure, if we can get those babies on an assembly line instead of making them by hand, we could churn them out for about $30,000. (What Neff means here is he feels that technology nowadays has been geared toward computer nerds. He would like that changed.) I think we have the technology for neat stuff now, too, like training dogs at obedience school to mow the yard and wash dishes. I would definitely push for that.

As for the legal system, I would like to have a pep band play at every televised trial. Imagine it, "Two bloody gloves that don't fit, good for an acquittal!" Also, I would like to have a law passed changing the legal drinking age to the second trimester of pregnancy. (What Neff means by this is he doesn't approve of the current drinking age, but he would never really advocate drinking while one is pregnant. That would be bad.)

I also would like a law passed prohibiting universities from charging so much for tuition and books that students will be in debt for 30 years. (What Neff means is college students are getting screwed by tuition fees.)

A new president will be needed soon, if not right now. I'm here to help. (So am I.) Remember, your vote counts.

Statistics on sexual assaults should frighten all women

This is not a bedtime story.

Tuesday's Collegian had a small article in it about a woman who was sexually assaulted in late October. Her friends called the police, and the police responded to the residence hall where the woman presumably lives. The Collegian article quoted the responding police officer as saying the victim was intoxicated. The victim declined to file a report about the incident with the authorities. The officer said the student assaulted was not injured. End of story.

Not injured, my ass. End of story, hardly.

The woman might not have had any broken bones, but she is injured. The kind of injury that might never heal — her soul and spirit are injured. Foggy nightmares of that evening will haunt her forever. I know; I've been there.

All who know her are injured. Every person who was with her that night and called the police is injured. Every woman on this campus who read the story is injured. Every male student with a sister or female friend on this campus is injured.

Why did the Collegian need to report this story? Why did we all need to know about this woman? Why did she have to pick up a paper more than a week after this horrible nightmare only to read about it all over again?

My knee-jerk reaction to reading the story in the paper was to call up the Collegian editors and give them a piece of my mind. Sure, the story didn't list the woman's name, but it did give all the other details. She didn't want to file a report for this very reason. No one wants his or her private life spilled out on the front page of a student newspaper.

Of course, at this point, that argument seems hypocritical, since here I am writing about it all over again.

However, we did need to know about this sexual assault. When I say "we," I mean students, faculty, staff, community members and alumni. We all need to know that K-State is not always a safe place to

VIEWPOINT

We need to be reminded that lights, safe escorts and police patrols aren't always enough. We need to know that criminals will continue to be criminals until they are forced to stop. We need to know that men who sexually assault don't do it just once, they will do it over and over and over again.

Last week, during a speech delivered as part of K-State's Violence Against Women Awareness Week, Chuck Derry, co-founder of the Gender Violence Institute, quoted some frightening statistics.

One in four college women will be a victim of rape during her college career. One in three women will be sexually assaulted during her life.

There are more than 20,000 students at K-State. As of this semester, 9,974 of them are women. How many will be assaulted as part of the K-State experience?

I am frustrated.

We should all know by now that it is not the victim's fault. We should all know that no means no. But no matter how many groups against rape there are, no matter how many made-for-television movies and awareness weeks we have, women still are being assaulted. Women still feel somehow responsible for being victims. Women still fear reporting crimes like these.

It is not our fault. It doesn't matter what you were wearing, how many drinks you had, whether you were flirting with someone in a bar, whether you went home with someone or who that someone was.

You have the right to say no whenever you want. You have the right to decide what you do with your body and who you do it with. No one can ever take that right away. If they try to take that right away, it is a crime.

End of story? No.

It's only the beginning.

Win against Baylor moves Cats up in polls

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WACO, Texas — Perfection can be a frustrating thing.

For example, take into account what came out of K-State's 49-6 victory against Baylor in Waco on Saturday.

The Cats improved to 9-0 on the season, 6-0 in the Big 12 Conference, improved their school-record winning streak to 17 and improved to 9-0 against Big 12 South Division teams.

Despite all of these accomplishments, however, K-State left Floyd Casey Stadium feeling disappointed about its play.

Although the Cats racked up 518 yards of total offense in rainy conditions and posted a score that should please the Bowl Championship Series voters, K-State yielded 209 rushing yards, which would have been the most the defense has allowed this season was it not for the 71 yards removed due to sacks.

Also, the Cats allowed the Bears to move the ball more easily than any other opponent the Cats have played this season.

"We were just not playing the way we're capable of playing," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "It's not wins or losses, and it's not score, it's just the level we're playing right now."

Regardless of the 43-point victory, the players also said there was room for improvement.

"We're perfectionists. We like to play as well as we can," tight end Justin Swift said. "There's not a person on this team who can't improve."

While the players said they were disappointed by their mistakes, they can take many positives from the contest. The defense continued to provide solid pressure, notching eight sacks against Baylor's duo of quarterbacks. The Cats also disrupted the Bears' offensive scheme early, taking the crowd out of the game and forcing Baylor to play catch-up the rest of the game.

Baylor's offensive game plan began its downward spiral only 87 seconds into the game, when quarterback Jermaine Alfred fumbled the ball on third down after a vicious hit by linebacker Travis Litton, who started for the injured Travis Ochs. Defensive tackle Damion McIntosh recovered the ball and rambled 8 yards to the 11-yard line, setting up quarterback Michael Bishop and the Cats' offense for their first series of the afternoon.

Coaches vote K-State, Tennessee co-No. 1s

By RICHARD ROSENBLATT

Ohio State is out, UCLA is down but not out, and Tennessee and Kansas State are in — as college football's new 1-2 punch.

When Joe Germaine's fourth-down pass was intercepted at the goal line with 72 seconds left, and Michigan State had upset Ohio State 28-24, the run for the national championship changed dramatically.

The Buckeyes (8-1, 5-1) not only lost the No. 1 ranking they had since the preseason poll, but on Sunday, they found themselves on the outside looking in at a Big Ten title and trip to the Rose Bowl.

"Right now we can do one of two things," Germaine said. "We can learn from this and go on, or we can tuck our tail."

While Ohio State fell out of the national-title chase and to No. 7 in this week's Associated Press poll, No. 3

Marko Fields (left), Ester Ikeda and Scott Dooley's art shows opened Friday evening at Strecker Gallery & Design Studio. Fields and Dooley are graduate students in fine arts.

Four artists find expressions in clay

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

At Friday night's opening of a new ceramics show at Strecker Gallery & Design Studio, the proud pair of the crowd was no doubt Yoshiro Ikeda.

The show, which runs through Dec. 24, featured three artists with close ties to the local sculptor — graduate art students Marko Fields and Scott Dooley and Ikeda's wife, Ester, who creates teapots. Rounding out the show was another Kansas artist, April Bascom, who creates ceramic boots.

The work of Fields and Dooley exhibits a clear relationship to the work of their mentor, Ikeda, professor of art, in the use of wildly organic-like texture. This is especially apparent in Fields's pieces, with their bubbled-up organisms covering nearly every available surface. There's a give-and-take in Fields' ceramics between an organic surface ornament and the almost mechanistic way they seem to grow formally. It's not for nothing that Fields describes his imagery as "giant amoebas, gherkins and Spanish olives" and his forms as "animated."

In the exuberant "Vessel for the Tactile

Impaired," porcelain, sterling, nickel, silver and carnelian, a series of folds splay from some impossible vortex, giving rise to a form that is strangely familiar — like a teapot or a bottle — but also alien. Like Ikeda, his best work teeters between function and form, using clay's versatility as an escape from our conventional expectations.

"It has that sort of architectonic feel to it," Fields said. "It's many-layered. Whereas the form might be at times mechanized or a combination of mechanic and organic, my surfaces tend to be biomorphic."

Dooley's simple, colorful work has less surface imagery and focuses much more on the form of the object — be it teapot or bottle. Again, the artist wrestles between function and form as his bottles begin to look like twisted mufflers and his teapots like miniaturized grain silos sent through an acid bath.

"The teapot form is one of the most used forms by ceramics artists," Dooley said. "There's a lot of room for gesture. I think that gives me more potential for gesture to make the form more interesting."

Dooley is looking at metal objects with clay. His porcelain teapots suggest metal without attempting to fool us. Yet, the way he bends his pieces like angular metal objects makes us question the material.

There's no question of material or purpose in the work of Ester Ikeda. Her work's relationship to that of her husband's stops with the material, for she's much more interested in creating functional teapots and creamers that are, as Henri Matisse said, "armchairs for the mind."

Using simple geometry, Ikeda is exploring different perspectives in this work — whether that be flattened or a kind of bee-hive rotundity. Personality plays a big part in the success of these sets, since the artist admits she views the teapot and creamer as a couple. One of her teapots' lids is a two-faced oval where you can view the woman on one side and the man on the other.

"I want people to feel happy and be comfortable looking at my pieces, to enjoy the humor," Ikeda said.

Then there are the boots of Bascom — realistic examples of boots, but constructed of clay and acrylic.

With Bascom's boots, after the initial effect of the way she makes the clay appear to be leather, metal and so forth wears off, viewers are left with a boot that exhibits some sly sense of wink-wink humor. The joke may be a gunshot hole in the toe, as in the work "The Incompetent Cowboy," or something as predictably dull as "My Heroes Have Always Been Cowboys," a boot covered with names of the likes of Bronco Billy, Wyatt Earp and Roy Rogers. Timid stuff, indeed.

Money-making options exist

By ERIN MCGLINN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

It is a green obstacle that challenges many, shows no consideration to age or gender and is desired by everyone — money.

At one point or another, most college students find themselves wondering how to get some money in a hurry.

One answer is in a place so familiar to some that it is probably the main reason their funds are depleted — Aggieville.

Varney's Book Store, 623 N. Manhattan Ave., is one place to cash in.

"Anyone can sell textbooks at any time throughout the semester," said Kristi Allen, a clerk in Varney's textbook department. "However, the store is able to give back more money at the end of the semester when books are needed most."

Allen said there are times when the store isn't able to give any money back for certain textbooks, but they often can be sold the following semester, when the store needs more books.

Streetside Records is across the street from Varney's. Its staff members said any used compact disc has some value.

"We pay anywhere from $2 to $4 per CD," Streetside clerk Dax Gazaway said.

The CD needs to be in good working condition and have the original artwork; having a case can increase the value.

Gazaway said it's usually safe to say that if the CD is something no one really is ready to give up, Streetside probably will buy it.

If trading personal possessions for money in Aggieville seems a bit too degrading, there is an alternative option — donating plasma at the Manhattan Biomedical Center.

"Plasma can be drawn up to twice a week but not two days in a row," said Jake Banks, the center's assistant manager.

Banks said the first visit pays only $5, but the second visit pays $40 because two sets of plasma are needed in order for the center to sell it elsewhere.

The third visit pays $30, and after that, each donation is worth about $15.

Banks said it takes anywhere from a half-hour to an hour to collect enough plasma, depending on physical factors such as weight and hydration.

Donating plasma for two hours a week can be worth up to $45.

He said that a physical examination appointment must be made before the office visit.

A trip to Aggieville or the Manhattan Biomedical Center could set up one with cash and that satisfying feeling of independence — and no need to go home and ask for money.

Beck takes new musical path

By DIANA LEE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Beck is back with his third mainstream release "Mutations," an album that follows in the shadow of his widely successful single, "Odelay," but one that takes a large stylistic detour.

Beck fans who are expecting catchy party tunes had better let this album pass. Beck takes a definite turn toward folk and country with this release, once again proving that he doesn't live and die by mainstream approval.

Songs such as "Nobody's Fault But My Own" and "We Live Again" truly exemplify Beck's multifaceted musical talents. These two simply beautiful tunes have a peaceful and unique sound that really sets them apart from other less interesting sounding songs on the album.

"Bottle of Blues" is the quintessential "I'm gonna drink away my troubles" country tune. The addition of a unique guitar rhythm, that's as far as possible from country-and-Western turns this song into a creation all its own.

However, the best track by far is the groovy "Tropicalia." The title itself conjures images of peaceful island living, and that is exactly the scene this song sets. Somewhere between a conga line and a carefree Caribbean disco, "Tropicalia" is really the only tune on this album that might make you want to get up and dance.

"Lazy Flies" has a flower-power, love-your-neighbor feel reminiscent of the folk bands of the '60s.

Don't expect anything similar to what Beck has done in the past. The challenge and appeal of his music is learning to appreciate his diversity and ability.

K-State forward Shawn Rhodes goes up for a shot against NBC Thunder Camps' Drake Charles Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State lost to NBC Thunder Camps, 83-79.

GAINING EXPERIENCE

K-State loses 2nd exhibition game, 83-79

Playing with inexperienced guards and a makeshift lineup, the K-State men's basketball team lost its second and final exhibition game on Saturday to the NBC Thunder Camps, 83-79.

Playing without starters Manny Dies and Duane Davis, K-State coach Tom Asbury started freshmen Josh Kimm and Travis Reynolds in their places.

"It's good for these young guys to get experience," senior captain Shawn Rhodes said. "I think we had a lot of young guys improve and get some good minutes and see what it's like to be on the floor."

In the first half, the Cats allowed the Thunder 10 offensive rebounds and second chances. The Thunder led by 9 at one point in the first half before the Cats battled back, using a Rhodes 3-point shot to tie the game at 35-35 going into halftime.

K-State entered intermission shooting just 31 percent from the field. It ended the game shooting 36 percent.

With 18:40 left to play in the second half, the Thunder went ahead for good. Throughout the second half, the Thunder kept the lead at 5 or 6 points. However, the short-handed Cats attempted to battle back numerous times from the deficit. With 15:15 left and trailing by five, K-State got a 4-point play from junior forward Cortez Groves, who lead the team in scoring with 18 points.

Although Groves' play cut the lead to one, it was not enough down the stretch. On the next possession, the Thunder answered with a 3-pointer from guard Reggie Paul.

"They hit big ones when they really needed them," Asbury said.

The Cats shot 75 percent from the free-throw line in the first half, but they cooled off to 63 percent in the second half, resulting in 66 percent for the game.

"We still have a lot of improvement there," Rhodes said.

"I think part of that is some of the new guys, that's their first time shooting free throws in front of a big arena like this, but we shoot a lot in practice, and we'll get better at that."

Inexperienced guard play and injuries to key players made it difficult for the Cats to be consistent, Asbury said.

"I thought we were much more effective and efficient in the second half," he said.

"But when you don't have any experienced guard play, you're gonna look real sluggish. At times you'll look OK, and at other times you won't."

The Cats turned the ball over 20 times in comparison to the Thunder's nine. Asbury said turnovers cost K-State the game.

"We didn't turn the ball over much last week, but we really turned it over tonight," Asbury said.

"There was the difference in this game."

Coaches and players said they are looking forward to the regular season, and they see reasons for improvement. When the team gets preseason All-Big 12 Conference player Dies healthy and players gain experience, Asbury said the team should improve.

"We've got to pick up our intensity, and the toughness side of it isn't there yet, but we'll get that," Asbury said.

"We hope that (Dies) just gets progressively a little more effective as the week progresses."

CATS

It took the Cats only 33 seconds to convert the turnover, when running back Eric Hickson took an option pitch from Bishop 7 yards for the touchdown.

After Baylor head coach Dave Roberts inserted Odell James in at quarterback, the Bears converted two quick first downs. However, on first down from the 50, James' pass was intercepted by linebacker Mark Simoneau on the K-State 49-yard line. Simoneau's pick was the Cats' second turnover recovery less than three minutes into the game.

The Cats converted the turnover into 7 more after Bishop capped off a three-play, 19-second drive with a 37-yard touchdown pass to Aaron Lockett. K-State held the ball for only 1:46 in the first quarter, a testament to the team's big-play ability.

After Baylor missed a 42-yard field goal attempt by Matt Bryant, K-State marched down the field and was knocking on the door again before being halted on the 2-yard line.

Faced with fourth down and inches, running back Frank Murphy attempted a dive over center, but was stuffed by the Baylor defensive line.

Following the exchange of a few punts, the Cats put together their first sustained drive of the game, going 84 yards over 10 plays in 3:34. Bishop completed the drive with a 6-yard touchdown pass to Darnell McDonald, putting K-State up 21-0, a score they carried into halftime.

The Cats began the third quarter with a drive that seemed to signal the second-half offensive explosion to which K-State fans have grown accustomed. However, after a 41-yard Bishop pass to Lockett placed the Cats at the Bears' 5-yard line, K-State's offense went south, resulting in a 25-yard field goal attempt that looked routine for Martin Gramatica.

The All-America candidate's attempt sailed low and right though, and for the second time in the game the Cats walked away empty-handed inside the red zone.

With an awakened crowd back in the game, the Baylor offense responded. After a 13-yard screen pass from James to fullback Derek Lagway on third down sustained the drive, James scampered 41 yards on a keeper to put the Bears on the

STEVE HEBERT/KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's David Allen returns a punt 77 yards to the end zone during the fourth quarter Saturday in Waco, Texas. The punt return for a touchdown was his fourth of the year.

Cats' 4-yard line. James finished the afternoon as Baylor's leading rusher with 92 yards on 11 carries.

"There were too many mental errors and missed tackles," defensive end Joe Bob Clements said. "Obviously, the scoreboard doesn't always tell the whole story."

After Baylor ended the Cats' season-long shutout streak in the third quarter with a 45-yard field goal, K-State finished the afternoon with three touchdowns to add to the wet Baylor crowds' homecoming misery. The loss ended the Bears' four-game winning streak and dropped BU to 2-7 for the year, 1-5 in the Big 12 Conference.

On a day that featured many bizarre plays and penalty calls, perhaps the strangest one occurred when the game was decidedly in hand. With K-State leading 35-6 late in the fourth quarter, Baylor punted from its own 21-yard line, sending a 50-yard punt to return man David Allen.

Waiting to receive the kick, Allen was hit by a Baylor defender almost right as the ball arrived. The punt touched Allen, and flags were thrown due to the defenders' interference on the punt reception.

Allen, realizing the ball was still live to the offense, scooped it up and ran past players who believed the play was dead.

Needing to beat only the kicker, Allen burst past him for a mysterious 77-yard touchdown that left both players and coaches baffled.

"I think Baylor's youngsters just went to sleep," Snyder said, adding that the result of the play astonished him.

"It was certainly appropriate for David to pick it up. He was alert enough to do that. And if he had done it right, we probably wouldn't have scored, so how do you figure that?"

Now that the roadblocks have been cleared for this weekend's showdown with Nebraska, questions about overlooking opponents have been laid to rest, and thoughts on the showdown finally can be mentioned. However, after so many reassurances from Snyder that K-State would not look ahead to the game with the Huskers, when would the team start to think about the showdown?

According to Snyder, "We already have."

POLLS

UCLA (8-0, 6-0 Pac-10) barely extended its winning streak to 18 games with a last-minute 41-34 victory over Oregon State. The Bruins needed Cade McNown's 61-yard touchdown pass to Brad Melsby with 21 seconds left to pull out another close game.

"It's hard on 18-, 19-, 20-year-old kids, and it's hard on a 52-year-old man," UCLA coach Bob Toledo said after the Bruins' second straight narrow victory.

"I'm extremely proud of our guys. They know how to win. They never give up, they never quit. They just keep battling."

The Bowl Championship Series standings will be released Monday, and it appears Tennessee and K-State will be in the top two places. The BCS matches the first- and second-place teams in the Fiesta Bowl, with a national title on the line.

Tennessee (8-0, 6-0 SEC) moved into the No. 1 spot for the first time since Nov. 12, 1956 (the Vols held the spot for one week). Tennessee beat Alabama-Birmingham 37-13 Saturday as Tee Martin threw for one TD and ran for another.

The schedule gets tougher in the coming weeks. On Saturday, the Vols entertain No. 10 Arkansas (8-0) followed by a visit from Tim Couch and Kentucky (6-3) Nov. 21.

"It's been quite an accomplishment for this team," Vols coach Phillip Fulmer said. "I'm sure, though, we'll be focused on Arkansas."

No. 2 Kansas State (9-0, 6-0) just keeps piling up impressive wins. Michael Bishop threw for two TDs and ran for another as the Wildcats beat Baylor 49-6 for their 17th-straight victory.

On Saturday, K-State plays perhaps the biggest game in school history — against Nebraska, a team that has won 29 in a row over the Wildcats.

Chiefs lose 4th straight, fall to 4-5 on year

By JIM COUR
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — The Marty Schottenheimer Era in Kansas City, Mo., is going sour.

The Chiefs coach benched Elvis Grbac late in the first half, but it didn't do any good as the Seattle Seahawks, relying mainly on their defense, beat Kansas City 24-12 Sunday.

The Seahawks (5-4), losers of four of their previous five, won despite a sputtering offense that had only 202 yards.

It was Kansas City's fourth consecutive defeat, the first time that has happened to the Chiefs since Schottenheimer took over as coach of the franchise in 1989. The Chiefs (4-5) could miss the playoffs for the third time in Schottenheimer's successful tenure in Kansas City.

And Seattle, an old Chiefs patsy, beat Kansas City for the first time since 1994 to end a seven-game winning streak by Kansas City over the Seahawks. The Chiefs had beaten them 14 out of 15.

The Seahawks had a 24-6 lead at the halftime — thanks to their defense, which prompted Schottenheimer to yank Grbac, his starter for the fourth-straight week after suffering a separated shoulder in Week 1, with 1:49 left in the first half.

Grbac came out of the game and watched from the sidelines with his baseball cap on after he threw a pass that Darrin Smith intercepted and ran back 26 yards for a touchdown with 1:49 left in the first half.

Rich Gannon, Grbac's replacement, couldn't get anything going until the Chiefs scored a meaningless touchdown with 3 seconds remaining.

Ricky Watters scored two touchdowns on 1-yard runs in the opening quarter, the second after Shawn Springs intercepted a pass by Grbac and returned 22 yards to the Kansas City 6. Watters scored three plays later to give his team a 14-3 lead with 3:44 to go in the first period.

Watters' first TD run capped a 77-yard drive the first time the Seahawks had the ball.

After Moon completed a 45-yard pass to the Kansas City 21, Todd Peterson kicked a 38-yard field goal. Smith's TD after his interception came 11 seconds later.

Pete Stoyanovich kicked field goals of 53 and 38 yards in the first half, but he missed a 43-yard attempt with 3:52 remaining that would have cut Seattle's lead to 14-9.

The Chiefs were penalized 17 times for 152 yards, 2 yards shy of the team record. A penalty cost them a TD on Seattle's first offensive play.

Games offer chance to socialize, play

By TL MEYER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students from around the world competed for medals last weekend at the second-annual International Olympics at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

K-State international students, international members of the community and non-international students participated in the olympics, which were sponsored by the International Coordinating Council. Contestants competed in five different events, including badminton, basketball, volleyball, table tennis and indoor soccer.

Opening ceremonies were Friday evening in the Rec Complex's Intramural Gallery. Games were Friday evening and Saturday afternoon and evening. Closing ceremonies took place Sunday afternoon at the International Student Center.

In the opening ceremonies, Emad Yaseen, ICC president and graduate student in food science, spoke to the participants.

"Remember, we're here to have fun but most important, to make lifelong friends," he said.

The first rounds of badminton, basketball and indoor soccer took place after the ceremonies.

"It's fun — a nice way to socialize and good competition," said Dan Dempsey, a Manhattan resident who had lost in the first round of badminton doubles with his partner, Thomas Ehrenreich, graduate student in physics.

Ehrenreich offered a reason for their loss.

"I haven't played in about six months," he said.

Yaseen said the olympics were friendship games, but the indoor soccer did tend to get aggressive at times.

Medals were awarded to the event winners at the closing ceremonies, said Mahwish Aqeel, co-vice president of ICC and junior in business administration.

Referees for the events were volunteers, said Li-Chun Lin, public relations for ICC and graduate student in hotel and restaurant management.

Most of the players kept score themselves, so the referee was a neutral person to help decide close calls, she said.

The International Olympics were created for students to come together, play and socialize, said Khatazo Gwakuba, former co-vice president and graduate student in adult, occupational and continuing education. Gwakuba helped to create the olympics last fall.

Alan Aubert, ICC adviser and program coordinator at the International Student Center, said they chose to continue the olympics this year after last year's positive response.

"The olympics were a real success last year," Aubert said. "It was nice to see students enjoying it and getting to know each other."

ICC is kind of an umbrella group, governing all other international organizations on campus, Aubert said.

"The ICC tries to make people aware of the international diversity within the community," Yaseen said.

Manhattan residents voice tap water concerns

City says sediments coloring tap water pose no real health threat

By SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's an informal log that gets right to the point with simple, consistent entries.

Each entry has a date, time and color. The color entries are "red," "brown" and "yellow."

If the color line said "clear," there wouldn't be a need for the journal, but there is a problem.

The entries refer to the color of Henrietta Perry's tap water.

Perry said she's kept this list to describe what color her water has been on at least 64 occurrences since 1993.

"Whenever I noticed it, I would put it down," Perry said.

Perry, who lives on Sloan Street, took the list with her to the Oct. 29 City Commission policy session to illustrate a problem that has plagued her and her neighbors for an estimated nine years.

She didn't end up using it, she said, as the commission heard results of an ongoing water-quality study by Black and Veatch, an engineering consulting firm based in Kansas City, Mo., on the same subject.

The presentation by Black and Veatch representative, David Egger, included the current hypothesis as to why the water supply for residents in parts of the Northview neighborhood, near Sunset Cemetery and west of the K-State campus, has been showing up as anything but clear on select days.

Egger said the sediments, though unattractive, pose no health threat and are likely the result of the Manhattan's Water Treatment Plant's use of two simultaneous treatment routes.

Tests show safe water exiting each of the routes — one constructed in 1970 and the other in 1990 — but the two water flows vary in characteristics like pH, Egger said.

As a result, the water from the two routes are mixed and added at varying concentrations every day to the pipes across the city. Acidity and alkalinity are in constant flux from one day to the next.

Beneficial forms of calcium carbonate and microorganisms that normally adhere to the inside of water pipes are unable to stand the varying environment and detach, bringing corroded iron pipe particles into the water with them.

Mary Schlegel, who also lives on Sloan Street, brought a quart jar filled with the reddish water from her faucet to the meeting.

"It's bad. It's really bad. You go through your day by what color your water is," Schlegel said.

Since August, Schlegel said she has had to buy a water filter just to stand using the fluid.

"I just couldn't make coffee. It just didn't taste good," she said.

"Nearly all of us have some sort of filter or buy bottled water. I do both," Hanly Street resident Betty Slemen said.

Another concern with the colored water has been doing laundry, even if it is safe to drink, Slemen said.

"You don't know when you can do your laundry," she said. Even if the water is clear at the beginning of the cycle, it can change in the middle and ruin white clothing, she said.

The strangest problem, however, has been a lack of awareness. Slemen said the water problems had been mentioned at an earlier city meeting this year concerning street repairs near Northview.

"Everybody look surprised and said 'What problem?'" she said.

City Commissioner Roger Reitz said he wasn't aware of the details until the last six months. Discussing the problems with residents like Slemen and others who have made phone calls has helped, he said.

Reitz said he would support rebates for useless water that residents have already paid for, saying he thought it would be only fair.

"I found it offensive myself to think that it could happen anywhere. The Northview people have been very patient. If I were them, I'd be pounding on the table," Reitz said.

Utilities director Jack Messer, on the job since August, said his focus will be on identifying the problem's source and what changes would work into long-term plans for the plant.

"If you ask me, it's unacceptable. When I turn on the tap, I want it to be clear, and it shouldn't be different for anyone else. These things are not harmful, but they're definitely not aesthetically pleasing," he said.

Messer said the plant is being addressed as the likely source of the problem. The two differing treatment routes are unlikely to successfully calibrate, but expanding storage for the treated water might help, he said.

Doubling the plant's million-gallon capacity may make water quality more consistent before directing it into distribution, Messer said.

"The idea is that if you have the ability to store this water for a longer period of time, the characteristics will be more aligned," he said.

Expansion will be studied in the next year to determine how it fits the plant's long-term plans, he said.

In addition, Messer said he recommended to City Manager Gary Greer that the $200,000 budgeted for maintenance in 1999 be applied toward replacing pipes in Northview.

In the meantime, Messer said citizens have been urged to call City Hall with any water problems. Complaints will be registered in an ongoing database to map problem areas for the future.

"I'm sure it's not just that area, but I don't like to make guesses," he said.

RECYCLE

Howie's will be donated to Flint Hills Breadbasket.

There's only one problem — anticipating the number of tailgaters who will donate their cans.

"It's going to be very difficult," Woods said. "It's going to be the most crowded game of the year. It will take as much coordination as possible."

The activity has surpassed many people's expectations.

"[Meredith] started a statewide program," said Steve Galitzer, K-State director of environmental health and safety. "It's really caught on."

Galitzer said the Nebraska event is only part of the whole recycling process K-State is planning. Nearly $60,000 in City/University Project Fund money has been allocated for K-State's recycling program. Projects funded by the money include 25 clustered recycling units placed on campus, in Triangle and CicCo parks and near city and county offices.

The City/University Project Fund uses money from sales tax collected on campus to fund projects that are mutually beneficial to the university and the city.

The Campus Recycling Advisory Committee has been established to determine exactly where the canisters will be placed and how collections will be administered. The budget includes nearly $17,000 in student wages for assisting in the collections.

Howie's Recycling will buy the recyclable products from K-State. Paying fewer tipping charges and custodial fees resulting from hauling waste to the landfill, Woods said, will save K-State tens of thousands of dollars.

The administration has pledged to donate $33 for each ton of aluminum recycled to the program. However, the new recycling program will not pay for itself immediately.

"It won't be cost-effective in the beginning," Woods said. "In the long run of 15 to 20 years, it would be."

Woods said he initiated the recycling program at Northern Arizona University. He said that once the program has its own facility to house materials, the university won't have to take them to Howie's on a daily basis, and K-State could sell recyclable materials themselves to companies who buy it in bulk.

"We'd get the revenue Howie gets for it," Woods said. "As the program grows, we can get more grants to help build our own facilities. Howie's is working well with us, but if we'd bring (our own recycled products) to our own facility, we'd make more."

Woods said he hoped the new program is successful.

"This is just a start," he said.

HARTMAN

President Jon Wefald said he knew Hartman personally, and he continued to remain active after retiring.

"He loved to golf, and he loved to read, and he kept up with friends," Wefald said. "And of course, he loved his family."

Hartman led the Wildcats to three Big 8 Conference titles, two Big 8 tournaments and nine seasons with 20 or more wins. His 31-year coaching record was 589-279. The National Association of Basketball Coaches named Hartman Coach of the Year after the 1981 season, when K-State made it to the NCAA West Regional Finals.

JACOBSON

Brown said Hartman even came out of retirement to coach the last six games of the women's basketball season in 1996. The team's coach, Brian Agler, resigned in February 1996 after an investigation into a rules violation by the NCAA.

"The department had six games left, and it was obvious they had to make a change," Brown said. "Jack was still active, so they approached him to see if he was at all interested. He certainly stepped up to help out the program."

Brit Jacobson, senior in elementary education, was on the team when Hartman coached those last six games. She said Hartman set a good example for the team both on and off the court.

"We called him our knight in shining armor," Jacobson said.

"He was just a great, genuine guy and an unbelievable person. He gave us a lot of self confidence, and we were just amazed at how much he knew about basketball."

Hartman played basketball and football at Oklahoma State University, and he played professional football for Saskatchewan in the Canadian Football League.

He coached for seven years at Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College, where he went 150-46. In 1962, his team had a perfect record and won the national title. In his eight years coaching at Southern Illinois-Carbondale, the Salukis earned NCAA division tournament berths four times and went to the National Invitational Tournament championships twice.

In 1983, Hartman led the United States to a gold medal as basketball coach for the Pan-American Games.

The funeral will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at Ahearn Field House. Interment will follow at Sunrise Cemetery in Manhattan.

Wefald said Hartman's will be the first funeral in Ahearn — an appropriate place to remember the coach because his presence still can be felt there.

"To me, it is absolutely fitting that the funeral be at Ahearn," Wefald said. "There was a magic to Ahearn that Jack Hartman radiated."

Wefald said Hartman appreciated the support he received from the Manhattan community.

"He knew in his own heart and mind that K-Staters loved him," he said.

Memorial contributions may be made to the American Heart Association, First United Methodist Church in Manhattan or the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, in care of Yorgensen-Meloan-Londeen Funeral Home.

Hartman is survived by his wife, Pat, three daughters and three grandchildren.

Nick Bratkovic and Nate Jenkins contributed to this story.

was trying to find a place on campus where he fit."

Musick and two other students will speak at the memorial service, which will include a few of Richardson's favorite songs. Richardson's mother could not attend the service, but she sent a letter that will be read.

Don Fallon, coordinator of campus religious services, said the letter speaks highly of Richardson. Fallon said Richardson's mother wrote that her son was a father figure to his brother and three sisters.

The Rev. Victor Force of the First Presbyterian Church will lead the service.

"Tom didn't attend my church, but we met a few times before. We met because he's a friend of a friend, and he has asked me for spiritual advice before," Force said.

Police still are investigating the shooting and haven't released many details. The day after the shooting, Riley County Police Department Capt. Steve French said Lawless and Richardson had "a relationship that wasn't going so well," but wouldn't elaborate.

Musick said he didn't know Lawless.

"We can speculate, but no one who knows (Richardson) here really knows who that guy was," Musick said.

Committee proposes Homecoming changes

By AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Homecoming is a time when school spirit and enthusiasm are high, but proposed changes for next year's Homecoming could change how that spirit and enthusiasm are generated.

The All-University Homecoming Committee is recommending several proposals that would change the requirements for the body building and Paint It Purple contests. The final decision will be made next spring by a subcommittee of representatives from living groups.

The committee is proposing eliminating all stunt work from the bodybuilding routines. Safety and time concerns are two reasons for the changes. The bodybuilding proposal also would include a possible name change for the competition, if the stunt work was eliminated.

Several accidents, which included broken bones

Changes would affect bodybuilding competition, Paint It Purple; final vote expected next spring and a ruptured spleen, occurred during bodybuilding practices this year. The large amount of time spent choreographing, rehearsing and performing the routines also caused some people to look at the time being diverted from studies.

Committee chair Heather Lansdowne said the elimination of stunt work is a solution to risks such as students' health and academics.

"In the past few years, body building has increased in its difficulty level to the point where students have experienced concerns about safety and time," Lansdowne said. "We do not want to encourage an environment that would jeopardize academic success and safety."

The proposed changes would encourage more dancing, cheering, chanting and other activities, such as skits and lip syncs. It would not allow participants to be more than one person high, which would eliminate all formations.

Lansdowne said she had received feedback from students and others who said changes needed to be made, and some bodybuilding participants said they agreed.

"I wouldn't have a problem with it," said Brian Glick, junior in radio and television and a member of the Marlatt-West bodybuilding team. "The intention is not to focus on stunts but on dance and spirit."

Other participants had different views. Kelly Stewart, sophomore in criminology, has participated in body building for two years with Chi Omega sorority. She said she doesn't agree with the proposed changes.

"I think it's a bad idea altogether," Stewart said. "The whole reason people get so excited is because of bodybuilding."

Stewart said safety wouldn't be an issue if people reinforced spotting.

"I think it's people being careless," Stewart said. "If people concentrate on spotting, they'd be OK."

Todd Briggeman, senior in mechanical engineering, said the complexity of the routines is the driving force behind body building.

"The whole idea of the bodybuilding routine is

Clinton subject to questioning by FBI agents

■ Investigation will determine if Clinton benefited illegally from ads.

By TERENCE HUNT
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In legal woes on a new front, President Clinton was questioned by FBI agents and Justice Department lawyers Monday in an investigation of whether he benefited illegally from Democratic Party advertisements during the 1996 campaign.

The questioning came in a 90-day inquiry begun in September to determine if an independent counsel should be appointed to conduct a full investigation. Attorney General Janet Reno has until Dec. 7 to decide whether to ask a special three-judge panel to name a special prosecutor.

If Reno proceeds, Clinton would be the first president to be investigated by two independent counsels.

KU binge drinking prompts strict ban

■ Officials want to implement plan for campus-wide zero-tolerance.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — The University of Kansas announced plans Monday night to tighten its enforcement of alcohol bans on campus and to put pressure on fraternities to ban drinking.

A student survey last month found 58 percent of 900 students questioned said they recently had participated in binge drinking, defined as five or more alcoholic drinks in one sitting. The students also said they consumed an average of 7.4 drinks per week.

"We suspected that some KU students were abusing alcohol," said Kathleen McCluskey-Fawcett, associate provost for academic services. "The data simply confirm our suspicions."

To combat drinking on campus, Provost David Shulenburg on Monday announced plans to implement zero-tolerance enforcement of the university's alcohol ban in dorms and to discontinue beer sales at the bowling alley in the student union.

Shulenburg also said university officials planned to meet with fraternity leaders to encourage them to ban alcohol on their property. All University of Kansas

Davis dismissed from team

K-State basketball coach Tom Asbury announced today Duane Davis has been dismissed from the Wildcat basketball team due to disciplinary reasons.

A member of the 1997-98 Big 12 Conference All-Newcomer team, Davis started 19 games at point guard for the Wildcats last season. The junior from Los Angeles ranked third in the Big 12 Conference with an assist-to-turnover ratio of 2.11-to-1. He averaged 7.3 points per game and 3.3 assists per game.

On-the-job training

Natalie Kammen, left, and Penny Rauchholz, both seniors in hotel and restaurant management, put the sheets on a bed in a third-floor hotel room Sunday afternoon at the Holiday Inn Holidome in Manhattan. Kammen and Rauchholz clean rooms as part of their Lodging Practicum class.

Students gain housekeeping experience in management class

The most interaction with a hotel's housekeeping staff that people might have is seeing a loaded cart complete with cleaning supplies, a vacuum and trash container sitting in the hall.

Hotel and restaurant management students are getting more than that in the Lodging Practicum offered every spring and fall semester.

"You are working as a housekeeper in a hotel," said Carl Boger, assistant professor of hotel and restaurant management and dietetics. "It's hard work."

This program teaches students how to clean rooms correctly and how to gain the respect of and interact with the housekeeping staff they might someday manage.

"One of the challenges of young managers that are 21, 22, 23 years old is when they graduate, they will be managing people 30, 40, 50 years old," Boger said.

Changing procedures and having empathy for employees are two of the situations in which students must learn to adapt.

"Once they go through the course, they realize the professional housekeepers that are out there — what they go through on a daily basis," Boger said. "They get frustrated. They get angry. Some of them do enjoy it."

Jeremy Holder, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said he better understands the difficulties a hotel's housekeeping staff might face.

"I've been told how to do the same thing three different ways," Holder said. "Different people tell you that the hotel has changed its policy. 'This is how we do it now.'"

Students use their sense of fun to make cleaning the rooms less tedious.

"We made it fun," Maggie Bowen, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "We would open the doors and turn on the radios in the room while we were cleaning."

Though it sounds like fun and games, Brenda Runnebaum, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said she had to do something just to keep her sanity.

"When you sit there and do the same thing, I didn't understand how they could do it day after day," Runnebaum said. The day-after-day commitment did not suit all of the students.

"I don't want the 24-hour demands," Melissa Jones, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said. "I got into the field looking to meet people, interact with people. I know that I have no desire to work in hotels and restaurants."

The desire to be in the field is one that the Holiday Inn Holidome in Manhattan has found in many of its employees from K-State.

"What we find is the work ethic of these people coming out of K-State is excellent," Henry Naber, manager, said. "We've hired at least 15 graduates for management positions from K-State."

The Holidome puts students through the same process as regular employees.

"We give them orientation and safety training just like a normal employee," Naber said. "After that, we have them critique us, then not only is it coming from someone who is going to school for it, they have also done the work

A washcloth sits on a clipboard holding an inspection list. The list is used to make sure all of the elements of a clean room are checked and completed.

involved."

The work involved is not the only concern of Boger's. "I'm more concerned with the personal empathy," Boger said.

Holder said the lesson has been learned.

"I appreciate the newfound respect I have for what some may call the backbone of most hotels, which is the housekeeping department," Holder said.

Architecture professor to lecture tonight

Finding the links between history and urban design theory is something with which Colin Rowe has built a reputation as a preeminent educator and theoretician of this century.

Rowe, a professor of architecture who has been enormously influential with post-modern architects and on contemporary architectural thinking, will give an Oscar Ekdahl Memorial Lecture at 7 tonight in Union Forum Hall.

His lecture is entitled "The 1920s, Le Corbusier, John Russell Pope, and Others."

Among Rowe's accomplishments, he has written the now-classic book "Collage City," a collection of essays in "As I Was Saying," and "The Architecture of Good Intentions: Towards a Possible Retrospect," which is now out of stock.

He has taught at the University of Notre Dame, Syracuse University and Cornell University. Originally from England and educated at the University of Liverpool and Cambridge University, Rowe has received the Royal Gold Medal for Architecture from the Royal Institute of British Architects.

Police fatally shoot teen following chase

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Police shot and killed a 13-year-old boy early Monday after he reportedly rammed a truck into a patrol car, striking one officer.

Police identified the victim Monday afternoon as Timothy L. Wilson of Kansas City.

Officers tried to stop Wilson about 12:30 a.m. Monday after they noticed him driving a pickup truck erratically through a northeast Kansas City apartment complex, police said.

Wilson refused to stop and ran a police car off the road, said Kansas City police Sgt. Floyd Mitchell.

Another patrol car joined the pursuit a short time later and that car also was forced off the road, Mitchell said.

The truck got stuck in the mud a few blocks away and officers surrounded the car.

Mitchell said the officers beat on the windows of the truck and asked Wilson to get out. Wilson then put the truck in reverse and rammed a police car parked behind it. The truck's mirror hit one of the officers and knocked him to the ground, Mitchell said.

"At that point, the driver put the car in drive and pulled forward (towards the officers) and the officers opened fire, fatally wounding the driver," Mitchell said.

After Wilson was shot, the officers took him out of the truck to administer first-aid, police chief Floyd Barch said in a press release.

During the investigation, officers recovered a loaded handgun from the floor of the truck and suspected illegal narcotics in Wilson's pockets, Barch said.

The officer hit by the truck suffered bruises but was otherwise unharmed, Mitchell said.

It was not immediately clear how many of the officers opened fire.

All four officers involved in the incident were put on administrative leave Monday pending further investigation.

Brazil opens market to some U.S. wheat

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Brazil agreed to reopen its markets to some U.S. wheat Monday, ending a two-year ban caused by concerns about harmful diseases.

"This agreement renews access for U.S. farmers to a major wheat market," said Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman.

Under the deal, Brazil will accept hard red winter wheat from Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas. Glickman said if the past is an indicator, U.S. farmers can expect a market for up to 760,000 tons of wheat a year.

Brazil closed its markets to U.S. wheat in September 1996 amid concerns over what is known as TCK fungus.

U.S. officials said exports to Brazil averaged about $56 million a year before the ban.

Brazil indicated in April it would lift the ban but the deal only was signed formally Monday. The agreement followed several days of negotiations with U.S. officials who traveled to Brazil.

Officials from Brazil also traveled to the United States to survey the crop safety here.

Brazil imports about six million metric tons of wheat a year, most of it from Argentina.

Presidential adviser will be questioned

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court refused on Monday to shield President Clinton's closest adviser, Bruce Lindsey, from being questioned about his conversations with the president in the Monica Lewinsky scandal.

House impeachment investigators immediately weighed whether to call Lindsey.

The justices declined to hear a White House appeal that Clinton's conversations with Lindsey should be protected by attorney-client privilege, a claim already rejected by two lower courts.

Lindsey testified four times before the grand jury investigating the Lewinsky matter but refused to answer certain questions, including those about his conversations with Clinton, because the president invoked the privilege.

The ruling opened the door for either Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr or Congress to question Lindsey on those matters. Starr's intention was unclear, but a Judiciary Committee official, speaking only on condition of anonymity, said calling Lindsey an impeachment witness is now under active discussion. No decision has been made, the official said.

Barring a new legal fight, the ruling could open the door for Starr or Congress to press Lindsey for information in those areas. The House Judiciary Committee hasn't sought to question Lindsey during the impeachment hearings set to begin next week.

In a separate case, the high court refused to shield Secret Service officers from having to testify in the Lewinsky case about information they learned while protecting the president.

Both cases were rejected by 7-2 votes.

Inserting extra genes could enable patients to grow own bypasses

DALLAS — For the first time, doctors have shown that by inserting extra genes into the heart, they can enable patients to grow their own bypasses.

The approach someday could spare patients the need for bypass surgery, in which a piece of blood vessel is grafted into place to create a detour around a blockage.

Experts said this new gene-insertion procedure, tested initially in the legs and now in the heart, represents the first example of gene therapy actually correcting a human illness.

Several competing teams of doctors have injected a gene that makes a protein called vascular endothelial growth factor — or VEGF-E, pronounced vedge-eff — into the hearts of people who have clogged vessels but are too sick to undergo ordinary bypass surgery or angioplasty. Ordinarily, the gene only does its work during fetal development in the womb.

The doctors found clear, and in some cases dramatic, evidence that the gene prompts the heart to sprout tiny new blood vessels to nourish blood-starved muscle and relieve crippling chest pain.

Nevertheless, the procedure is still highly experimental and is probably several years away from routine use.

Associate dean of veterinary medicine and his wife collect quilts

By JENNIFER WHITE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The green log-cabin-patterned quilt that hangs on the wall is protected by sleeves placed over the fluorescent bulbs that light Ronnie Elmore's office. Elmore, assistant dean of veterinary medicine, said these sleeves filter out 98 percent of ultraviolet light from the bulbs, reducing the damage done to the quilt by UV rays.

"Quilts should be kept out of any kind of direct light," Elmore said. "On sunny days, I keep the blinds in my office shut."

Quilts have become an involved hobby for the Elmores. Carol Elmore is a certified quilt appraiser; she and Ronnie Elmore conduct lectures about quilts to different quilt guilds and other groups, as well as collecting their own quilts.

"I probably do a lecture, on average, about once a month at least — some months it's a little more than that," Carol Elmore said.

The couple's latest lecture tells of the life of Ida Eisenhower, Dwight D. Eisenhower's mother.

"We tell her biography and interspersed it with quilts of the right period of time," Ronnie Elmore said. "She was born in Virginia, so we showed pictures of quilts she probably made in Virginia. We follow her life chronologically with quilts."

Some 27 quilted items, including quilted pillows and unfinished quilts made by Ida Eisenhower are on display at the Eisenhower Center in Abilene, Kan. The Elmores have taken pictures of the items for use in their lectures.

The Elmores not only tell others about their hobby, they also write about it. Several of their articles have been featured in American Quilter magazine. There are also articles written about the couple's work.

"The editor of American Patchwork Quilting introduced herself to me at a program," Ronnie Elmore said. "There were two programs going on the same weekend. Carol went to one, I went to the other. When I got there, there were 300 women and maybe three men."

After the conference, the editor called the Elmores and asked them if the magazine could do a story about them, their mutual love of quilts and their knowledge of quilt history.

"The important thing to us is that we like the quilt history," Ronnie Elmore said.

History is important to them, but the theme of a quilt is also a factor when they are looking to add to their collection.

"Right now we are looking for quilts with a presidential theme," Ronnie Elmore said.

These can include quilts made from the scarves used as campaign items for Roosevelt and Eisenhower, but they also can include presidential pets.

"There is a quilt that depicts a Scottie dog," Ronnie Elmore said. "It's called the Fala quilt because it was designed

"If we see a quilt that has FABRICS THAT HAVE DOGS IN THEM OR ACTUAL QUILTS MADE ON DOG THEMES, SUCH AS FALA QUILT, THOSE ARE LIKELY TO CATCH OUR EYE."

— RONNIE ELMORE

ASSOCIATE DEAN OF VETERINARY MEDICINE

after Franklin D. Roosevelt's Scottie dog, Fala."

Dogs are another quilt characteristic that gets the Elmores' attention.

"If we see a quilt that has fabrics that have dogs in them or actual quilts made on dog themes, such as the Fala quilt, those are likely to catch our eye," Ronnie Elmore said.

When it comes to looking at quilts, Carol Elmore is no amateur. She is a certified quilt appraiser and until recently was the only one in Kansas. She said she does three kinds of appraisals: insurance-replacement appraisals, fair-market-value appraisals and donation appraisals.

"I'm certified by the American Quilter's Society, which is a group in Paducah, Ky., and they sponsor conferences and various quilting activities," she said.

To become a certified quilt appraiser, a person must take courses such as professional appraiser classes, quilt history, quilt dating and even some public-relations courses. After taking a written examination, the society examines the person's credentials.

"It's not quite that simple. You don't just take one class and then take a test," Carol Elmore said. "I started working on it in 1990 and then didn't actually take the exam until 1995."

Taking their time is something that most quilters do, Carol Elmore said. When they buy fabric, they don't immediately make a quilt out of it.

"There are some motivated people who buy the fabric and then make a quilt out of it right away," she said.

However, the quilt she made for her son, Andrew, is not one that got put together right away.

"I bought the fabric in 1979. I was going to make it while I was pregnant," she said. "Then Andrew came along, and I didn't get the quilt finished until he was 14."

Though she said Andrew exaggerates by saying the quilt took 25 years to make, she did say the quilt's fabric had seen many miles and three states.

"I bought the front fabric in Missouri, and then the backing I bought when we were in Texas," Carol Elmore said. "I finished it off when we were here in Kansas."

Ronnie Elmore, assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, and his wife, Carol, appraise, collect and lecture about quilts from the past.

Homecoming changes necessary, long overdue

We are happy that after all of the turmoil of this year's Homecoming, representatives to the All-University Homecoming Committee are making efforts to improve the competition.

The committee looked at revising several homecoming competitions most closely after complications with attendance plagued the service-oriented Paint It Purple and injuries were on the rise over previous years in the bodybuilding stunt competition.

We are led to believe that some participants in the Paint It Purple competition were unable to show for the service project because of scheduling conflicts, while others chose to leave sites early because of K-State football games. This led to the project getting canceled because sponsors were unhappy with the turnout.

To rectify the situation, the All-University Homecoming Committee has suggested individual pairings select their own service project and be given a window from bidding in the spring to Homecoming the following October to complete the project. We would caution that many of the greek pairings already have annual philanthropy projects during this time.

Since the goal of Paint It Purple is to perform a service project for the Manhattan community beyond those that the pairing would do otherwise, we would suggest that some stipulations need to be made to make it a success. For instance, make sure that the project completed is unique to the pairing. Make certain the project directly affects the Manhattan community, and make certain that project effectiveness is measured as much as project participation.

This year's bodybuilding competition will be remembered as one of the most punishing in K-State history. Over the course of one eventful evening, homecoming pairings reported six injuries, several of which required hospital attention from broken bones and one ruptured spleen. While at the time it might have been safer to cancel the event altogether, the All-University Homecoming Committee felt that a safety workshop and spotters added to the competition were the best way to deal with the situation.

Other concerns surrounded the amount of time students are asked to put into the bodybuilding activity. Many participate at the expense of their grades.

Now, however, the committee has decided that body building requires a more drastic approach, and it has determined the best way to deal with bodybuilding risk is by eliminating the stunting altogether. The result will include more dancing, chanting, singing, lip synching and cheering.

Some early concerns, however, surround whether men will be enthusiastic about participation and whether the competition will embody the necessary spirit. We would encourage the committee to address these issues. We also would encourage it to be aware of the fact that changing the nature of the competition does not remove the opportunity pairings have to demand long hours and hard work out of their participants, should the contest become as competitive as body building did.

Nevertheless, we recognize the change as an opportunity for more people to get involved in homecoming competitions, as well as the opportunity for pairings to perform larger, more planned service projects. We encourage the All-University Homecoming Committee to continue to view what it does critically and to adopt the plans it has presented.

That way, we all should be proud when next year's Homecoming rolls around.

K-State fan warns against Red Scare

Editor,

I am ashamed of the K-State fans who are selling their K-State vs. Nebraska tickets to the highest paying Nebraska fan.

When we went to Boulder for the Colorado game and our friends tried to buy a ticket from a Colorado fan, he wouldn't sell it to them because we were K-State fans. He said that if he couldn't sell it to a Colorado fan, he wouldn't sell it. I was proud of him for not selling his ticket to them. It showed us how much he supported his team. We could learn from him.

There are plenty of K-State fans who want tickets, so if you must sell your tickets, sell them to K-State fans. We want as much as purple in the stands as we can get. In years past, Nebraska has come into our stadium and made more noise than us. But not this year; this is the year of the Cats, the K-State Wildcats and we need to show them as much support as possible.

Sell your ticket only to K-State fans! Support your team!

It's time to make a choice: football or academics?

VIEWPOINT

MARY VANLEEUVEN

I think our society has lost something important — its emphasis on the intellect. I'd like to tackle the topic of football to elaborate on our obsession with violence and our lack of value for education. I'll use the K-State football program as an example.

Some people love football. I understand it takes a lot of skill and practice to succeed in the game, but I just see it as a barbaric, toned-down version of "Faces of Death." It's all about running into people, hitting, throwing, grabbing, dragging and catching. Among all this, people get injured in every game. A gash here, a pulled hamstring there.

Two weeks ago, it was rumored that Michael Bishop received a hip injury. I've never met Bishop — I'm sure he's a wonderful guy — and I'm sure a hip injury is something to worry about. However, all I heard was concern for the game. "Bishop is hurt. Will he be able to play?" "If Bishop doesn't play, how will we beat Nebraska?" "Oh my goodness! We have to beat Nebraska!" It was rumored that a human being was injured, and we turn from sympathy for Bishop to sympathy for the fate of K-State football.

I'm all for school spirit, and maybe many will think I'm lacking in that department by scoffing at our football program. My school spirit lies in K-State's academic programs and accomplishments — the real reason we're here. I think we all need to regain some of that pride.

Last year, there was a big fuss over the stadium expansion and whether students should shoulder part of the financial burden. Many of the powers that be supported it — the Student Government Association, President Jon Wefald, a portion of the student body. When a suggestion was made that student fees should be raised to increase the periodicals in our lovely Hale Library — a move that would benefit students, faculty, our quality of education and our Big 12 Conference standing, it seemed like there was much less support. I would be more than happy to have my fees increased a buck or two per credit hour for this worthy cause, and I was amazed at how my student senators, administrators and students were militantly opposed to increasing our library's standing. I see this as a wonderful example of how our campus values athletics over education.

I wonder how many students come to support K-State's speech team. I wonder how many students come to K-State because of their Wildcat pride, which stems largely from the football program. While some might say this form of pride recruitment only benefits K-State, I say it takes emphasis off K-State's wonderful academic programs.

A future employer could look at your résumé and say, "Hey, K-State students puts a lot of pride into their football program," and then look at a Yale student's résumé, not thinking about Yale's insignificant football program, only saying, "Hey, Yale values education over everything else."

While K-State's philosophy is "Putting students first," some figures show otherwise. According to the KSU Foundation's 1996 annual report, more money was earmarked by donors to go to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics than to any other department or college. Compare the $3,943,823 designated for the athletic program to the $1,121,107 designated for the College of Arts and Sciences or the $749,734 designated for Hale Library. Why is it that alumni donors and other contributors fail to see that academic programs need funds just as much as the athletic programs?

I don't like football. That's my opinion. The fact that we need to put more emphasis on academics is something I think we all should be concerned with.

So, what do we value? Do we value violent sports over other sports such as cross-country running — kudos to the never-spoken-about-until-now Big 12 champs, by the way? Do we value athletic competition over academic competition — imagine the GPAs that would rise if all students went about their studies with as much enthusiasm as is put into K-State football? Do we take more pride in our athletic accomplishments than we take in academic accomplishments, such as the fact that K-State has produced 34 Goldwater Scholars?

You can enjoy the carnage of a football game all you want. I'm just saying that in the game of life, our anticipated bowl game win is unimportant.

Why are we really at K-State?

Everyone but America's whyte trash get their own week

VIEWPOINT

CHRIS PIATT

Everybody is offended. In the wake of Violence Against Women Awareness Week, American Indian Awareness Week and several other consciousness-raising efforts, efforts that far too often are relegated to university campuses, I'm finding myself numb. There is so much raging in the world that demographic groups are left to scramble for the few shreds of publicity and news media attention available to increase cultural sensitivity.

It is not fair that we only are allowed to consider the plight of American Indians, the prevalence of domestic violence and the horror of hate crimes for seven days a year. However, with only 52 weeks in the calendar year and hundreds of oppressed groups negotiating for a piece of the pie, our attention spans surely cannot maintain all the awareness and sensitivity necessary for survival. It has become a non-stop assault on the senses. It is nobody's fault, but it leaves compassion in dangerously short supply.

Additionally, when confined to the controlled ecosystem of academia, these causes lose their potency. Once again, nobody's fault. Yet the high-minded nobility often backfires and results in elitism.

My father told me not only can I not please all the people all the time, I'll probably manage to piss off the majority regardless of my opinions. I'm pissed off myself, so it is time to spread the wealth.

I abhor the term "white trash." It is permanently ensconced in our vernacular, and nearly everybody I know says it with startling regularity — passionate rebels and politically correct activists included.

People are not trash. This is one of the only absolutes I have ever learned. To say otherwise is completely destructive. We fight to eliminate countless racial slurs that are not fit to print, although I think we all know what they are. I do not understand the difference between those names and "white trash."

Allow me to assert that some amazingly creative artists work in the country-music industry, some of my best friends live in trailer parks and one of the best professors I've ever had sports pink flamingos on his lawn.

Also, many people in high places have made incest a family affair, even though America would like to believe it is confined to a certain underclass.

My problem is this: I haven't got a damn clue how to create awareness for this. There will never be a "Whyte Trash Awareness Week." I could never find work lobbying for such a cause, because the prevailing notion is these people are the residue of imperialist Puritans who stole from the Native Americans and bought and sold slaves.

Annual income and Judeo-Christian based morals are NOT directly proportional. Yet, misconceptions continue to prevail among some pretty educated folks who confuse compassion with pity.

White trash is sour milk that is discarded after its expiration date, crumpled up notebook paper with bad poetry written on it tossed into waste baskets, and other types of garbage that is literally white. Banana peels are yellow trash. Newspapers are gray trash. Pizza boxes are brown trash.

People are not trash. Oppression sucks. I want to be a mouthpiece for all people who are oppressed. Native Americans are being erased from history altogether. Women are raped on our campus and in their homes every day. Hate crimes in the form of human slaughter are coming back into vogue.

No one wants to talk about it in any kind of genuinely public forum. It is confusing, alienating and numbing. When oppression is so widespread and diversified, speaking up for all of it becomes contradictory.

So this week, I am asking people to stop saying "white trash." It's pretentious, insulting and it reeks of snobbery.

Volunteers give basic treatment for emergencies

■ Fire departments also respond to emergency calls.

By TIM RICHARDSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When emergency care is needed in the sparsely populated areas of north Riley County, the Manhattan Emergency Medical Service pages a group of volunteer first responders who provide basic treatment.

Average EMS response times in Manhattan are less than five minutes. In Riley County, times increase to about 13 minutes. The First Responder Program in the county allows a minimum level of care to be administered before paramedics arrive.

"I think it runs very efficiently," said Larry Couchman, director of emergency services for the EMS and Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. "The community is adequately covered."

Two crews and a supervisor are staffed around the clock, although

The fire department responds to about 1,200 calls each year, with the largest volume of calls received from the station at 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue. This station includes the downtown and Aggieville

Couchman said the addition of a third ambulance would be beneficial.

"The need comes up occasionally. I think we could justify a third truck," he said. "There is not enough funding currently to put an additional ambulance on the street 24 hours a day."

Consolidation between the Manhattan EMS and the Department of Fire Services has been discussed, although there is no specific proposal. Funds for the consolidation were excluded by the city commission.

A consolidation would allow the fire department to respond to EMS calls and provide treatment before the EMS arrives.

"It would let the fire department arrive and provide an intermediate level of care prior to paramedics arriving from the EMS," Couchman said.

The fire department would be able to respond to an emergency quicker than the EMS because three fire stations are located in Manhattan, compared with one EMS location.

Response times by the fire department average about two minutes in Manhattan, although times typically reach six or seven minutes in the southwest part of the city.

"There are just as many disadvantages as there are advantages," Lieutenant Ed Savage, of the EMS, said.

Three additional fire stations are also in the works in Manhattan.

A fire station near the Manhattan Regional Airport is the first priority and is scheduled for the year 2000. Fire services must be on site with flights of 30 or more passengers. The fire station is needed for the airport to become fully certified and possibly add additional commercial carriers for expansion.

A fire station in the southwest part of the city near Kansas Highway 18 and Warner Park Road is scheduled for the year 2002. Another station in the northwest part of the city near Colbert Hills is a long-term project. Each additional station would cost about $1.4 million.

"If the funds are not available, the city commission could put it off a year," Reese said.

The fire department responds to about 1,200 calls each year, with the largest volume of calls received from the station at 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue. This station includes the downtown area and Aggieville.

"It continues to have the most incidents," Reese said. "It's the oldest area of the community."

Four people are staffed with an engine 24 hours a day. Reese said good emergency services are a foundation for any community, and Manhattan fares well in this area.

"As professionals, it is up to us to recommend the best, or what we believe is the best from our experience," he said.

Reese said the fire department will continue to provide the best service for the community in extinguishing fires, enforcing building codes and other services it provides.

"The community should have the right to choose their level of service," he said. "I think we have a real good level here."

Technical college offers students hands-on learning

■ Students gain advantage in job market, real world.

By GABE ECKERT
KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Not everyone pursues a college degree to begin a career. Instead, some choose to refine technical skills in a specialized area.

The Manhattan Area Technical College has been providing this type of career training since 1965.

"Our mission is to prepare students for employment and advancement in technical careers," Blake Flanders, technical college vice president, said.

The technical college offers 11 full-time programs of study, including automotive technology, computer repair, drafting technology and practical nursing. The programs require nine months to two years to complete.

In addition, the college offers a variety of continuing education courses that allow students to gain basic training in a specific area of study. These courses typically range from eight to 60 hours in length.

"Continuing education classes are offered on nearly any subject that is technically related," Flanders said. "We offer classes in bookkeeping, using the Internet, using computer programs and a variety of other areas."

"Our data shows that lecture-style learning is not an effective way to present material. So we try to have an applied approach to presenting material."

The main difference between a technical college and a university is educational philosophy, Flanders said.

"Our data shows that lecture-style learning is not an effective way to present material," he said. "So we try to have an applied approach to presenting material."

"A typical class may have a lecture for 20 minutes and then have a hands-on lab," Flanders said. "Here, the philosophy is that our students learn by doing."

The technical college also has a low student-teacher ratio, Duane Dunn, technical college president, said.

"Our classrooms are very interactive, and we try to provide relevant industry instruction," he said. "As a result, we try to keep our student-teacher ratio at 18 to one."

The combination of hands-on experience and a low student-teacher ratio gives technical college students an advantage in the job market, Dunn said.

More than 85 percent of the college's graduates receive job placement directly after graduation, he said.

Mitch Eaves, second-year student in computer repair, said he will be well prepared for a career in computer repair after graduation.

"The computer-repair program starts out with the basics and then provides hands-on experiences," he said. "They give us theory from the book and then present the theory with hands-on experiences where we can actually solve problems."

"Through our classes, we have visited industry sites and have seen what the real world is doing," Eaves said. "The program has been incredible. It's a lot more than just sitting in a classroom."

K-State still behind in Bowl Championship Series standings

Strength of schedule hurts Cats but looks to improve

MANHATTAN — Thanks to another lopsided road victory and Ohio State's loss to Michigan State, K-State moved up a notch to third this week in the Bowl Championship Series (BCS) rankings.

The BCS rankings released on Monday listed K-State third, at 6.99, behind No. 2 UCLA (5.73) and Tennessee (3.92), which replaced Ohio State as No. 1.

K-State is ranked No. 2 in The Associated Press poll this week, but is still being punished in the computer-generated BCS rankings for its relatively weak schedule to date.

However, the unbeaten Wildcats are moving into the time when they can make rapid improvements on the important strength-of-schedule factor. This Saturday, the Wildcats will be host to No. 11 Nebraska. The next week, they play at No. 13 Missouri.

If they win those last two regular-season games, they then will play another ranked team — possibly No. 5 Texas A&M — in the Big 12 Conference championship game.

The top two teams in the BCS rankings will meet for the national championship in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 4.

What's a Wildcat to do?

Tennessee and UCLA were 1-2 in the latest Bowl Championship Series standings, while the K-State Wildcats again failed to move into national title territory.

The Volunteers (8-0), who replaced Ohio State at No. 1 in this week's The Associated Press media poll and shared the top spot with K-State in the coaches' poll, took over first place in the BCS standings released Monday. The Vols beat Alabama-Birmingham 37-13 Saturday.

UCLA (8-0), meanwhile, moved up a spot to second place despite its last-minute 41-34 win over Oregon State.

The Wildcats (9-0), who added a last-second touchdown on a quarter-back sneak to complete a 49-6 victory over Baylor, moved from fourth to third place.

Ohio State (8-1) fell out of national-title contention with a 28-24 loss to Michigan State.

The BCS standings, calculated by using the AP poll and the coaches' poll, three computer rankings, strength-of-schedule and number of losses, determine who plays in the Fiesta Bowl with the national title on the line.

The final BCS standings will be released Dec. 6, and the top two teams will play at Tempe, Ariz., Jan. 4.

Tennessee, third in the first BCS standings three weeks ago, was first with 3.92 points — 1 point for poll average, 2 for computer rank average, .92 for a strength-of-schedule ranked 23rd toughest and zero for losses.

The Bruins had 5.73 points — 3 for poll average, 2.33 for computer rank average, .40 for the 10th toughest strength-of-schedule and zero points for losses.

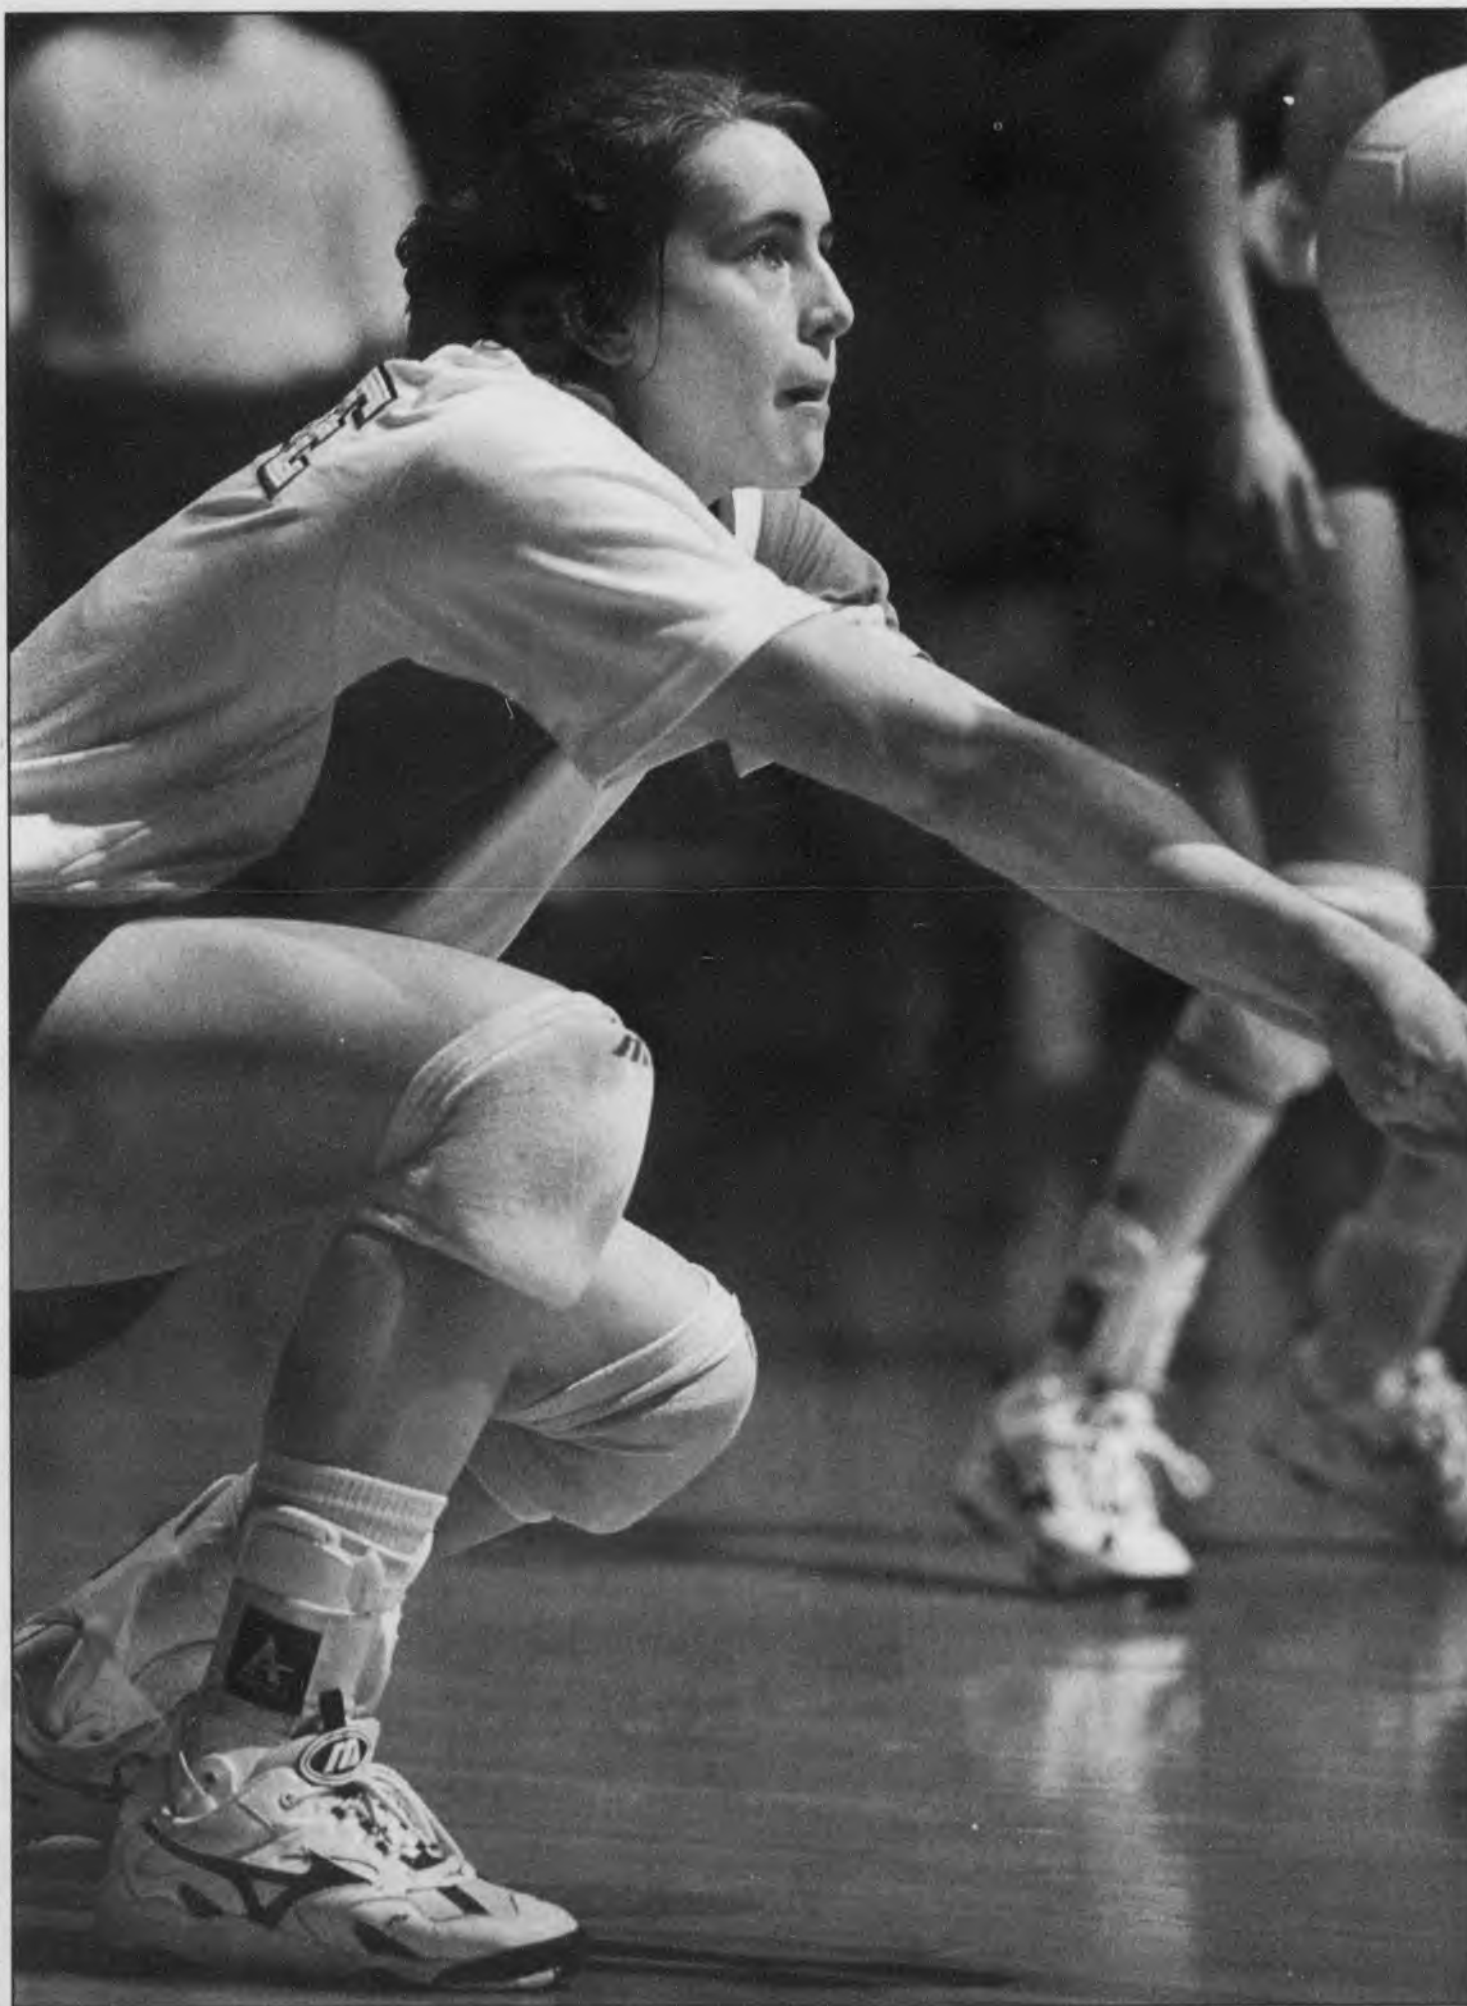

K-State had 6.99 points — 1.5 for poll average, 2.33 for computer rank average, 3.16 for the 79th toughest schedule and zero for losses.

Florida State was in fourth place, followed by Florida, Texas A&M, Arkansas, Ohio State, Wisconsin and Arizona.

Cats overpower 13th-ranked Colorado

By BRENT STOVER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Playing on the road Saturday night, the Cats upended the 13th-ranked Buffaloes in four games.

When asked how big his team's win over Colorado was, Wildcat volleyball coach Jim McLaughlin simply said, "It was big."

"If we play, well we can play with anybody," McLaughlin said.

"Any time you beat a ranked team, you're playing pretty well."

The Cats stormed out of the gates in Game 1, hitting .256 as a team, en route to a 15-11 victory. K-State carried that momentum into Game 2, winning again by a 15-11 score.

Colorado battled back in the third game to capture a 16-14 win. However, the Cats took the match in Game 4, with a convincing 15-9 victory.

"Colorado is a very talented team," McLaughlin said. "We got on their tendencies early, and we played very well the whole match."

Senior Val Wieck led the Cats, hitting .400 for the match. She also recorded a triple-double, with 15 kills, 10 digs and 10 blocks.

"Val was awesome," McLaughlin said. "Our goal is that we have to get her the ball more often."

Freshman Liz Wegner also put together a solid match with 18 kills, eight digs and seven blocks.

Freshman setter Disney Bronnenberg recorded 53 assists to go with 15 digs for the Cats.

The Buffs' upset helped to offset K-State's loss to 3rd-ranked Nebraska on Friday night.

The Cats fell to the Huskers in three-straight games, 8-15, 10-15 and 14-16.

With the win, Nebraska improved its record to 21-0 overall and 12-0 in Big 12 Conference play.

Following the match, McLaughlin questioned the mindset of his team going into the match.

"I don't think we actually truly believed that we could beat them, and that was disappointing," McLaughlin said.

One bright spot for the Cats was Kim

Zschau. The senior hit .278 for the contest, with 14 kills and 16 digs.

Junior Dawn Cady added 12 kills and 10 digs to K-State's cause.

The loss left McLaughlin looking forward to the final match of the season — a Nov. 28 tilt with the Huskers in Manhattan.

"We've got to determine beforehand that we're going to get it done," McLaughlin said. "That's the next step we're going to make next time we play them."

Following the split over the weekend, the Wildcats are now 15-8 on the season, including a 9-5 conference mark.

K-State is back home this weekend to take on Missouri on Friday night and Iowa State on Saturday night.

Tennis team finishes up fall season

■ Competition wrapped up last weekend at regionals.

By SARAH CRAIG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team concluded fall competition with the Intercollegiate Tennis Association Regional Championships last weekend. The team did not have success in either the singles or doubles winners' brackets of the tournament, but sophomore Eva Novotna won the singles consolation bracket.

Fall season play is composed of individual tournaments, while the spring season is team competition. Coach Steve Bietau said that, overall, he has been pleased with the progress of the team this season, but in this final tournament some of his singles players failed to do certain things the team has practiced this fall.

"On the critical side, I would say I was disappointed with the fact that there were some things that our players have been coached to do that they didn't do in this tournament," Bietau said.

In doubles play, the team of Novotna and sophomore Martina Pospisilova advanced to the semifinal round but fell to the No. 1 seed.

"Our doubles has been a big concern and something we've spent a lot of time with this fall, and it was clear that we have made some progress in our doubles," Bietau said.

While Bietau was pleased with the progress that's been made, both coach and players said they agree doubles is an area still needing improvement.

"I think the whole team needs to work on doubles, for the main part," Pospisilova said. "We know what to do, but we don't do it in the match."

In the tournament, the team had three players seeded in the top 15: Novotna (15), Anna Pampoulova (10) and Pospisilova (9). Pospisilova and Novotna were seeded seventh in doubles.

Bietau said he was disappointed with some of the singles play.

"Martina advanced to the round of 16 but didn't play well to get there," he said. "The two matches she won, she was able to win without playing well."

While Bietau was frustrated with his team at times, he said this tournament shows the players what they will need to work on in the off-season for success in the spring season.

"They have an awareness of what the mistakes they made were," Bietau said. "It's up to them to correct that, and it's up to us to give them the opportunity to do that."

The team graduated four seniors last year, and this year's team is entirely freshmen and sophomores. Bietau said there is a lack of leadership as a result of this.

"I'm happy with the progress we've made," he said. "We have an entirely young team. They're all freshmen and sophomores, and I would say at this point there's a bit of a leadership vacuum, but there's also the opportunity to sort of start with a clean plate."

"We've attempted to raise the standards that they shoot for," Bietau said.

Captains for this year's team have not been announced, and Bietau said he looks forward to some of the players stepping up. During the winter, the team is allowed to practice eight hours a week, only two of which can be spent playing tennis.

"It'll be up to the players to get on the court and show some initiative and continue to keep their tennis at a good level," Bietau said.

"Until we reach the point where players do come forward and they do translate that progress into their performance on the court, then we can't be satisfied."

Fit important in buying shoes

Foot length, width determine proper size

By JENNIFER WHITE
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Whether you're walking for fun or scoring the winning touchdown for K-State, your feet and the shoes on them are important. It's not the color or the brand name that is most vital, it's the fit.

"Shoes for adults should have about half a thumb's width from the end of the toe to the end of the shoe," said Clint Hutchens, manager of Ballard's Sporting Goods in Aggieville. "For kids, there should be a thumb's width to allow room to grow."

Hutchens said the shoe fitting snugly in the arch of the foot is the most important part of buying the right shoes.

Width and length of the foot as well as the height of the arch are all factors to consider when trying on shoes.

Ray Hilligoss, assistant manager of The Finish Line, said that if the arch of the shoe doesn't fit the arch of the foot, it will cause pain. "Running shoes have higher arches than regular shoes," he said. "If the arch of the shoe doesn't match the arch of the foot, the shoe doesn't benefit the person at all."

"Guys' shoes are wider," Hilligoss said. "If I have a guy who has a narrow 8- or 8 1/2-size foot, I may show him a women's shoe because they are more narrow."

If the foot bulges over the edge of the shoe, Hilligoss said, then a wider shoe might be needed to make the customer more comfortable.

To make the sizing process easier without the use of machines, The Finish Line relies on measuring and how the shoe looks, but gives the customer the final say.

"We make recommendations," Hilligoss said. "Even if we feel the shoe may be too big or too small, where they take it from there is up to them."

Where their shoes take them is something the customer must take into account when deciding between different types of shoes.

"There are running shoes, cross-trainers — there is a certain shoe for just about every activity," Rory Stahly, Finish Line manager, said. "You name it, they make a shoe for it."

When trying to decide what kind of shoe to buy, the customer should consider what kinds of movement the activity will involve.

"There are shoes that allow more front-to-back movement," Stahly said. "Then there are those that allow more side-to-side movement."

Stahly said cross-trainers won't last as long when used primarily for running, and running shoes might provide a more customized fit than other shoes.

"Cross-trainers are fine as long as you're not running the majority of the time," Stahly said. "The difference between cross-trainers and running shoes is that the running shoe will have more cushion."

Hutchens said cross-trainers are also more often made of leather, whereas running shoes are made of mesh fabric, making them lightweight.

Whether you want running shoes, cross-trainers or just a pair of cleats to wear for an intramural flag football game, the most important feature of the shoe to consider should be the fit.

"The only way you can tell it fits is if it feels good," Hutchens said.

UNDER the Sea

Acclaimed photographer Wayne Levin visits campus, works with students

K-State students will be able to see the work and pick the brain of acclaimed photographer Wayne Levin this week. Levin, from Honolulu, is a visiting artist for the Department of Art, and an exhibition of his underwater black-and-white photography is in the K-State Student Union art gallery through Nov. 21.

Marla Sherrill, president of Viewfinders: The KSU Photography Club and senior in art education, said she encouraged people to attend Levin's workshops today, Thursday and Saturday. His visit is paid for by student fees.

"He could get paid so much in a day," Sherrill said. "They're paying him probably one-tenth of what he could get paid. It's so nice for him to do this."

She said the opportunity to learn from a photographer of his status was not to be missed.

"This opportunity brings a whole week of events," Sherrill said. "People will be able to talk to him as an individual. A person that doesn't know anything about photography could talk to him."

He will give critiques at three photography classes Wednesday, Kerry Coppin, assistant professor of art, said. The public is welcome to attend the classes, but Coppin said he suggested visitors attend the smaller 10:30 a.m. class rather than the larger afternoon classes.

"He'll be looking at the students' work," Coppin said, "but the public can come to the critiques as well."

Though the Union "exhibition's 24 photos are of eels, sharks and other sea life, Coppin said copies of Levin's book of underwater photography, "Through a Liquid Mirror," will be available at Thursday's reception and book signing. It includes sections of the sea-life photos as well as those of body surfers and shipwrecks.

Sherrill said the hardcover book is $37.50, and Viewfinders members will get a 10-percent discount if they have paid their dues.

"Through a Liquid Mirror" has been received favorably by critics across the country. Steve Hawk wrote in "Surfer Magazine" that the book, whose title was inspired by the alternate world of Alice in Wonderland, said more about the beauty and danger of the sea than words ever could.

Coppin said Levin was working on his photos of body surfers using only available underwater light when they met 15 years ago in Hawaii. The black-and-white format brought more dimension to the pictures and made crashing waves appear cloud-like. The body surfers seemed to soar through the skies while riding the waves.

Sherrill said Saturday's workshop at Scott Aquarium in Omaha, Neb., is an example of Levin's latest work: photographing subjects through glass.

Coppin said the aquarium workshop was tentative at this point, but he said Levin was excited about today's workshop at the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area because he also enjoys shooting landscapes. Levin works as a stock photographer, Coppin said, so he welcomes the chance to add rural photos to his repertoire.

Coppin said the workshops are a chance for photography enthusiasts of all levels to learn from Levin. The itineraries are unplanned. For example, he said he didn't know where they would hike along the Konza Prairie after they left the parking lot, so it's important for participants to show up on time.

"If it's raining, and the people want to go to a shop and drink coffee, we'll go to a shop and drink coffee and discuss photography," Coppin said.

Plaintiffs want $3.2 billion for faulty breast implants

By JUSTIN HYDE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAY CITY, Mich. — Thousands of women who claim their silicone gel breast implants made them sick could each get $12,000 to $300,000 from Dow Corning Corp. as early as next summer under a $3.2 billion settlement proposal filed Monday.

The plan, submitted to U.S. Bankruptcy Court, is subject to approval by a judge and creditors of Dow Corning, which filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in 1995 because of the crush of implant claims.

"It's like taking the rubber band out of your ponytail. I'm so glad it's over," said Sybil Goldrich, an implant recipient who helped work out the deal with the company. "At this point, it's a wonderful time for people to get money to get the medical care they've so badly needed. Nobody is going to get rich on this."

The overall $3.2 billion settlement proposal was announced in July, and since then both sides have been working out the details.

More than 600,000 women have filed claims against Dow Corning, about one-fifth of whom have implants manufactured by the company, said Kenneth Eckstein, whose law firm represented the claimants. In order to collect, women would have to prove the implant or the gel inside it was made by Dow Corning.

Eckstein said payouts could begin as early as next summer if the settlement plan is approved on schedule. Payments will range from $12,000 to $300,000. Those who fall sick later would have nearly 15 years to file claims.

Dow Corning helped develop silicone gel breast implants in the 1960s and was once the largest maker of the devices.

Concerns about implants surfaced in the mid-1980s. Thousands of women who had implants have since claimed leaks have caused serious diseases of the immune system such as lupus, which can lead to infections, depression, kidney disease and joint damage.

Silicone gel breast implants have been banned for cosmetic purposes.

Dow Corning has maintained that there is no scientific proof that silicone causes immune-system ailments.

Volunteers teach children about healthy eating habits

By SHANDA PARKER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Children, food, germs and table manners are a collaboration that is unlikely to come together. But The Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan Inc. and the Introduction to Dietetics class made it happen when they formed the Kid's Cafe.

Kid's Cafe is a program designed to teach children the importance of nutrition and food information. The program started two years ago and continues to grow.

"Gosh, the kids really love it," said Shelli Henry, program director of The Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan. "It is a good opportunity to learn about healthy habits, table manners and germs."

Deborah Canter, professor of dietetics, said she saw the need for her classes to get involved with the community and have the students teach what they learn in class.

"I saw ways to collaborate my students in dietetics. They need experience each year, and each year we do it, and then we learn from the previous year," Canter said.

Students volunteer to present a program about nutrition to the children. Canter said students in her classes design the presentations and make it interesting for the children.

Katy Ybarra, junior in dietetics, recently presented her first program. Ybarra decided to talk to the children and play a game about eating at restaurants. She had a guessing game for the children to pick their favorite fast-food restaurants and then answer questions on nutrition. She emphasized the importance of choosing healthy foods when eating out.

"It is okay to eat out, just order the right stuff," Ybarra said.

Ybarra said she was surprised how much the children knew about nutrition, and how the kids enjoyed talking about food.

"Talking about all the food makes me hungry," Kiefer, member of Kid's Cafe, said.

Leslie, a member of Kid's Cafe, said she enjoys blurring out the answer to nutrition games.

The program has been successful on both ends of the spectrum. Canter said there are many reasons why the program is important for the children of Manhattan, but it is important to her students as well.

"The students enjoy interacting with the kids. They see a need," Canter said. "It encourages a sense of volunteerism and professionalism. We owe something back to the community."

Kid's Cafe was recognized for its creativity, cost effectiveness and collaboration on the national level. The Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan received the National Award for Program Excellence last February.

"It is not only our award, but it's their (dietetics department) award too," Henry said.

Henry said the program's team work is the main reason for its national recognition. Henry said it works well because everyone's focus is on the children.

With the national recognition of Kid's Cafe, many other organizations have become interested in starting more programs. Henry said many other community groups around the nation have called and wanted information on starting their own Kid's Cafe. Canter said she also hopes other universities get involved.

"I hope it is shared with other dietetics programs around the nation as a model," Canter said.

"I am really pleased it has been so successful."

Supreme Court allows financial aid for private, religious schools

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Supreme Court will let Wisconsin continue providing financial help for families whose children attend religious or other private schools, a move sure to encourage similar efforts in other states.

Supporters say such tuition vouchers can give low-income children the same educational choices as richer ones, but critics see nothing less than a movement to abandon the public schools.

The justices on Monday left intact a Wisconsin program providing vouchers — good for up to $5,000 a year per child — for students of poor families who attend private schools in Milwaukee. Because most of those schools are religious, the state's plan had been challenged as a violation of the constitutionally required separation of church and state.

Monday's action, an 8-1 vote to deny review to the challenge, was not a decision and therefore set no national precedent. But participants in the raging national debate were quick to react.

Clint Bolick of the pro-voucher Institute for Justice said the court's action provides a green light for other states to proceed with the most promising education reform on the horizon.

Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson, a Republican, praised the court for clearing the way "for impoverished families who want a better life for their children to choose schools that make the most sense to them. It's a victory for hope."

But Barry Lynn of anti-voucher Americans United for Separation of Church and State said the court action did not amount to "a high court blessing of tax aid to religious schools."

"Sooner or later, the Supreme Court will have to deal with the issue of vouchers," Lynn said. "The justices took a pass today, but they cannot dodge the issue forever."

The National School Boards Association had supported the challenge to Wisconsin's program, saying, "Vouchers are not an educational panacea. In fact, proponents of vouchers are asking us to abandon the public schools."

Under the state's plan, money paid for private school tuitions is taken from money that otherwise would be spent on public schools.

4 escaped prisoners captured by police, 2 remain on the run

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Authorities captured three of the five maximum-security inmates, including a convicted murderer, who eluded police Monday after a weekend escape from the Wyandotte County Detention Center.

The two other escapees remained at large, including a man charged with two murders.

A sixth escapee was captured Sunday at an apartment complex in Kansas City, Kan., about 12 hours after the breakout from the prison in the city's downtown.

The escapees caught Monday were picked up by police about 3 p.m. in midtown Kansas City. Lt. Dave Melton of the Wyandotte County Sheriff's Department said.

The three were identified as James Crume Jr., 39; Steven A. Ford, 17; and Michael J. Enriquez, 20. Kansas City, Mo., police got a call on a tips hotline that the men were in a midtown neighborhood, and all were caught in the same spot. Other details of the capture were not immediately available.

Crume was being held in the Wyandotte County jail on charges of killing James Atkinson, 55, in July, 1981. Authorities charged him in the 17-year-old murder in August of this year. He already had been convicted of an unrelated murder in Kansas City, Kan., in 1981.

Ford is charged with aggravated rape, aggravated robbery, sodomy and aggravated battery. Enriquez is being held as a fugitive from Jackson County for failing to appear in court on drug charges.

Still at large, though, are Carsey Littlewood, 21, and Cleveland Henderson, 24.

Littlewood is charged with capital murder in the October killings of Aldo Davila and Michael Palacio, both 20, of Kansas City, Kan.

Henderson is facing six counts of aggravated robbery.

"These are serious felons," Wyandotte County sheriff Mike Dailey said. "We're making sure everyone knows that. Don't approach them. Just call your local police if you see them."

The escapes late Saturday went undetected for at least two hours, even though police received a call from someone who saw two or three men in what appeared to be orange-colored jail uniforms on the street.

Police contacted the detention center about 11:30 p.m., but officials there said no escape had been confirmed.

Detention officials didn't confirm the escape for at least two more hours, when a female motorist called police saying several men had forced her to drive them around the city to a specific location.

"We don't have confirmation that they were the escapees," a police spokeswoman said. "But they seemed like they might have been."

James Wedlow, 16, was captured Sunday morning without resistance in a storage area of an apartment. He had been jailed on charges of aggravated robbery and auto theft charge.

Wyandotte County sheriff Mike Dailey said the inmates had been in individual cells and managed to manipulate or force open the locks. Dailey said he had no evidence that they obtained a key or that someone inside the detention center had helped in their escape.

The inmates then kicked open or manipulated open a door leading to an interior fire escape that led to an outside door, Dailey said.

"We're still trying to determine how they got the locks open," Dailey said.

Jail employees are supposed to check inmates each hour, and it was unclear if the staff had breached any policies or procedures that led to the escape, Dailey said.

"Our office of professional standards is doing an investigation into the escape itself and to determine what allowed this to go undetected," Dailey said.

At least 15 extra staffers, including investigators, were called in Sunday.

"We've locked down the entire facility, and head counts are being done regularly," Dailey said.

Livingston takes command of speaker's race

By DAVID ESPO
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Rep. Bob Livingston, a pragmatic conservative from Louisiana, took command of the race to succeed House Speaker Newt Gingrich on Monday as his only rival dropped out and the second-ranking Republican leader paid a courtesy call.

"The truth is, the vote is in. Bob Livingston is going to be our next speaker and I'm withdrawing my name for that reason," said Rep. Christopher Cox of California, who was a formal candidate for less than 72 hours.

Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas left the Capitol to visit Livingston in his office in a congressional building across the street, spokeswoman Michele Davis said.

"He went over there to congratulate him," she said.

Armey, too, has enough votes to ward off challenges, Davis said. Even so, Rep. Jennifer Dunn of Washington announced a bid to topple Armey, joining Rep. Steve Largent of Oklahoma in that race.

"I am asking you to support me as a member who will serve as a fresh face for the party," Dunn said in an e-mail sent to GOP lawmakers.

Gingrich returned to the Capitol for the first time since Republicans lost seats in last week's midterm elections, an event that led to his stunning decision Friday to step down as speaker. The Georgian did not speak to reporters as he arrived. A handwritten sign was posted at the entrance to the suite where he presided over the Republican Revolution the past four years: "Office closed to tours."

Gingrich arranged an evening speech before GOPAC, a political organization that helped fuel his extraordinary rise to power.

Inside the Capitol, though, he was a lame duck, his power ebbing as Republicans jockeyed for position in the Congress that convenes in January.

Influence was flowing to Livingston, 55, who chairs the Appropriations Committee and was elected last Tuesday to his 11th full term. Cox announced his decision on ABC's Good Morning America, then wrote a letter to fellow Republican lawmakers, saying Livingston "deserves our unanimous support as he takes on this daunting challenge."

As a veteran of the Appropriations Committee, Livingston has spent a career making deals with lawmakers of both parties to build support for legislation.

While solidly conservative — he is firmly opposed to abortion, for example — he has been at several points over the last few years when other conservatives wanted to use the spending bills that came out of his committee to carry controversial amendments dealing with social issues.

Flood victims regroup at local churches

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan. — Amid tragedy and loss, thousands of flood victims across southeast Kansas sought spiritual renewal and gave voice in their churches to a common thought: It could have been worse.

"I am just grateful for the chance to be here, to give thanks to the Lord this morning," Naoma Cushenbery tearfully told the congregation at First Baptist Church in Arkansas City on Sunday.

"These are the first tears I've shed, but they're not tears of self-pity. Monday night, after we left our house, I felt such perfect peace. The Lord just comforted me."

The floodwaters rose four feet high in Cushenbery's house last week, forcing her to move in temporarily with her daughter. About 20 First Baptist families were affected by the flood.

"We want to praise God and thank him for sparing us loss of life, even in the midst of our other losses," the Rev. Wade Graber, pastor of the church, said. "Our losses were not flesh and blood. We still have each other."

The message was repeated at churches in Winfield, Augusta, Sedgwick, west Wichita and other communities hit by the flooding that killed one person and damaged hundreds of homes and businesses. Total damage from the flood is estimated at $37.8 million.

At First United Methodist Church in Arkansas City, the Rev. Guy Rendoff invited members at the morning worship to light a candle in remembrance of those in need.

"It has been a wonderful week," he told the congregation, "of watching people give themselves away" by coming to the aid of strangers and friends alike.

In Augusta, the Rev. Samuel Pinkerton stood before packed pews at St. James Catholic Church with an unusual message — a letter from Bishop Eugene Gerber, dated Oct. 26, five days before the flood.

The letter addresses the importance of stewardship. In it, the bishop noted that people first begin to know God in a tent, today often called a tabernacle.

"Stewardship is helping each other with our tents, especially when our own tents or the tents of others are in ruins," the bishop wrote. "The tent cloth is torn; the stakes uprooted; and the tent lines severed."

A woman near the back of the church sobbed as Pinkerton read the letter, her shoulders gently shaking.

"I didn't understand the depth of (the letter's) meaning," Pinkerton told his congregation. "Since this flood — this disaster — the letter has taken on a life of its own."

"Our faith is challenged when something like this happens," he said. "But our faith can also be strengthened, and we can also be drawn closer together, and I've seen that happen in the last week."

Pittsburgh beats Green Bay, 27-20

By ALAN ROBINSON
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — Kordell Stewart could do no wrong on a night the Green Bay Packers could do virtually nothing right until it was too late.

Stewart, benched last week in one of Pittsburgh's worst losses of the Bill Cowher era, passed and ran the Steelers to a 24-point halftime lead and a 27-20 victory Monday night that left the Packers two games back in the NFC Central.

Pumping his fists and leaping with joy like a school kid on a playground with every perfectly thrown pass, Stewart ran for a touchdown, threw an 8-yard TD pass to Charles Johnson and set up a third score with a 45-yard throw to rookie Hines Ward in his best game in nearly a year.

And that was only the first half. Stewart was 15-of-22 for 231 yards and no interceptions in his best game since throwing for three touchdowns and running for two in a December victory over Denver. Since then, he had eight touchdowns and 17 interceptions in 12 games, forcing Cowher to continually defend his decision to keep playing him.

Jerome Bettis ran for 100 yards — his seventh consecutive 100-yard game on a Monday night.

Stewart looked nothing like the hesitant, unconfident quarterback whose season-long slump was threatening to unravel the Steelers' season and leave them challenging only for a wild card spot.

Instead, the Steelers (6-3) — embarrassed 41-31 at home by Tennessee last week as Stewart was pulled after throwing three interceptions — stayed within a game of AFC Central leader Jacksonville (7-2) with two games left against the Jaguars.

And now the Packers (6-3) are in a precarious situation, just a week after a 36-22 victory over San Francisco pulled them within a game of Minnesota.

The Packers' second Monday night meltdown in barely a month — Randall Cunningham passed for 442 yards in Minnesota's 37-24 romp on Oct. 5 — came just when the Vikings (8-1) finally seemed vulnerable. Both Cunningham and Brad Johnson are hurt and may not play Sunday against Cincinnati.

But the Packers, who displayed a playoff-like intensity against the 49ers, came off flat and overcautious, and they didn't begin playing like two-time defending NFC champions until it was too late.

Reggie White, who manhandled the 49ers' offensive line in the Packers' nine-sack performance last week, had only one sack, and it didn't come until the Steelers led 27-0.

White upended backup quarterback Mike Tomczak on a third-and-goal play from the Packers' 4, allowing Keith McKenzie to run 88 yards for the longest fumble return touchdown in Packers' history.

That defensive play got the Packers' offense going. Favre drove them 74 yards for Raymont Harris' 2-yard TD run and a 2-point conversion pass to Antonio Freeman that made it 27-17 with 4:52 remaining.

The desperate Packers then recovered an onside kick, but stalled at the Steelers' 19, and Ryan Longwell kicked a 37-yard field goal with 2:40 to go.

Green Bay then tried another onside kick, but Steelers tight end Mark Bruener recovered at the Packers' 41, allowing Pittsburgh to run out the clock and Bettis to hit 100 yards on a 34-carry night.

Favre's number's looked good — 22-of-39 for 234 yards and an interception — but most of the yards came in the fourth quarter.

The Steelers had dominated until then, outgaining the Packers 274-72 in the first half while outrushing them 105-16.

The Steelers, who have never lost consecutive home games since Cowher took over in 1992, surprised the Packers by uncharacteristically coming out throwing on their first possession, when they normally try to get Bettis going.

Six plays into the drive, Stewart found Courtney Hawkins two steps behind Craig Newsome in single coverage for a 53-yard completion — Stewart's second longest of the season. Two plays later, Stewart fooled the Packers by looking to his left, then wheeling and throwing to his right to a wide-open Johnson for the touchdown.

Stewart has been criticized for staying focused on his intended receiver and never looking off, and it was apparent the Packers were expecting exactly that.

Green Bay then drove to the Steelers' 25 as Favre ducked three pass rushers to improvise a 26-yard throw to Freeman, but the drive stalled, and Longwell missed a 51-yard field goal — his first miss in 13 tries this season.

Stewart, obviously encouraged by his early success, came out throwing again on the Steelers' second possession to hit Hawkins for 8 yards and Johnson for 11. Then, with White tugging at his ankle, Stewart took off running on a 30-yard scramble to the Packers' 3 that he punctuated with half a back flip along the sidelines.

sororities are alcohol-free and seven fraternities on campus have pledged to become alcohol-free by 2000.

University officials also plan to apply for a Kansas Health Foundation grant to enhance alcohol-education programs on campus, Shulenburg said.

"The connection between alcohol use and poor academic performance, as well as a number of other problems, cannot be refuted," Shulenburg said. "While most universities are concerned about this problem, I want KU to lead in helping solve it."

"The fact remains that drinking alcohol for most KU undergraduate students is against the law."

The survey also found that of the students who took the survey, those who drank less had higher grades. Forty-one percent of the students surveyed said they had missed a class as a consequence of drinking.

Shulenburg is chairman of a task force involving the University of Kansas, Haskell Indian Nations University, the city of Lawrence, local bar owners and alcohol abuse counselors. The group plans to make further recommendations by mid-December, Shulenburg said.

difficulty," Briggeman said. "I've always enjoyed the fun and challenge of the actual stunts."

Briggeman, who has participated in body building with Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity for the past four years, said safety is an issue that needs to be addressed.

"There have been too many accidents in the past few years," Briggeman said. "I don't know if that's the fault of the houses or the rules."

With the elimination of stunt work, a male-female ratio has been proposed to keep the level of and need for male participation in the event high. The ratio would be required to receive the full amount of points. Briggeman said he didn't think this would be well accepted by the male participants.

"I don't think they would be too receptive to it," Briggeman said. "Getting a bunch of guys to dance could be more difficult."

Stewart said the proposal would make more work for women, and she didn't think it would encourage male participation within the greek system.

bodybuilding proposal. Ryan Lauder milk, Student Alumni Board representative on the committee, proposed the limit as a way to decrease the extravagant spending of some groups.

"There were some groups that said a budget might decrease the need to outdo others with costumes and props," Lauder milk said.

Body building isn't the only competition to receive changes. The All-University Homecoming Committee is recommending each group find its own community service project for Paint It Purple rather than having a project assigned to them, as in previous years.

There also will be an option to complete the project in the spring after after fraternities and sororities have decided their Homecoming partners. Projects also could be completed in the fall. Lansdowne said the option helps to alleviate the busy fall semester.

"The houses feel a little overwhelmed in the fall," Lansdowne said.

"It's one more activity that they can only do during the weekends, and that can be difficult during football."

Lauder milk said he hoped this proposal would encourage more participation in the community service project.

"One advantage it gives is each group can pick a philanthropic event that would mean something to them," Lauder milk said.

"If they see a benefit in helping the Red Cross or the Flint Hills Breadbasket, it means something to them personally."

Miranda Hinrikus, co-social chair of Van Zile Hall, said she would prefer choosing the service.

"I wanted to pick our own because people are more likely to do it if they have a say in what they want to do," Hinrikus said.

While the proposed changes, especially in body building, likely are to cause some anger, Lauder milk said spirit and enthusiasm won't be lost.

"Anytime you have change, it always faces resistance from those who look at change negatively," Lauder milk said. "Looking at changes in the past, after a period of time, the student population always bounces back."

"When they adapt to change, their spirit will be as high as it is now," he said.

CLINTON

already has triggered allegations of presidential misconduct and an impeachment inquiry by the House. That has overshadowed the campaign inquiry involving Democratic issue-advocacy ads.

A year ago, Reno looked into the ads and decided not to seek an independent counsel. A later Federal Election Commission audit raised more questions, prompting Reno to take another look.

Clinton, through his attorneys, has denied any wrongdoing.

Clinton was questioned by two Justice lawyers and two FBI agents for 90 minutes in the Treaty Room in the White House. He was accompanied by his private attorneys, David Kendall and Nicole Seligman.

"As the president has previously announced, he is cooperating fully with this investigation and voluntarily agreed when an interview was requested," Kendall said.

The session was not videotaped, and the president was not put under oath, officials said. However, it is a felony to make false statements to federal investigators, whether sworn or not.

The inquiry focuses on whether Clinton and the White House coordinated with the Democratic Party to assist his re-election through the issue-advocacy ads the party was running. If so, that could have violated the federal-spending limits he agreed to when he accepted taxpayer financing of his campaign.

The review grew out of a preliminary FEC report that sources have said concluded the Clinton-Gore campaign violated rules governing issue ads. Clinton's attorneys have argued that the Clinton-Gore ads differed in no substantial respect from the Bob Dole-Jack Kemp issue ads except for their respective party advocacy.

The Clinton inquiry is the third separate 90-day review underway related to campaign fund raising. An investigation of Vice President Al Gore focuses on whether he truthfully described to federal investigators his understanding of how campaign finance laws applied to fund-raising activities he undertook two years ago.

An investigation of former senior White House aide Harold Ickes is delving into whether he made false statements to a Senate committee about the administration's dealings with the Teamsters union.

Sniper opens fire at busy intersection, kills police officer

By BRADLEY BROOKS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — A gunman opened fire near a busy intersection of old downtown Tuesday night, killing a police officer and wounding at least three others before authorities fatally shot him.

Witnesses told police the man began firing as he walked up the street, shooting randomly at people until he reached the Calvary Baptist Church, Lt. Jim Connors said.

The first officer to respond to the scene was shot as he stepped out of his patrol car, authorities said.

The officer was pronounced dead soon after he arrived at Heartland Regional Medical Center, hospital spokeswoman Kelly Stuck said. One bystander was in stable condition and another was in surgery Tuesday night, Stuck said.

Police identified the victims as 28-year-old Valerie Sharp, who was struck in the eye; 57-year-old Jack Martin, who was hit in the abdomen, chest and forearm; and firefighter Kenny Cordonnier, who was treated for a bullet wound to his arm and released.

The police officer was identified as 27-year-old Bradley Thomas Arn, a seven-year veteran of the force and father of 3-year-old twins. His patrol car was riddled with at least seven bullet holes, one of which went through a passenger window and struck Arn in the head, Connors said.

"He was a proud father," Connors said, adding that Arn had high aspirations for his career on the police force. "He was enrolled at Missouri Western because he wanted to move up the ranks."

Police still were trying to identify the gunman through his fingerprints Tuesday night. Connors said the man died at the scene when he was shot twice by police after he fired at them.

Michael Boone, a grocery store night manager, said he saw the gunman walking toward his store.

"We just heard all kinds of gun fire, and people were running inside the store for cover," Boone said. "We tried to move them all into the back where there could be safe, but people were really scared."

"There were a lot of bodies lying in the street."

Connie Cox, 38, heard the gunfire from her home behind the church. When she looked out her door, she said, she saw a man in camouflage pants standing on a lower roof of the church and waving what looked like a rifle.

When police pulled up across the street, "he turned and started shaking his rifle, and he was yelling some antics, like 'na na,'" she said.

She said he fired at the officers, jumped off the roof and ran behind a tree on the church property. When he stepped out, he was shot by the officers, she said.

St. Joseph is a city of about 70,000 people located 54 miles north of Kansas City.

Peers remember Richardson's life

■ K-State student shot to death in murder-suicide on Oct. 26.

By LAUREN POSLADEK
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Family, friends and peers gathered to celebrate the life of K-State student Tom Richardson at a memorial Tuesday at All Faiths Chapel.

Richardson was shot to death by Brent Lawless, a Junction City parole officer, in a murder-suicide on Oct. 26.

Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, led the service.

The Interim Assistant Dean of Student Life John Danos and the Associate Dean of the College of Business Stan Elsea spoke about the sorrow caused by the circumstances surrounding Richardson's death.

"Tragedy has struck our campus, and I can do nothing but shake my fist and accept it," Danos said. "We need to support each other during this time and help one another to find peace in any way we can."

Elsea also said, although he didn't know Tom Richardson well, he had met with him before and was impressed with his character.

"Tom was a quiet guy, but I could tell he had potential to do a lot of really good things," Elsea said.

Tom Richardson's mother, Elaine Richardson, said in a letter she wanted to share some facts concerning Tom's death that had not been released by the police.

She was unable to attend the service.

"I want to clear up any confusion you may have about Tom's death, because I know the stories that have

3 killed in wreck on trip back from Manhattan

■ All were members of dance troupe from southeast Colorado.

By LYNETTE ABITZ
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Sunday morning car accident killed three members of the dance troupe "Ballet Colores Latino" from southeast Colorado, which performed Friday in Manhattan as part of the Hispanic holiday "Dia de la Muerte."

Ramona Garibay, director and choreographer of the group; Josie Virginia Chavez, adult dance member; and Mallory Gonzales, youth dance member, died. Lucy Gonzales, 62, survived the accident.

Garibay's husband, Guillermo, and their two sons were following in the car behind Garibay's vehicle.

Jeff Goodwin, a trooper for the Colorado State Patrol, said Garibay was westbound on Colorado Highway 10 when her vehicle left the road. She overcorrected the steering wheel and then hit a fence. The vehicle rolled three times ejecting Garibay, 43, Chavez, 45, and Gonzales, 11.

Lori Navarrete, co-adviser of Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said members of HALO, who sponsored the event, and faculty have expressed their condolences, which has been overwhelming, she said. HALO sent flowers to Garibay's family and is waiting for information about Chavez's and Gonzales' families.

Navarrete said one student said it was surreal to one moment experience the energy and life of the group and the next moment deal with the dancers' deaths.

Navarrete said students connected with the group. "They were real personable and informal," she said. "They made the students proud of their culture."

Navarrete said she was impressed by Garibay and her husband.

"Mona and Guillermo did it for the children and the community," she said. "They loved performing."

Manhattan resident Rachel Garibay said her sister-in-law Ramona accepted all people.

"She took all levels of people," she said. "It didn't matter how old they were or how good they were. She didn't just take people that could dance."

"She died giving her time to this group she started," she said.

Garibay's funeral is Thursday in La Junta, Colo., Navarrete said. She didn't have details about services for Chavez and Gonzales.

The dance troupe, formed in 1994, performs salsa, flamenco, Mexican folklorico and mambo. Navarrete said it performed more than 50 times in the four-corners area and had planned a trip to Mexico.

"HE LOVED LIFE, HE LOVED THIS WORLD, AND TO HIS LAST DAYS, HE LOVED THIS UNIVERSITY."

Pallbearers, all former K-State basketball players, carry Jack Hartman's casket out of Ahearn Field House after his funeral Tuesday afternoon. The pallbearers were Bob Chipman, Rolando Blackman, Steve Soldner, Lon Kruger, Eddie Elder, Mike Evans, Ed Nealy and Dean Danner. Hartman, who served as the K-State men's basketball coach from 1970-1986, died Friday of apparent heart failure while vacationing in New Mexico. This was the first funeral in Ahearn. Hartman coached the Wildcats to three Big 8 Conference titles and two Big 8 Conference tournament championships.

Hartman's friends, family come out in droves for funeral

By JILL JARSULIC
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once a loud, energetic place to watch K-State basketball, the house that Jack built was quiet Tuesday afternoon.

The banners proclaiming the accomplishments of Jack Hartman's tenure as head coach of the K-State men's basketball team long have been moved to Bramlage Coliseum along with the program, but on Tuesday Hartman's legacy filled Ahearn Field House one last time.

"I've heard from players that when they were on the floor, they could feel his stare," said Mike Riordan, friend and K-State basketball booster. "I think he's here right now, and I think I feel his stare."

Riordan said one of Hartman's signatures was his presence.

"Jack could go into any arena, anywhere, like Bloomington, Indiana, and he was in control," he said. "Everyone knew Hartman was bringing a team to play, and he was in control."

That presence and Hartman's lifelong commitment to the game of basketball gives his friends, family and fans something to thank him for, Riordan said. He spoke of a conversation during a dinner he had with Hartman.

"I asked him what it felt like to be retired," Riordan said. "He didn't answer right away, but later, he said 'I retired from coaching as a professional, but I am a coach. My whole life I've been a coach, and I am a coach today.'"

About 1,000 people attended the funeral, the first funeral in the history of Ahearn. Pallbearers were Bob Chipman, Rolando Blackman, Steve Soldner, Lon Kruger, Eddie Elder, Mike Evans, Ed Nealy and Dean Danner, all former Wildcat basketball players. Kruger coached the Wildcats after Hartman retired.

Hartman coached the Wildcats to three Big 8 Conference titles and two Big 8 tournament championships.

Tuesday's funeral was a quiet tribute to Hartman, a contrast to the fans' screaming tributes to Hartman and the K-State teams he coached from 1970-1986.

Fred White, former voice of the Wildcats, said that when Hartman and his teams came to play, Ahearn shook for the pride of the Wildcats.

In 1978, when the Russian Olympic Team came to town, more than just the pride of the Wildcats was on the line.

"This building shook, and it came unhinged," White said. "It was so loud you'd think there were 80,000 people in here, not just 7 or 8,000. They played not just for Kansas State but for the country."

Hartman's commitment to K-State was evident even after he retired from coaching the men's team. Hartman came out of retirement in 1996 to coach the last six games of the women's basketball season when then-coach Brian Agler left.

He also served as basketball color analyst for Wildcat Television Network for the past 11 years.

"He loved life, he loved this world, and to his last days, he loved this university," White said. "K-State fans everywhere are saying thanks."

Discipline and grace guided Hartman throughout his life.

"Discipline was Jack Hartman's passion," the Rev. Jim Reed said. "Jack Hartman knew grace and he gave grace. Members of his family know that, those who have been coached by him know that, we know that."

"He fought the good fight. He has finished the race. He has kept the faith," Reed said, referring to II Timothy 4:6-8.

Committee prepares memo supporting Starr

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Expecting fierce Democratic attacks on Kenneth Starr when he testifies next week, House Judiciary Committee Republicans were going over a memo Tuesday that emphasizes the prosecutor's "positive points."

"Judge Starr is one of the country's premier lawyers," begins the two-part memo, briefly reviewed by The Associated Press. The second part of the document, prepared by committee staff, focused on "response to recent attacks" on the independent counsel by Democrats.

The memo was handed out during a meeting Tuesday with Chairman Henry Hyde, R-Ill., in which GOP members were apprised of the latest plans for impeachment hearings against President Clinton set to begin in nine days.

Members who attended the meeting said Hyde laid out the same schedule as he did last week, which begins with Starr on Nov. 19 and includes only one other witness. But they added the committee still is discussing whether to call additional witnesses, such as Clinton confidant Bruce Lindsey.

Republicans lawmakers then went to their home districts with the talking points in hand, preparing for a hearing that has all the makings of a classic Washington spectacle.

Starr's appearance before the committee will mark the first time he has been quizzed publicly about the details of his four-year-plus probe.

In the same room where articles of impeachment against Richard Nixon were passed a quarter-century ago, Starr will face Democrats who have relentlessly accused him of conducting a politically motivated probe of Clinton's private life, then leaking details to the news media. Starr has denied the charges.

Two Democratic officials close to the committee said their chief counsel, Abbe Lowell, will lead the questioning of Starr. Democratic committee aides have analyzed Starr's report to Congress, his methods and conduct and those of his staff, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Democratic committee spokesman Jim Jordan said no "attack manual" had been crafted.

"Members and staff both will be restrained and respectful to Starr," Jordan promised. "But there are some serious and legitimate questions regarding the conduct of his investigation that speak directly to the credibility of his referral."

Search for inmates aided by tips hotline

KANSAS CITY, Kan. — Authorities are hoping a call to a police hotline will help them capture the final two maximum-security inmates who escaped from the Wyandotte County Detention Center.

Still missing are Larsey Littlewood, 21, and Cleveland Henderson, 24, both of Kansas City, Kan.

Littlewood is charged with capital murder in the October killings of two Kansas City, Kan., men. Henderson is a convicted felon who is charged with six counts of aggravated robbery.

"We have several tips that we're checking out," Don Denney, spokesman for the Unified Government, said Tuesday. "It's the tips provided by citizens which enabled us to recapture the four that we have in custody."

Six inmates broke out of the center late Saturday, apparently by jamming the locks on their cell doors.

Inmate James Wedlow, 16, was captured Sunday at an apartment building north of downtown.

A tipster led police in Kansas City, Mo., on Monday to a house where they found escapees James Crume Jr., 39; Steven A. Ford, 17; and Michael J. Enriquez, 20.

Denney said he expected those three men to be extradited to Kansas City, Kan. He said the men were uncooperative and refused to confirm their identities when they first were picked up.

The search will continue in the metro-Kansas City area for the other men, Denney said.

"We have nothing that would determine that either one of these individuals is outside the area," he said.

He said other area law enforcement agencies are watching for the men, whose pictures have been placed in high-traffic areas such as convenience stores.

Authorities came close to catching someone who they believe was Henderson on Monday night, Denney said. A tip led officers to a man driving a black Trans Am. When the man tried to run over a sheriff's deputy, the deputy fired at the car, and it smashed into a garage. The driver escaped on foot.

The six inmates somehow opened the locks on their fifth- and sixth-floor cells about 11 p.m. Saturday, then broke into a locked interior fire stairwell and left the building through another locked door, Sheriff Mike Dailey said.

Three deputies who worked at the center were suspended for violating regulations and procedures, Dailey said. He would not comment further but has said officials had no evidence that any jail staff assisted in the breakout.

Dailey acknowledged the jail wasn't being run according to regulations the night of the escape. The hourly head count apparently was ignored. And jail administrator J.B. Hopkins said jail logs showed some prisoners were let out of the cells to make phone calls after the mandatory 9 p.m. lock-down.

Democrats cautious about Moore victory

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dennis Moore's victory over GOP Rep. Vince Snowbarger has the state party hailing him as a harbinger of more gains in 2000. But some activists warn the victory won't cure ailing Kansas Democrats.

Moore has emphasized in post-election interviews that his success came from an appeal to moderates in both parties. Asked how he would use his new position to help Democratic brethren, Moore answered cautiously.

"Maybe the best thing I can do is to be a good congressman and make people say it's OK to have a Democrat in public office," he said in a telephone interview.

But is recruiting candidates or high-profile fund-raising in his future? It will be important for Moore not to alienate the GOP supporters who helped send the first 3rd District Democrat to Congress since it was drawn to its present configuration in 1962, said Topeka attorney Gordon Garrett, a former executive director of the state Democratic Party.

"I wouldn't anticipate that he would be making himself available to too many other Democratic candidates in Republican Johnson County," Garrett said Tuesday.

But he didn't downplay the significance of Moore's win.

"I think in terms of the state party's structure that his election could make a difference," Garrett said. "The value may be symbolic; it means the Democratic Party in Kansas is not totally comatose."

Hallmark wins case; net worth still secret

LIBERTY, Mo. — A jury has sided with Hellmark in an age discrimination lawsuit filed by a former employee.

The case was watched closely because attorneys for the former employee, Ed Maupin, had argued the company should have to disclose to the court the closely guarded secret of its net worth.

The case is also unusual because the company's chief, Irvine O. Hockaday Jr., testified live for the first time in a Hellmark trial.

A Clay County Circuit Court jury deliberated four hours Monday before returning a unanimous decision against Maupin.

Maupin's lawsuit centered on his claim that Hellmark had reneged on a deal.

The Blue Springs man's job had been to find buyers for old office equipment. He said he had worked for the company 32 years when in 1987, at age 52, he was effectively demoted. Hallmark said it was a lateral move.

Maupin agreed in 1988 to drop age discrimination charges he had filed in exchange for a severance package and a letter saying he was "welcome" to approach Hallmark to seek business as an independent contractor.

Instead, said Maupin, he got the "cold shoulder" when he tried to bid on jobs.

Hallmark's attorneys claimed the company had welcomed Maupin, considered his offers and conducted a little business with him.

Judge David Russell on Friday dismissed Maupin's fraud claim, saying there was no substantial evidence that Hallmark wrote the "welcome to approach" letter with the intention to ostracize Maupin.

Fine dining at Derby Food Center

By NICOLE TWIGG
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Minding your p's and q's can help you land a job at a lunch or dinner interview, said Pat Pesci, director of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Program and event facilitator at the Fall Dining and Etiquette Workshop.

Career and Employment Services, Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils and Taco Bell sponsored the workshop Tuesday evening at the Derby Food Center to help students prepare for upcoming job interviews that might include a lunch or dinner.

Employers use the dinner situation as a test to see how interviewees handle themselves in various situations.

"I've seen several students who had the résumé, the grades and the work experience, but they failed the dinner interview because of etiquette faux pas. Simply, a lack of polish got in the way of the job," Pesci said.

Many companies will have a second or third interview in a restaurant setting to test whether interviewees possess the polish needed to represent the company in a social setting, Pesci said.

People attended the event for a variety of reasons.

"I came to learn how to act in business settings," Shawn Ackerman, sophomore in business administration, said. "I plan to share what I learn tonight with some of the girls I live with."

Some students came to get extra credit for their hotel and restaurant management classes.

"I didn't know what to expect, but I definitely think the information was helpful," James Goodrich, junior in pre-health professions program, said. "I will probably be faced with the things Mr. Pesci discussed in an interview."

Others were unable to attend the previous dinner.

"I missed last year's etiquette workshop, and I heard really good reviews from the students who attended, so I wanted to come tonight," Neal Christensen, senior in psychology, said. "I feel this information would be really helpful in a job interview."

Several sorority and fraternity housemothers also attended the event.

"I plan to share this information with the boys. It will help them in job interviews and to impress their parents and girlfriends," said Frances Russel, housemother for the Sigma Chi fraternity. "Also, it's really fun."

Event coordinator Michelle Bray, graduate student in student counseling and personal services, said the student response to this program has been unbelievable. Career and Employment Services intends to be host to another etiquette workshop in the spring, Bray said.

"The students who attended last year overwhelmingly recommended we hold this event again," she said.

Some of Pesci's etiquette suggestions included not talking while eating, not resting arms on the table before the meal is over, ordering only one alcoholic beverage, and not to expect to finish the meal — it's an interview, not a dinner.

"When you leave here, you guys are going to have some finesse, and that's the secret," Pesci said.

Building design demands restraint, even when trying to be different, speaker says

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stop the revolution, I want to get off. At least, that seemed to be the message esteemed professor, writer, and all-around wit Colin Rowe asserted to a room filled with architecture students and faculty Tuesday night in Union Forum Hall.

Rowe, who takes every opportunity available to poke needles in the balloon of modern architecture, stressed the need to step away from redefining architecture with every project and instead treat common design problems with the sensitivity of past generations.

Beginning with slides of a home determinedly called "The Grand Monet" by its contractor, Rowe ridiculed contemporary residential construction while squeezing in comparisons with modern master Le Corbusier and John Russell Pope, who designed the National Gallery of Art.

Lamenting the "Monet," which is a typical upscale executive home with a traditional front facade and angular, open interior, Rowe said, "It makes you realize how inadequate the vocabulary is for describing bad plans."

This exemplar then allowed Rowe the latitude to review the contributions of modernism to residential architecture, namely the homes of Le Corbusier, and intersperse the whole affair with popular culture references. In that vein, Corbu's Domino House becomes an illustration in a Babar book.

More to the point, Rowe connects Corbu's triple organizational schemes for floor plans with those of Pope, though not arguing either architect was aware of the other.

He then showed how Pope, who is not regarded as a revolutionary architect in the manner of Corbu, could handle a floor plan with more confidence — designing bathrooms that fit seamlessly into a plan and into the lives of the occupants. A look at Corbu's Villa Savoye, considered the classic of modernism, shows a general lack of concern with these rather common functional concerns.

"I think all of these are important matters," he said.

"In the present architectural discussion they are considered too empirical to matter."

Rowe's concern was that the trumpets that ushered in modernism drowned out functional dissatisfaction as represented in many of its famous projects. So, Corbu benefited from the zeitgeist, while Pope did not. The point, Rowe stressed, could be taken well today.

"At a time when a lot of people are feeling all revolutionary and all excited, there are also a lot of things they will neglect to pay attention to," Rowe said. "As Mies van der Rohe said, 'You can't have a revolution every Monday morning.'"

OUR VIEW

Responsibility key after victory over NU

The news media blitz that is all but guaranteed this weekend because of football possibly could be the most attention K-State ever has received.

That's because the rest of the country is interested in watching us go down. It remains firm in its belief that K-State is a marshmallow-and-bubble-gum team, and it is watching to see if we can live up to our expectations. It is watching to see how we fare against Nebraska.

Sam McKewon, senior editor at the Daily Nebraskan, made it very clear in a column he published on Nov. 2 there is a big reason for Nebraska fans to be interested in this game.

"The Huskers are a second-tier college football power this year. That's nothing to be ashamed of ... but it makes one thing very clear: Nebraska must have a new goal. That goal is to beat Kansas State. It's the only goal worth having at this point ... if there is any honor to be regained, it is in Manhattan, Kan."

The country also is watching to laugh — are we the mouse that roared or choked?

During the Tostitos Fiesta Bowl, the networks showed spots depicting Manhattan as a rural and backward town, the implication being that K-State is also rural and backward. That should sound familiar to many of you — it has been the predominant stereotype of our school for ages.

We have a new chance to vindicate ourselves.

The impression the country will have of our school will come from its interpretation of our behavior at the Nebraska game. It is unfortunate that athletics is the only institution to bring K-State to such national prominence, but it is unlikely there ever will be anything else at our university to draw such attention. Even if our professors won Nobel Prizes, it's hard to imagine they could bring a national news network to Manhattan to deliver a live broadcast.

Not many people can share in academic accomplishments, no matter how great they are. Sports, however, are understood by everyone and can be enjoyed by everyone. That's why they bring so many people together.

That's also the reason the impression we give this weekend is critical. Our behavior as fans reflects on our behavior as students and as human beings. We are arguably the world's best at both, but sometimes, it's easier to get caught up in competition and forget why we are the best.

Have fun, do it responsibly and avoid getting K-State associated with Colorado fans or Raiders fans.

We are not here to discuss the chances of what happens when (if?) we win. At that point, all of the cameras will be packed up and gone, and Max Urick probably will need to buy new goal posts. Rather, we are talking about how we conduct ourselves before and during the game.

Be proud you are at a school with so much to offer. Be proud that the truth about K-State is it will offer you a better undergraduate education than almost any other public school in the country. Be proud enough to act responsibly.

Be proud enough to act with class. If you are belligerent this weekend, there will be millions more eyes watching.

Be proud of Coach Bill Snyder and the rest of the team by not ruining their moment of glory. Get loud and stay that way, and don't forget that it has taken 10 years to come to this — since Snyder's first season in 1989 when the Cats finished 1-10.

Be proud enough not to get sucked into the turmoil that is a Nebraska fan. They likely are to be extra-specially obnoxious this weekend, because every Nebraska fan knows this game is critical. If there is a time for you to show restraint, this is it.

There will be many people in town this weekend, and Manhattan will take on a different feel Saturday. Remember to be a little cautious. If you choose to drink and drive, you run a greater risk of injuring yourself or others. Lock your doors, lock your cars and be really careful about leaving drinks unattended.

Remember we are the only people who know that K-State is great. Most of the other people who will be watching on Saturday think K-State is a joke, that Kansas is somewhere near Virginia and the only thing a true Kansan is good at is getting sucked into a tornado and strutting in ruby slippers. In reality, we are the underdogs. For that, we are hated.

When we prove them wrong, we must do it with class. Then there will be no doubt.

Everything you want to know about the zoo

The zoo! For many of you, it was your favorite place to go as a kid. Well, some of us never grew out of it. I've been working in a volunteer or employee capacity in zoos since the eighth grade. In that time, I've often found the most intriguing things to be the visitors.

When you spend any time in a zoo, you hear a lot of the same questions and comments. Most of these come from the kids who are popping off questions with a tenacity that would make Ken Starr proud. Some questions come from adults with a genuine interest. Many visitors have questions but won't ask, so I'll take a shot at covering the most common queries.

First and foremost, you hear people comment or complain that the animals are never doing anything. They say the animals are just lying around all the time. Generally this is not the case. You just have to understand the behavior of the animals to know what they're doing. Many behaviors are subtle to the untrained eye. But, a lot of the time, animals might indeed be doing nothing. Why?

Consider the animals in the wild. If they are herbivorous species, they would spend the majority of their time, 8-12 hours a day, foraging for food. Food sources might be difficult to find or of low quality. In the zoo, the animals are supplied with a highly nutritious diet on a regular basis, which cuts down the time they need to spend foraging to meet their nutrient requirements. So with the free time left over by not having to forage, they can move on to their other concerns.

While feeding, and between feedings, the next item on a herbivore's agenda is avoiding becoming food for any given carnivore. In the zoo, this is completely negated, and eventually, the animals become much less alert than their counterparts in the wild.

With dinner out of the way and no fear of becoming dinner, there's one important activity left — sleeping. With no fear of predators sneaking up, zoo animals can sleep soundly. The only remaining principal activity occurs seasonally in most species — Mating.

For zoo staff, mating season, particularly spring, is a highly amusing time. I get a kick out of watching parents squirm when their four-year-old asks the inevitable and burning question, "Mommy, what are they doing?" The most frequent lie given by parents: "Uh, ... well, I think they're wrestling honey. Let's go look at the monkeys."

People need to be more honest with their kids. Kids know where babies come from: "mommy's tummy." Tell your kids the animals are making baby animals. If you tell them something else, they'll learn about sex from television anyway. Parents might as well be the ones to break it to them.

Yet another reason for inactivity could be the time of day. Zoos generally are open 9 a.m.-5 p.m. If you are a nocturnal animal, this happens to be really inconvenient, because as you're trying to get a little rest, some ugly primates with hardly any hair on their bodies keep banging on the glass to your room, making stupid noises.

Commandment No. 1: Thou shalt not bang on the glass of exhibits like an idiot and make noises you think an animal might make. It's ignorant and not polite to the animals. If I could count the number of times I saw some half-wit pounding on the glass of an exhibit, I also would have a count of the number of times I questioned the efficacy of natural selection.

If you've ever thought an animal must be lonely or crowded, you're falling prey to the Noah's Ark Syndrome. Too many zoos follow it, placing animals in exhibits two by two. Truth of the matter is, many animals might be solitary, coming into contact with others only during the mating season and thus would be unhappy in pairs year round.

Other animals live in large groups naturally and display symptoms of mental illness and depression when exhibited alone or in pairs. Would you want to be cooped up with one other person for years on end? It might be all right for a while, but eventually, they'd drive you over the edge.

The next time you make it out to the zoo, whether it's this weekend or years down the road when you have kids, think about what you see. Zoos are a place to learn and to teach. Ask questions. That's part of the reason the staff is there, and most staff members will be glad to talk with you. Don't shush your kids when they ask questions. Let them have fun, and let them learn.

Swallowing my bitterness

Can this columnist see the good in campus politics?

After a good five years or so lavishing a hefty dose of vitriolic ridicule to the blatant hypocrisy of a large share of our student leaders, this columnist wonders if there is some semblance of good lurking beneath this dark Brownbackian political surface.

Ha! If Adolf Hitler had survived World War II, he surely would have a way to get involved in K-State's campus politics. No one else could invent such ridiculous bureaucratic self-importance as is done day after day on our fair campus — as if mere repetition somehow constituted respectable tradition.

A salute, dear friends, to the résumé mafia — in all their store-bought glory.

As a way to say sayonara to our dear résumé mafia and this columnist's swan song to the elected and chosen campus elite, let us reflect on the new, improved "Official Student Body President's Best Ways to Sell Out at K-State and Become Somebody (Now With Extra Vitamin C)" method of success that has reached so many of our mafioso.

If you are already at K-State, pass this method on to one of your high school chums coming to K-State next year, but not if you are the jealous type who will get frustrated with their guaranteed success as a campus political wunderkind. Use this information wisely, Schmucko. Consider, prospective K-State success story and/or future student:

Pick a proven degree field. Don't pick something that is too practical or fluffy. Go for history, political science, physics or agricultural economics. These are the proven training grounds of the administrative elite. Prowling around in these departments are some choice faculty who love the résumé game and can curry favor with some awful big names on campus (all for your amusement). No one's asking you to believe anything. Hell, if you do, you might as well go to Manhattan Christian College.

Suck up to the right people. You mean you didn't run for Student Senate your freshman year? Forget it, lazy. You're already out of the running. Baby, sweetheart, if you're good to momma, momma's good to you, or so it goes. The fastest way to accomplish this is to forget conviction and agree to act as a puppet for anyone on campus (who consistently wears a coat and tie, mind you).

So, become a student ambassador — the walking dead who tramp around the state dishing out carefully worded homages to the visions (!) of Anderson Hall. Better yet, if you are lucky enough, you'll be chosen exclusively to represent the public relations spin of the Student Alumni Board — those ne'er-do-wells that always have the best student "interests" at heart.

A spoonful of sugar makes the lies go down ever so fast. After a year or two, you'll forget you ever had your own opinions.

Run for higher office. Your breakthrough, dear ones, will come only if you are completely barren of intellectual foresight. Only by being totally removed from rational thought and personal opinion can you ever be considered for say, student body president. Now, not to say all presidents are shallow, but it helps.

For one, the administration will love you. Especially when they bring you into an important meeting to tell you how you are supposed to think on an issue. How many times has Lafene Health Center's funding been saved from the axe by an administration all too willing to tell the "independent" student government how it's going to be. You see, superficial separation of powers is an important charade that, as president, you must strive to maintain.

Rewards or just Desserts? Why bother with all of this time-wasting, intellectual stalling if all you get in the end is a cheap plaque with "Most Outstanding Senator" inscribed on it and your name misspelled. Because, if you play your cards right, Bucko, and join the campus country club, you might qualify yourself for the university's most prized possession — a nomination for one of our superstar scholarships such as the Rhodes, Truman, Goldwater or Marshall.

In the end, it matters little how paltry your intellectual contribution to the campus and society at large is in comparison to your ability at pleasing the powers-that-be. You don't have to prove yourself in a real-world laboratory when the résumé mafia has created its own parallel universe in ass-kissing-dom.

As last week's election demonstrated, the Kansas political system's survival relies on this established success method. Sign on the dotted line, Wildcat.

This weekend let KSU shine in positive light

"Nebraska."

Even uttered on our campus, the word elicits snide remarks and sideways glances. In less than a week, we're not only going to have to hear about Nebraska but mingle with its fans while tailgating, during the game and even in Aggieville (gasp).

How will you respond? It's important to take a step back and look at K-State from the perspective of an outsider — someone in New York, someone in Florida or someone in your hometown. It's important because in less than a week, people in all those places not only will be looking at K-State but judging K-State based mostly on the actions of the football fans. Scary thought.

The public relations majors reading this will realize this is a wonderful opportunity for us to showcase our great student body, our award-winning faculty, our nationally recognized livestock judging and debate teams, our national scholarships and our beautiful campus. K-State truly will be under the magnifying glass for the whole nation to examine. What if we screw up? What if we throw bottles at Nebraska's band like MU did to KU a few weeks ago? What if we do $25,000 worth of damage to our own stadium, like Tennessee did a few months ago? What if we treat Nebraska fans like CU fans treated us when we went to Boulder? All these potential negatives will take the place of positives from the national spotlight. Our spotlight.

According to coaches and The Associated Press, our time in the spotlight this weekend should be more of a rehearsal than a breakthrough performance — business as usual against Nebraska. Obviously, it poses our largest threat so far this season. With Nebraska's losses against Texas and Texas A&M, we suddenly find ourselves in the same position it was in when we visited Lincoln last year. Avoiding upset. We are expected to win.

So how should we celebrate? Celebrating like animals, at this point, would be somewhat similar to stage diving after a piano recital. It just doesn't fit the situation. We will be expected to tailgate with class, cheer with class and celebrate with class. We are a classy institution, and it will show this weekend.

So, as students, faculty and alumni, let's follow the example of our football team and erase any preconceived notions people might have of K-State. We are a classy, national scholastic and athletic leader nestled here in the Flint Hills, taking care of business as usual. And if that means we beat Nebraska, have more Truman Scholars than any other public university in the nation or win a national football championship, well, what did you expect?

Final touchdown was selfish play

Editor,

In the Collegian's account of K-State's 49-6 victory over Baylor, the Wildcats freely choosing to score a touchdown on the game's final play was ignored.

So, Wildcat fans, as you prepare for your game against Nebraska, consider just how disliked your program has become across the conference.

Normally, fans across the Big 12 Conference would pull for anyone against Nebraska, in an underdog spirit. However, for a head coach of a program with as pathetic a graduation rate as yours to insult fans across the Big 12 by claiming your backup quarterback wasn't running a play specifically called from the sidelines by Coach Bill Snyder when he scored that bush league touchdown suspends all credibility.

Snyder — if you can design an offense and a defense, you are at least smart enough to ask one of your fine statistics graduate students there at K-State to explain the selfish benefits of running up the score.

Cyclists should heed safety rules

Editor,

As I read Jay Jeffrey's letter in the Oct. 7 Collegian, I have to agree with some of his points, and yes, cyclists make up a large part of the college community. So, who makes up the remaining population? The population who walks on campus.

At least twice a day, I end up either dodging or getting hit in the side by a speeding bicyclist who is on a campus sidewalk. After I get hit, the bicyclist isn't even courteous enough to say "sorry." That really burns me up. If I remember the law correctly, bicyclists need to recognize the right-of-way of pedestrians, and they need to follow vehicle traffic laws as well.

Also, I remember seeing signs on campus explicitly stating that the area is a dismount zone. It has gotten to the point where I feel safer crossing Denison Avenue near Durland Hall during busy traffic than walking on campus.

Campus police need to enforce bicycle policy and laws strictly, and I am not talking about parking, either. Fines need to be imposed on the bicyclist for riding it in the dismount zones, and stiffer fines need to be placed if the bicyclist is riding the bicycle recklessly and carelessly. But, I would like to see more bicycle routes made and established within campus not only to ensure the safety of the pedestrians but also to give a place for bicyclists to commute to and from classes.

Even though cyclists are here and they are a large part of the community, a huge remainder of the community is made of walking commuters.

809 area code can be sign of trouble

Editor,

I recently learned about a new scam quickly spreading through the Internet that should be brought to the attention of students and faculty. It's the 809 area code scam.

Most people are not aware the 809 area code is in the Caribbean and often is more expensive than 900 numbers.

People might get an e-mail telling them they have won a prize or something similar and to call a number starting with an 809 area code. These calls often cost about $25 a minute, and when you call, they will try to keep you on the line as long as possible.

The scam also is being done over the phone. People might get a message on their answering machines telling them a family member is ill or needs help and to call an 809 area code number.

The problem with this scam is often there is nothing a person can do to dispute the charges. Because the number is not under U.S. authority, there are no laws saying people must be told what they will be charged. Your local phone company simply is collecting the money for the foreign phone company. So, you will have to dispute the charges with the foreign phone company, which will argue that you did in fact make the call.

Guard slot thin for Cats

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the K-State men's basketball team set to tip-off its 1998-99 season Friday night against Saint Mary's at Bramlage Coliseum, Coach Tom Asbury might find a strange kinship to his opposition's name.

After the rash of injuries and dismissals his squad has faced in the past two weeks, calling for help from above might be just what the beleaguered head coach needs after suffering a sudden depletion of guards. "It doesn't seem like we can go through practice without getting someone hurt," Asbury said.

Already suffering from the loss of Ayome May, who left after intestinal problems, and Chris Griffin, who continues to recuperate from knee surgery, the Cats were dealt another series of setbacks this week.

Junior point guard Duane Davis, who Asbury said would contend for the starting position, was dismissed officially from the team Monday due to disciplinary measures.

Asbury would not comment further on the situation but said it was "a done deal." Davis checked out of his residence hall and dropped out of school last week.

To make matters worse, junior guard Josh Reid suffered an ankle injury Monday in practice, leaving his playing time for Friday's game questionable.

"A makeshift backcourt isn't terribly unusual," Asbury said, referring to his plan of using freshmen Cortez Groves and Josh Kimm as the starting guards. "You just have to battle through it, though."

The only bright spot for the Cats appears to be the return of forward Manny Dies, who Asbury said was about 85 percent and ready for the season opener.

Although K-State opens its season without the service of possibly four key contributors, Asbury said the unity of the players has kept the optimism alive for a breakthrough year in the Big 12 Conference.

"The morale of the team is great," he said.

"The remaining players have really pulled together, and their work ethic is very, very good."

Gannon gets nod over Grbac

By DOUG TUCKER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Marty Schottenheimer seems to be doing his best to keep Kansas City's protracted quarterback controversy as hot as possible.

Rich Gannon will start ahead of Elvis Grbac on Monday night against Denver, Schottenheimer said Tuesday, but then he suggested Grbac might return the following week against San Diego.

"Elvis Grbac is the quarterback of the future for the Kansas City Chiefs. I have no doubt about that. None whatsoever," Schottenheimer said. "Rich Gannon is the quarterback for the Denver Broncos game."

In the past, Schottenheimer always has tried to stick with one quarterback.

"We're going to look at it week-to-week," he said. "Right now, my feeling is that we have to create, if you will, an energy that is the product of the style of play of Rich Gannon, his ability to move around, run around with the ball, run the bootlegs, things of that nature. That in my view is what is best for our football team now."

Starting Gannon, 32, is certain to please fans and news media who have been clamoring for Schottenheimer to bench the turnover-prone Grbac, who is 0-4 since coming back from a shoulder injury. Grbac, 28, was jerked late in the first half of last week's 24-12 loss to Seattle after his second interception was returned for a touchdown.

Grbac signed a five-year, $20 million free-agent contract in 1997 but has been inconsistent. He's thrown seven interceptions and lost one fumble in the last three games as the Chiefs (4-5) faded to the brink of playoff extinction.

A poll by The Kansas City Star last week found more than 70 percent of respondents preferred Gannon. Plus, Grbac has been booed mercilessly by the Arrowhead Stadium crowd his past two home games. With a nationwide TV audience looking on Monday night, that might have been a factor in Schottenheimer's decision.

It's the second year the Chiefs have been plagued by a Gannon/Grbac controversy. Gannon was 5-1 leading up to the end of the regular season last year while Grbac recovered from a broken clavicle. Schottenheimer opted for Grbac to start their first playoff game, which the Chiefs lost 14-10 to Denver.

This year, Grbac injured his shoulder in the season opener against Oakland, and Gannon was 3-1 in his place. The Chiefs have not won since Grbac came back.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A sculpture sits in front of Memorial Stadium — the Nebraska Cornhusker's home field in Lincoln, Neb. Any other sculpture wouldn't gain even a glimpse from the average K-State fan, but this work of art is unique.

Titled "Husker Legacy," this bronze statue depicts six Nebraska defenders tackling none other than former K-State halfback Michael Lawrence.

As Saturday's clash between No. 1 K-State and perennial national powerhouse Nebraska looms, this sculpture might be just another example of the increasing rivalry between the two schools.

"I think the statue may add to the rivalry now," Fred Hoppe, the statue's creator, said. "Nebraska/K-State is going to become the big game every year that people are going to want to go to."

Hoppe, who worked on the sculpture for about a year, took the image for the statue from a game photo from the 1995 K-State vs. Nebraska game. "It didn't have anything to do with K-State," Hoppe said. "It was just a photo to show Nebraska's swarming defense."

Hoppe looked at every photo from every game during Nebraska's two national-championship seasons in 1994 and 1995 to find the perfect image for the statue.

"We didn't pick the photo because it was a K-State player," he said. "That photo just happened to have the most artistic merit."

Hoppe said the image proves the determination of Nebraska's defense.

"In those two seasons, most of the defense in most of the games was in the offensive backfield," he said. "It didn't take six players to tackle the quarterback, they just followed through. Their determination was intense."

Though K-State was continuing its rise to dominance in 1995, Hoppe said the statue in no way intended to downplay K-State's football team.

"Nebraska considered K-State on our level at that time, anyway," Hoppe said. "The statue had no colors on it to indicate it was a K-State player."

Hoppe, who talked to Wildcat fans during last year's game, said

Nebraska to look different on sidelines

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday, when the undefeated K-State Wildcats take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers, there will be one noticeable difference on the Husker sidelines.

The last time the Cats faced Nebraska, Dr. Tom Osborne still roamed the sidelines in Lincoln, Neb. Now, the Huskers are in a new era with 15-year Osborne assistant Frank Solich at the helm of one of the greatest college football programs in the country.

Solich's Huskers started the season strong but recently have found themselves out of their traditional top-10 home after losses to Texas A&M and Texas. Questions have started surfacing about whether the Huskers can maintain the same kind of winning program under Solich and whether he can fill the shoes of the legendary Osborne without losing a step.

"He's been there under Osborne for so long," K-State cornerback Lamar Chapman said Tuesday. "He still does a lot of the things that Osborne did."

"You know, he came up under Osborne, so there's no telling. But overall, I don't see much difference in the program."

Coach Bill Snyder said trying to fill the role left by Osborne has to be a tough task, but Solich has done just as good a job as anyone else could.

"What a hard, hard thing to do," Snyder said. "I think he's done great, and I know Frank personally, and I know the kind of person he is."

"I know that there are pressures involved with that. It is a far more difficult task than stepping in here 10 years ago when there was no tradition as there is at Nebraska," Snyder said.

"But I think that as far as how he has done it, for what I know about it — and I don't know everything that's going on up there, either — I think he has done as well as anyone could conceivably do. I don't think there is any reservation about Frank Solich being the right guy up there."

Senior receiver Darnell McDonald said coaching is only one aspect of the game, and in the long run, it falls on the players, and whether they get the job done determines the outcome. He said he doesn't think coaching had a lot to do with the Osborne domination of the Wildcats.

"The players just have to go out and execute," McDonald said. "Tom Osborne was a great coach, but he had some great players, too. So I don't think the coaching had too much to do with it. It had some to do with it, because you have to coach things for them to do well. But after you coach them, the players have to step up and play ball."

Bishop wants revenge for only collegiate loss

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael Bishop only has one blemish on his résumé as a college football quarterback, and it came as a 56-26 loss against Nebraska last season in Lincoln, Neb.

Bishop's stellar 44-1 record (including his days at Blinn Community College) have culminated this season into crushing nearly every K-State quarterback record on the books. He also is up for more awards than he has fingers on his throwing hand, including the Heisman, the Maxwell Award, the Davey O'Brien Award, the Unites Golden Arm Award and a candidacy for All-America honors.

All of those honors and all of those records will be pushed aside when Bishop walks onto the turf at KSU Stadium at 2:30 p.m. Saturday afternoon against the Cornhuskers.

Still on his mind will be that dreadful day, Oct. 4, 1997, when he had to taste defeat for the first and only time in his college career. That loss prompted Bishop to speak out to his teammates and the news media last season, and they were words that were not forgotten.

"It was our first loss, and I feel that we just weren't ready to play a big-time team," receiver Darnell McDonald said. "Mike said in the locker rooms 'I never lost, and I never want to lose again while I'm at K-State.' Everyone took that to heart, and we thought about it and from then on, we've just gotten better and better."

It obviously sunk in to the rest of the Wildcats. K-State has not lost a game since, including a Tostitos Fiesta Bowl victory over Syracuse last New Year's Eve.

Offensive lineman Jeremy Martin's account of Bishop's words after the Nebraska loss were similar to McDonald's, saying, "I think Michael had a lot of emotion after that game, and the loss hurt him tremendously. I can honestly say that I don't think he meant to offend anyone by that."

"I think he meant to challenge some players on this team, and it did. We came back from that game and had a tremendous season."

Bishop emerged as a leader for the Wildcats for the first time after that Nebraska loss, his teammates said.

"I think that was the day that he put his foot in the door of being a leader, and from then on, we've followed him and from every game since then, we've won," McDonald said.

Martin said, "I believe that was a growing process for him last year. He came back the next week and proved that he was a confident leader on this team, and he led us to the Fiesta Bowl."

Since making comments about a teammate preceding the Colorado game this year, K-State coach Bill Snyder once again has withheld Bishop from the news media. However, while he hasn't been able to comment on his play, McDonald said you can bet Bishop has been preparing to lead the Wildcats in their rematch against Nebraska.

"He's more ready than anyone on the team," he said.

"He's up here watching films every day, all day, until about 10 o'clock or 11 just trying to get any edge he can against Nebraska's defense."

NEAR and FAR

Two artists give two approaches to landscape

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

The landscapes of local artists Cheri Graham and Jean M. Ponte could not be more different.

Yes, each artist employs conventional methods of painting and drawing, and both depict rather ordinary natural imagery. The two differ, at least most obviously, in their use of perspective — Graham using the customary one for her roadside scenes, and Ponte using a flat, shallow perspective for her abstract arrangements of rocks and plants.

In simple terms, Graham is looking at the whole landscape from afar, while Ponte gives us the near — not the sort of microscopic near that one expects but a colorful abstract one.

The two artists' work can be seen in the show "Earth and Water" until Nov. 30 at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Graham's colored pastels are frantic and, as recent weather confirms, realistic depictions of the windblown, fire-strewn, messy Kansas prairie.

She said she and her husband enjoy driving around the countryside, getting lost and finding intriguing scenes to photograph, which she then uses as the basis of her work.

"I paint what I enjoy," Graham said. "I don't offer much emotion. I just want to convey the beauty of Kansas because a lot of people don't get out and enjoy what's there."

The photographic qualities of Graham's images do make themselves known.

In some pieces, such as "Scenic Drive — Alma," formal aspects recall to the imagination a still photo in some lush Merchant-Ivory film that is just coming into focus.

Little treats are hidden inside the work, as well. Graham employs extraordinary amounts of color, especially blue, which seems to add a richness to everything from evergreen trees to wildflowers. "Prairie Fireline," a depiction of a grass fire in the early stages, ignites in strings of orange grass, catching the exact instance the fire takes yet another acre.

Graham doesn't make any pretenses about attempting to accomplish something more sublime than her casually decorative prairie pictures. If her work sometimes evokes the extreme abstraction of local artist Judy Love's similarly colorful works, it's only loosely so. Certainly Love is much more capable of distilling the essence of the prairie, letting those who have experienced it themselves fill in the details.

Ponte, on the other hand, glosses over minute details in her intimate studies of natural shapes, mostly of water running over rocks. Her work is mellow and casual, in part because of the light application of acrylic paint on the surface. Her work is taken from the landscape surrounding her cottage in Michigan. "I've gone to that cottage every year of my life," Ponte said. "It's just natural."

A recent K-State graduate in art, Ponte makes subtle gestures to art history. "Picture Rocks," acrylic on canvas, is an all-over composition in green, yellow, pink and brown in the manner of abstract expressionism. "Breaking," acrylic on canvas, is a wonderfully horizontal painting of a section of seashore done over in a pointillistic spray of paint on the surface.

The way the organic line of foamy water meanders across the canvas is transfixing, suggesting life itself.

Not one to wax philosophical about her art, Ponte comes across a bit eccentric. With nearly all of her paintings done in a green color scheme, the artist chose to wear red at last Friday's opening.

With this show and the last one with Jim Hagan and Margaret Buie, the arts center is pretty much ground-zero in Manhattan for landscape artists.

With consistently good sales in the genre, it's obvious the arts center has struck a nerve with local patrons eager to snatch up genuine art of the surrounding, and sometimes foreign, countryside.

The work in this show, like others, can be inconsistent and unconvincing at times. However, there is a place for this work and a public that should delight in them.

TV talk-show host coming to Union

■ Lecture will focus on cultural diversity.

By JENN DAVOREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

Talk-show host, stand-up comedian and doctor of sociology Bertice Berry will share her thoughts on cultural diversity at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Union Station.

Admission to the event, sponsored by the Union Program Council Multicultural Committee, American Ethnic Studies and Trio Programs, is free.

UPC program adviser Heide McBride said much of the lecture will focus on Berry's book, "Bertice: The World According to Me."

"Her book will be sold at the lecture, and she'll be doing a book signing afterwards," McBride said.

Anyone interested also may pick up a copy of Berry's book beforehand at the K-State Student Union Bookstore.

After receiving her doctorate in sociology from Kent State University, Berry decided to turn her attention toward the stage.

Berry won an amateur-night contest at a small comedy club, and her life in the spotlight took off from there.

She was host to and produced her syndicated talk show, "The Bertice Berry Show," and appeared on the sketch-comedy show "The World According to Us" and Lifetime's "Girls' Night Out."

Berry is best known as the current host of "USA Live," the USA Network's live interactive talk show.

When not busy with her television work, Berry tours college campuses across the country, lending her personal brand of humor to her discussions of current events.

She was named "Lecturer of the Year" by the National Association for Campus Activities in 1992 for her popular presentations.

UPC multicultural committee also is looking forward to next semester's presentations, which include a lecture by John Leonard Harris in remembrance of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and the all-female singing group Imani.

Smokers might need Viagra

By JOSEPH B. VERRENGIA
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Are you willing to give up your sex life for cigarettes?

For years, scientists have been warning that smoking can contribute to impotence as well as fertility problems in men. Now anti-smoking forces have seized on that finding as a potentially powerful new way to get people to kick the habit.

In California, a $21-million campaign launched in June includes a commercial showing a cigarette drooping limply. Its message is "Cigarettes. Still Think They're Sexy?"

In Thailand, the health ministry ordered the nation's tobacco monopoly to print a new warning on cigarette packs: "Cigarette smoking causes sexual impotence."

In England, public health activists are lobbying for a similar warning label.

The impotence risk — and strategy — are attracting media attention, too. Sunday news, CBS's "60 Minutes" devoted a segment to the subject.

Activists said they are hoping the message will get through to people who weren't deterred by the generations of warnings about slow-developing threats such as cancer, emphysema and heart disease, which altogether kill 400,000 smokers in the United States annually.

"What a terrible problem for the man, because he is so physically addicted," said Elizabeth Whelan, director of the American Council on Science and Health, which opposes tobacco companies. "It will be interesting to see if this motivates men — especially young men — to disassociate themselves from that image of impotence."

Statistician Steven J. Milloy, who regularly contradicts what he said he regards as "junk science" and frequently sides with the tobacco industry, said anti-smoking forces are distorting a 1994 study by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that concluded smokers are twice as likely as non-smokers to be impotent.

Milloy adjusted the CDC data to consider blood vessel disease, hormone imbalances and other risk factors.

As a result, he said, the link between smoking and impotence became statistically insignificant.

The impotence-and-smoking message has been boosted, in part, by the runaway popularity of Viagra.

Pfizer Inc. reported that three of four men who participated in its clinical trials for Viagra were smokers. Pfizer found 21 percent of men with erectile dysfunction have underlying conditions such as high blood pressure, heart disease and diabetes — all of which can be caused or complicated by smoking.

Urologists said smoking can diminish erections by reducing blood flow in the penis, just as it can clog blood vessels to the heart.

In studies published since 1989, between 39 percent and 82 percent of the men suffering from vascular impotence were smokers.

Smoking can reduce fertility in men, too.

Chemical compounds in cigarette smoke can change levels of hormones and enzymes that affect the number, shape and mobility of sperm — all important factors in conception.

Clive Bates, director of the London-based Action on Smoking and Health, said the warnings about smoking and impotence are shockingly effective, because cigarettes often are associated with the after-sex experience.

"The advantage of the penis from a communications point of view is that it is easy to imagine it shriveled up and shrunken," Bates said, "whereas damage to other vital organs such as the heart is much less obvious."

STATUE

K-State fans actually were delighted he chose to display a K-State player for the statue.

"They were almost honored that I picked a K-State player," he said. "K-State fans were smiling and laughing about it. They didn't care that the player was getting clobbered, they were just glad we used a KSU player."

Many K-State fans said they were excited about the newfound rivalry between the two schools.

"For the last twenty-some-odd years, Nebraska has just beat the crap out of us," Quinten Austin, sophomore in business, said.

"For so many years, we were the joke of the conference. The games were not even close, and we didn't challenge them. They looked past us. But now, we're gaining respect," Austin said.

Luke Pauls, freshman in open option, said Nebraska doesn't look down on K-State this year.

"This year we are their big game," he said. "The Nebraska/KSU rivalry has stepped up the past few years. That game has been the key to our season."

Austin said this year's Nebraska squad doesn't look like the Nebraska of old.

"With K-State's talent, they have become the dominant team in the conference and in the nation," he said.

"All I have to say is, better dead than red, and I'll be the first one to tear the goal posts down when we win on Saturday."

Hoppe said Nebraska fans are excited about K-State becoming Nebraska's rival.

"Last year's tickets were higher at the K-State game than they were at any other home game last season," he said.

"The fans are excited about K-State becoming a powerhouse. They think it's great. They are hoping that it will be K-State every year."

A's Grieve wins AL Rookie of the Year honors

By JOSH DUBOW
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Ben Grieve couldn't have faced much loftier expectations as a rookie.

A former first-round draft pick and minor-league player of the year, Grieve was counted on to deliver immediately for the Oakland Athletics, especially after he hit major-league pitching with such ease in September 1997.

Deliver he did. Grieve met all of the expectations this year and was rewarded Tuesday by easily winning the AL Rookie of the Year.

"I was hoping I would get it the whole year," Grieve said of the award. "I tried not to think of it too much, but it got kind of old listening to all the talk."

The 22-year-old right fielder was the only candidate named on all 28 ballots. He received 23 first-place votes and five seconds to finish with 130 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

Grieve, whose father Tom played in the major leagues and was the former general manager of the Texas Rangers, led AL rookies with 168 hits, 18 home runs, 94 runs, 41 doubles and 89 RBIs. He led the club in on-base percentage, at-bats, hits, doubles, walks and was second in runs.

He batted .288 and made just two errors in the outfield.

Grieve is the fifth A's player to win the award, joining Walt Weiss (1988), Mark McGwire (1987), Jose Canseco (1986) and Harry Byrd (1952).

"It means a lot after a long season to get recognition like this," Grieve said. "But at the same time, it doesn't change anything. It's just an award. I can't get too much of a big head next year."

Tampa Bay pitcher Rolando Arroyo earned four first-place votes and 61 points. Chicago shortstop Mike Caruso was third with 34 points, followed by New York's Orlando "El Duque"

Hernandez, who finished with 25 points and the other first-place vote.

Grieve, who hit three doubles and drove in five runs in his major-league debut in 1997, faced the added pressure of being one of the only stars on a mostly nondescript Oakland team. Grieve hit .312 with three homers and 24 RBIs as a September call-up.

"That gave me extra confidence, knowing I could succeed against big-league level pitching," he said. "I knew I could hit, but that month gave me the confidence this year that I could do it day in and day out."

He followed that up by scorching through the first half of this season batting .311 with 11 homers and becoming the first Oakland player since McGwire to play in the All-Star game. After that, he slumped, hitting just .258 in the second half.

"Everyone else was more worried about it than I was," Grieve said. "I've had slumps before and gotten out of them. This one lasted longer because I was facing big-league pitching. I started to get out of it the last month which gives me confidence going into next year."

Arroyo and Hernandez, both Cuban defectors, were the top rookie pitchers in the AL. Arroyo, who defected during the 1996 Olympics, went 14-12 with a 3.56 ERA and made the All-Star team. Hernandez, who fled Cuba on a raft last December, went 12-4 with a 3.13 after being called up on June 3.

Caruso led AL rookies with a .306 average, but made 35 errors at shortstop.

Chicago's Kerry Wood, who grew up just a few miles from Grieve in Texas and played against him in high school, won the NL Rookie of the Year award on Monday.

"Let's just say I'm glad he's in the National League," said Grieve, who did hit one homer off Wood in high school. "It says something about baseball in the Dallas area that two guys could come through and be successful like this."

SERVICE

come out so far may have caused some questions," she said.

She said Tom Richardson met Lawless because of a DUI he received. Lawless was his parole officer. Lawless had an obsession with him, which grew until September or October of this year, she said.

At that point, Lawless began to stalk Tom Richardson, but he did not return Lawless' affection, she said.

"Tommy did everything possible to keep Brent Lawless away," Elaine Richardson said. "Lawless kept stalking him, and finally, Tom told Lawless to leave him alone."

Shortly after Richardson told Lawless to go away, his tires were slashed, and his car was vandalized. Later, he began to receive death threats, Elaine Richardson said.

Tom Richardson had planned to move to San Diego and officially left K-State on Oct. 22, his mother said.

"Tom was scared. He moved in with his girlfriend and only went to his apartment every once in a while. He was even thinking about changing his name and Social Security number," Elaine Richardson said.

On the morning of Oct. 26, Tom Richardson went to his apartment and found Lawless inside. Police said Lawless entered by stepping on the air conditioner unit to reach the balcony. They said they suspect Lawless came to convince Tom Richardson to let him go to San Diego with him, Elaine Richardson said.

Lawless was carrying a gun and said he was going to commit suicide. Richardson was able to persuade him not to kill himself and placed a 911 call to ask for help, Elaine Richardson said.

She also said she was told Lawless did not usually carry a gun, and he came to Richardson's apartment planning to use it.

Police told her Lawless shot him from 10 feet away after he had hung up the phone.

Elaine Richardson said she believed her son's death could have been avoided.

"I learned that Brent Lawless had a history of stalking people he met through his job. He used his authority as a parole officer to take advantage of young people in difficult situations," Elaine Richardson said.

"I also learned that his supervisors were aware of his tendencies and still allowed him to keep his job. I partly blame the state of Kansas for Tommy's death."

Richardson also asked people to come forward with any more information about her son's death.

"Please share any information you know with the police so justice can be served and Tom's death won't be in vain," Elaine Richardson said.

Several of Tom Richardson's friends shared memories of his life later in the service.

Jason Musick, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said Tom was friendly despite his quietness.

"He was gentle and kind. I never once saw Tom with a frown. He always smiled, was always happy and always had time to say 'Hi,'" Musick said.

Gary Davis, of Manhattan, said he regretted there weren't many people who knew Tom Richardson.

"The saddest thing was that no one was allowed to know Tom or to say goodbye," Davis said. "I hope that in the short time I knew Tom, I earned to right to be called his friend."

Rev. Victor Force, of First Presbyterian church, ended the service with a short meditation and spoke highly of Richardson.

"Tom had a questioning mind. He had no clue how much influence he had on people or how much he was loved by his friends, family and God," Force said.

Clinton, Cohen double U.S. firepower in Persian Gulf

By ROBERT BURNS
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton ordered warships, planes and troops to the Persian Gulf Wednesday in a sizable buildup, as he laid out his case for a possible attack on Iraq.

Allowing Saddam Hussein to flout the will of the United Nations by rejecting weapons inspections would only embolden him to act recklessly, Clinton said in a Veterans Day speech at Arlington National Cemetery.

"We continue to hope — indeed, pray — that Saddam will comply," the president said. "But we must be prepared to act if he does not."

Meanwhile, U.S. ships headed toward the Gulf, and Defense Secretary William Cohen ordered dozens of Air Force fighters and bombers, additional Patriot air-defense missiles and 3,000 soldiers to the area, roughly doubling U.S. firepower.

"Nowhere is our vigilance more urgent than in the Persian Gulf, where Saddam Hussein's regime threatens the stability of one of the most vital regions of the world," Clinton said in a speech that suggested he was still weighing his options.

State Department also withdraws 200 personnel, families from embassies

Adding to the crisis atmosphere, the State Department withdrew as many as 200 nonessential personnel and their families from embassies in Israel and Kuwait, citing the mounting tensions since Iraq stopped cooperating with weapons inspectors of the United Nations Special Commission on Oct. 31. The department also suggested private U.S. citizens in Kuwait should leave.

The U.N. withdrew several hundred weapons inspectors and other U.N. staff from Baghdad in light of the possibility of American airstrikes. The U.N. Security Council called an emergency meeting as Secretary-General Kofi Annan appealed to Hussein to immediately resume cooperation with inspectors. Annan said he was "saddened and burdened" by Iraq's defiance.

The Security Council passed a resolution this week condemning Iraq's noncooperation, but it did not include an explicit go-ahead for military action. The Clinton administration contends that earlier resolutions on Iraq give it the right to use force, although some U.N. members dispute that.

The timing of any possible U.S.

CLINTON

action was unclear. Clinton spent the afternoon on the golf course, and his aides said he still planned to travel to Malaysia on Saturday for a meeting of Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation nations, although that trip probably would be scrapped if airstrikes were ordered. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright put off her departure for Malaysia from Thursday to Friday, spokesman James Rubin said, to give her another day in Washington D.C., to deal with the Iraq issue.

Clinton, in his speech, issued no

"I AM REALLY PROUD TO BE AN AMERICAN TODAY."

The ROTC joint color guard raises an American flag Wednesday afternoon in front of Military Science Hall as part of Manhattan's Veterans Day celebration. The flag pole was donated by Dykstra Hall.

Katherine Hotland, sophomore in mathematics and member of Air Force ROTC, salutes the flag as it is being raised during the dedication.

Flag pole relocated, dedicated as part of Veterans Day

A flagpole, recently relocated to the front of Military Science Hall, was dedicated Wednesday as part of Manhattan's Veterans Day celebration.

"We are dedicating the flagpole to all of the veterans in the area," said Chad Johnson, freshman in computer engineering.

The dedication ceremony began with a welcome from Air Force ROTC commander Col. Stan Weir.

Weir gave special thanks to all of the cadets, veterans and citizens who contributed to the flagpole's relocation and restoration. It was originally located in front of Dykstra Hall's U.S. Post Office.

Weir said he was grateful because without the donation, the Department of Military Science could not have afforded a new pole.

The relocation was a combined effort by the Army and Air Force ROTC programs. Lt. Col. Robert Kennedy, Army ROTC commander, said the joint effort put forth by both programs was remarkable.

"Your business will be joint when you get into the real Army and Air Force," he said to the cadets. "I am really proud to be an American today."

Kennedy also thanked the ROTC cadets who spent a great deal of time polishing the flagpole and digging its new plot.

"It was a lot of effort when you are going to college at the same time," he said. "It is a powerful symbol that will be here for many years to come."

Retired Army Brig. Gen. Richard Fye gave the dedication.

"I am going to focus on the flag and put it into a veterans' context," he said. "It means an awful lot to you, and the sight of it means an awful lot."

Fye said that although citizens are taught to respect the flag at an early age by the Pledge of Allegiance, the use of the flag is limited.

But for veterans it is different, Fye said. They see the flag on installations, bases and ships. They see the flag raised and lowered. They know that when the cannons go off, they are to face the flagpole and salute, he said.

"That gets imbedded in a person's mind," he said.

As an example of the meaning and symbolism of the American flag, Fye told a personal story of patriotism.

In 1975, when Fye was first promoted to brigadier general, he was stationed in

'College GameDay' coming to K-State

By MIKE VIETTI
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly a decade after the reconstruction of K-State football began, ESPN finally will give some recognition to K-State football Saturday by broadcasting its football show, "College GameDay," live from KSU Stadium preceding K-State's showdown against Nebraska.

K-State fans will have their chance to show ESPN, as well as a national audience, the improvements the football program has made under Coach Bill Snyder.

The set for "College GameDay," which will feature host Chris Fowler and analysts Lee Corso and Kirk Herbstreit, will be on the field near the east side of KSU Stadium. Each person must present his or her game ticket to get into the stadium to see "College GameDay."

Stadium parking will open at 7 a.m., with the southeast and southwest gates of KSU Stadium opening at 8:30 a.m. "College GameDay" will have a live segment shot for the morning edition of "SportsCenter" at 9:30 a.m.

The actual show runs from 10 to 11:10 a.m. Upon completion of the show, the stadium will be cleared out and will reopen at 12:30 p.m.

The staging of "College GameDay" in Manhattan has caused many fans to set aside their frustrations about previous news media slights and become excited about seeing the show in person.

"The show coming here is extremely exciting," Amanda Sorg, freshman in arts and sciences, said. "ESPN is a nationwide network, so this is a good opportunity to put K-State on the map."

The arrival of "College GameDay" in the Little Apple has some K-State fans ready to be superfans.

"I don't care if it's 30 degrees outside and all I have to wear is a pair of boxer shorts," Scott Rosborough, sophomore in

Crew members make mark on football field

Flag-football wins team squad free trip to New Orleans.

By DESIREE LAMBERSON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eleven members of the K-State Crew team might be playing in the Sugar Bowl this year.

After going undefeated in Nike's regional flag-football tournament last weekend in Lincoln, Neb., K-State Crew won an all-expense paid trip to New Orleans for the national competition Dec. 27-Jan. 1.

"We thought we would do well but deep down, I didn't think we would win," said Nicole Wilson, senior in secondary education.

The two top teams at the national competition then will have the opportunity to scrimmage during halftime of the Sugar Bowl. The sponsors of the tournament, Nike and Cinnaburst Gum, pay all travel and lodging expenses for the team — approximately $12,000.

"I've been there before and I've seen teams from Mexico and South America ... all over pretty much," said Ron Miller, assistant director of intramurals.

Team members are excited about the upcoming tournament.

"I think it will be awesome to play there," Wilson said. "We love competition."

The team decided to try their chances at the regional competition in Lincoln after winning the intramural championship this year at K-State, sponsored by the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"It's actually an open tournament, but this year, I approached some of the better teams to see if they would be interested in going," Miller said.

Four other K-State teams attended the tournament. The other women's teams were Kappa Alpha Theta sorority and Alpha Chi Omega sorority. The men's teams were the Naked Bootleggers and Polk High.

At the regional competition, each team had to compete in a three-team pool. After going undefeated, K-State Crew advanced to a single-elimination tournament where they also went undefeated, beating a team from Southwest Missouri State, 32-0; winning against a team from Missouri-Rolla, 6-0; and defeating a team from Northern Iowa State, 26-0, for the championship.

In addition to the championship, individual members of the team also won awards. Amy Short, senior open-option, won All-Star Rusher; Danielle Frieling, senior in nutrition and exercise science, won All-Star Receiver; and LJ Sedlacek, senior in modern languages, won most valuable player.

Frieling said the team may have a few practices and add new plays prior to the competition.

"We might practice a little, but I think we'll just wing it," she said. "We all have really hectic schedules."

Wilson said she believed the team would do well at the national competition.

"We think we'll do well, but we have to remember that all of the other teams won their regional competition, too," Wilson said.

In addition to the flag football teams, four K-State officials also went to the regional competition. Nathan Meyer, senior in history, was named All-Regional Official and also won a trip to New Orleans.

"It's kind of impressive," Miller said. "This is the first time we've sent any officials. All four of them made it to the semifinals. K-State was well represented."

Technology upgrade set for campus police

K-State Police recently received a grant to install four laptop computers in their patrol cars.

Funding for the laptops will be provided by a federal grant from the U.S. Department of Justice. The grant is for $12,250, and campus police will match the grant with $5,250. The total cost for the laptops is $17,500.

"It will provide more information at our fingertips," said Capt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police.

The laptops will make it easier for officers to process information and run reports. The computers will contain programs that will pull up statistics on vehicles, run license tag numbers and provide other information for reports. Mellgren said the officers will be able to fill out and complete reports right in their cars instead of going back to the office.

"Up front it is not a great benefit to our officers, but more to our clerical staff," he said. "It cuts down one step on the process."

Lt. Dave Johnson said the officers will be able to do their office work in the patrol cars. This will allow the officers to stay out on the streets instead of in the office. He said the new technology will benefit not only the campus police but also the public.

"If the officers are in the car, they will be closer to the citizens than if they were back at the office working on a desktop," Johnson said. "If they are out on the streets, they are visual and available, but if they are in the office they may be available but not as visual."

Board selects editor, advertising manager

The Board of Student Publications announced the hiring of the Collegian advertising manager and editor in chief for the 1999 spring semester at its meeting Wednesday.

Chelsea Earhart, junior in advertising, will be the spring advertising manager for the Collegian. She currently is the assistant advertising manager. She has spent six semesters working for the Collegian and was the advertising manager this past summer. Also, she was the assistant manager of the 1998-99 Campus Connections. She is from Osage City, Kan.

"I have a lot of ideas, and I'm glad I'll be given the chance to implement them next semester," Earhart said.

Travis D. Lenkner, sophomore in print journalism, will be editor in chief for the upcoming spring semester. He currently is serving as news editor for the Collegian. He is from Pratt, Kan.

"It's an honor to be chosen to lead one of the best college newspapers in the country," Lenkner said. "I'm excited for the opportunity to serve and hope I can help keep the Collegian as the trusted voice for every student on campus."

Questions still linger after shooting spree

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — William E. Lattin Jr. dressed in fatigues, strapped two guns to his body, walked seven steps down the stoop of his apartment and opened a barrage of gunfire that has disturbed the calm of this Missouri River town.

"It's like when you're a child and you lose your innocence," Juanita Talley, 57, said inside a donut shop Wednesday. "You lose a little faith in humanity."

Lattin's shooting rampage Tuesday evening ended with two dead — a police officer and Lattin himself. Three other people were wounded.

Police said they still don't know for sure what prompted Lattin, 33, to open fire while walking down a block in his neighborhood. He may have been targeting police officers, Lt. Jim Connors said.

"The indication from some statements by civilians indicate he'd look at some people and wave them on," he said. "He seemed to be going for vehicles that resembled police vehicles. That is what we believe at this time, that this was an assault on police officers."

Witnesses said Lattin shook the rifle in a taunting manner before exchanging fire with police behind a church about a block from the intersection where the shootings began. He was shot and killed as he stepped from behind a tree.

Police officer Bradley T. Arn, 28, the first officer to respond to reports of gunshots shortly after 5 p.m., was killed when Lattin fired several times at his squad car with a rifle. One shot penetrated the right rear window and struck Arn in the head.

Lattin had been arrested on Sept. 30 on a city charge of carrying a concealed weapon. Police records show Lattin had been arrested another 12 times since 1985. The offenses range from burglary to destruction of property and possession of a controlled substance. Three arrests involved weapons.

Police say that Lattin's mother, father and brother hadn't kept in close contact with him for about 18 months, even though all of them live in this city of 70,000 people on the Missouri River. Lattin's family told police he was always a loner.

"I haven't seen him for quite some time, but we're doing all right," Lattin's father, William Lattin Sr. of St. Joseph, told The Associated Press in a phone interview.

When asked if he knew why his son went on a shooting rampage, the elder Lattin said, "No, I have no idea why he did this, and I'd rather not talk anymore."

William E. Lattin Jr. had an assault rifle and a 12-gauge shotgun strapped to his body, as well as a knife and several rounds of ammunition around his waist. He carried a black powder pistol in a bag. Police said the assault rifle was bought recently at a local pawn shop.

Investigators blew open the door on Lattin's apartment early Wednesday. Police had gotten information that Lattin had possibly wired his door, but no explosives were found in his apartment. Investigators did find another pistol, more ammunition, black powder supplies, knives and a gas mask in the apartment, Connors said. Lattin lived alone in the apartment, which overlooks the site of the shooting.

Defense industry aids Livingston campaigns

WASHINGTON — Bob Livingston, the man in line to become House speaker, has gotten more financial support from defense companies than any other source over the years, even though his Louisiana district has no major Pentagon installations.

That's because in the Washington money game, where you sit matters more than where you're from, and for the last four years, Livingston has sat atop the Appropriations Committee, deciding where billions of federal dollars are spent.

The defense industry, a big suitor before Livingston's committee and one he has helped spare from harsher spending cuts, accounted for as much as $1 in every $5 he raised during his 1996 re-election bid.

"Livingston's profile reflects political reality in Washington," said Larry Makinson, executive director of the Center for Responsive Politics, a non-partisan group that tracks campaign contributions.

"It's not where you're from, it's where you sit. He sits on the Appropriations Committee."

For years, the only avenue special interests had to donate to Livingston was his campaign committee, Makinson said.

But with his political profile growing, the Louisiana Republican in March formed a PAC to collect additional money that he can use to spend on political travel or to sow good will with contributions to GOP colleagues.

In just half a year, Livingston's Building our Bases PAC, had collected a whopping $1.1 million. Much came from interests with business pending before the Appropriations Committee.

"We are here to raise money for Republican candidates," said John Emling, executive director of Livingston's leadership PAC. "The timing of the contributions? We get them when they're sent."

HEROES REMEMBERED

Veteran finds man who saved his life amid Veteran's Day crowd in Washington

By JOSEPH SCHUMAN
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Amid the Veterans Day crowds at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, Done! Erickson happened onto the man who carried him from a fire-fight three decades ago and saved his life.

On June 9, 1969, 1st Lt. Stephen Maness, a platoon leader only three months in Vietnam, pulled squad Sgt. Erickson away from a skirmish after Erickson was shot through both legs. Maness was awarded the Silver Star.

"You never find out what happened to people," Maness, now 51, said Wednesday. "It was such a people mill," he said. "He was gone, and the next day someone came in and took his place."

Erickson and Maness might very well have missed each other at the Wall's Veterans Day ceremony, unaware they live only miles apart: Erickson in Washington, D.C. Maness in suburban Fairfax Station, Va.

Balmy weather and a clear blue sky prompted thousands to come to pay their respects and remember. The group, mostly men, held dozens of U.S. and brigade and company flags, including one representing the 196th Light Infantry Brigade — khaki, with a field of sky blue and a looped yellow rope with both ends aflame. That's the one that brought Maness and Erickson together.

Erickson, 52, was standing with other veterans of the 196th, talking about their war. "I come down here every year looking for my unit," said Erickson, who now works as an education specialist for the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

In the space of 10 minutes, several other vets came by to shake hands and say they too were with the 196th.

One was Maness. When he said he was with Erickson's unit, the 3rd Battalion of the 21st Infantry of the 196th Light Infantry Brigade, the two looked each other over and then started asking questions: "Do you remember ..."

Suddenly, Erickson said, "I've got a picture of you," and the story unfolded: Their unit came under heavy fire in the mountains west of Tam Ky after helicoptering in to rescue a smaller reconnaissance unit. Erickson left a covered area to pick up a fallen comrade and was shot by a sniper. Maness, the platoon leader he barely knew, went in and carried him out. "This guy, he saved my life," Erickson said.

Emotionally moved, Maness responded, "I remember. I carried you to the helicopter, to the dust-off. You were really in pain."

"I had your blood all over me," Maness said. He never saw Erickson again until Wednesday.

Erickson was flown to a hospital in Danang and almost lost a leg, saved by several operations. Maness received the Silver Star for the episode, for what his citation describes as "gallantry in action against an armed hostile force."

Erickson said later that he had tried to track down his savior since the war but had mistakenly remembered his lieutenant's name as "Manning."

On Wednesday, they hugged, grasped hands and talked for more than 20 minutes, about officers they hated and friends killed in combat whose names are on the memorial's wall.

"I don't think too much about Vietnam, when I meet these guys again ...," Maness said before leaving.

"My memories have just been flooding back all day since I met him," Maness said.

Gingrich's future still undetermined; some speculate run for presidency

By RON FOURNIER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — On his way out of Congress, Newt Gingrich is promising to explore "many avenues for a public life," a phrase that has triggered speculation that he might be heading for the road to the White House.

Gingrich isn't saying whether he will run for president in 2000. His closest advisers say he won't decide for weeks or months.

However as he ponders his future, picking up the pieces from disappointing midterm elections, Republicans are debating whether Gingrich could be a serious contender.

Supporters argue that Gingrich is still a top party fund-raiser and a leader with "big ideas" who energizes audiences like no other Republican, including poll-topping Gov. George W. Bush of Texas.

"I'm a big fan of George W. Bush, but it's a long way to go between now and ... 2000," said longtime Gingrich adviser Rich Galen.

Gingrich "has such incredible energy and intellect that he would have the ability to drive the race by his very presence," said Tom Rath, a New Hampshire party leader who is helping former Tennessee Gov. Lamar Alexander position for the 2000 race.

Others say Gingrich is too scarred by the wars of Washington to make a serious run.

"It would defeat everything he's achieved with his graceful exit from the House," said Republican media consultant Alex Castellanos of Alexandria, Va. He said Gingrich has been the GOP "point man" for too long.

"The good news is the point man gets to blaze the trail. The bad news is you get shot full of bullet holes doing it," Castellanos said.

Exit polls on Nov. 3 showed that nearly six of every 10 voters nationwide viewed Gingrich unfavorably. Even in his home state of Georgia, he could muster only a 47 percent favorable rating.

"His negatives are just too high," said Tom Slade, chairman of the Florida

GOP, though he called Gingrich the party's most articulate spokesman and fund raiser.

Gingrich's chances also might be hurt by perceptions among conservatives that he capitulated too often in negotiations with President Clinton.

"I think Newt did a lot of good things early on but as a leader he got away from our message and that resulted in what happened in the elections," said Tim Lambert of Texas, a leading conservative voice among Republican National Committee members.

As for the midterm elections, Steve Grubbs, chairman of the Iowa Republican Party, said, "I think the loss of five House seats was a very serious setback for a Gingrich presidential run."

... There is a lot of disappointment among the rank and file."

Yet critics and supporters alike say Gingrich's chances might be helped by his decision to leave the House. He soon could begin retooling his political image, free of the bickering that helped cement his reputation as a Washington firebrand.

"The run is easier, if he decides to make it, by not being burdened with the responsibility of speaker," said Slade, the Florida GOP chairman. "But the fact that he had to resign as speaker in order to prevent a very divisive situation in the House kind of speaks for itself. ... He's a polarizing figure."

Gingrich ally Galen said, "He's got more time to think about what he wants to say and how he wants to say it, because he's not spending 18 hours a day in meetings ... in the Capitol."

Advisers say that while being House speaker was his lifelong goal, Gingrich may be looking for a new place in history.

In a Monday night speech to GOPAC, a political action committee he helped form, Gingrich sprinkled his remarks with comments that raised questions about his presidential ambitions.

"There are many avenues for a public life beyond the speakership," he said.

"As I leave public office and rejoin the ranks of active citizenship the venue changes and the cause lives on."

77% of Kansans believe it's time to let Southwestern Bell compete for long distance

It's been more than two years since telecommunications legislation was passed, designed to bring real competition to the telephone-service industry. All this time the big long-distance providers have chosen not to compete for local residential services. By doing so, they have kept Southwestern Bell out of the long-distance market.

In a recent statewide survey, Kansas residential telephone customers were asked: "Should Southwestern Bell be allowed to compete for long distance if companies like AT&T, MCI and Sprint were allowed to serve local residential customers but chose to provide local service only to large business customers?"

The overwhelming majority of Kansans—77 percent—said, "Yes, let Southwestern Bell into long distance."

In the same survey, three out of four Kansas customers said they believed competition would improve telephone prices and services more readily than regulation. And 80 percent said they would like to have the option of buying both local and long-distance service from a single provider.

Now recently, AT&T announced their intention to merge with Tele-Communication, Inc. (TCI), the nation's largest cable company. The merger would position AT&T to offer residential service to about one-third of the homes in America. We think that's great. We're ready to compete with AT&T and other providers for local and long-distance service.

Kansas telephone customers want the benefits of real competition. It's time to allow Southwestern Bell to compete for long-distance service in Kansas. That's why we're challenging the big long-distance companies to "Meet us in the marketplace. Now."

OUR VIEW

Schoolwork cannot be neglected now

With numerous events going on at K-State and with final exams in the distant future, it may seem very easy to become distracted from your main priority at K-State: academics.

Nearly everyone will have a different excuse this month for procrastination. No matter if you're excited about the upcoming Nebraska game Saturday — and who isn't? — or if you're counting down the days until Thanksgiving break, there are several reasons why some students are putting off that homework until the last minute.

However, the consequences for doing so are severe.

Common knowledge dictates that neglect of homework and studies can lower students' grade point averages, which, in turn, can result in academic probation and, ultimately, academic dismissal. Just ask anyone who has been through it or is going through it now. Chances are, they'll tell you that all the fun and distractions of college life weren't worth it.

This is the most crucial time of the year to stay on top of academics. Midterms have long since ended, and the dreaded finals loom over the heads of all college students. The gap between the two events is the perfect chance to fall behind if you don't remain focused on the tasks at hand.

Don't worry, though. It is quite easy to stay on top of your academic life and progress in classes.

For instance, keep a sharp eye on your day planner so you don't allow yourself to forget any important due dates. If you don't have a day planner, what are you waiting for? Buy one.

Keep checking your class syllabi every once in a while so those nasty due dates for term papers don't sneak up on you. Once again, this is an excellent way to keep track of important dates.

Communicate with your professors. Make sure you're making the progress that you wanted. If you can't communicate with your professors face-to-face, at least try to send them an e-mail inquiring of your progress in the class.

While these are just a few suggestions, different people have different methods for staying motivated throughout the semester. Find a method that works for you, and then stick to it. This undoubtedly will lessen your chances of falling behind, and you'll be able to enjoy all of those "distractions" — the football games, the theatrical productions, the goofing off with friends — without wondering if you're going to be at K-State next semester or packing up to go home for good.

Ways to help relief effort exist even for students

Editor,

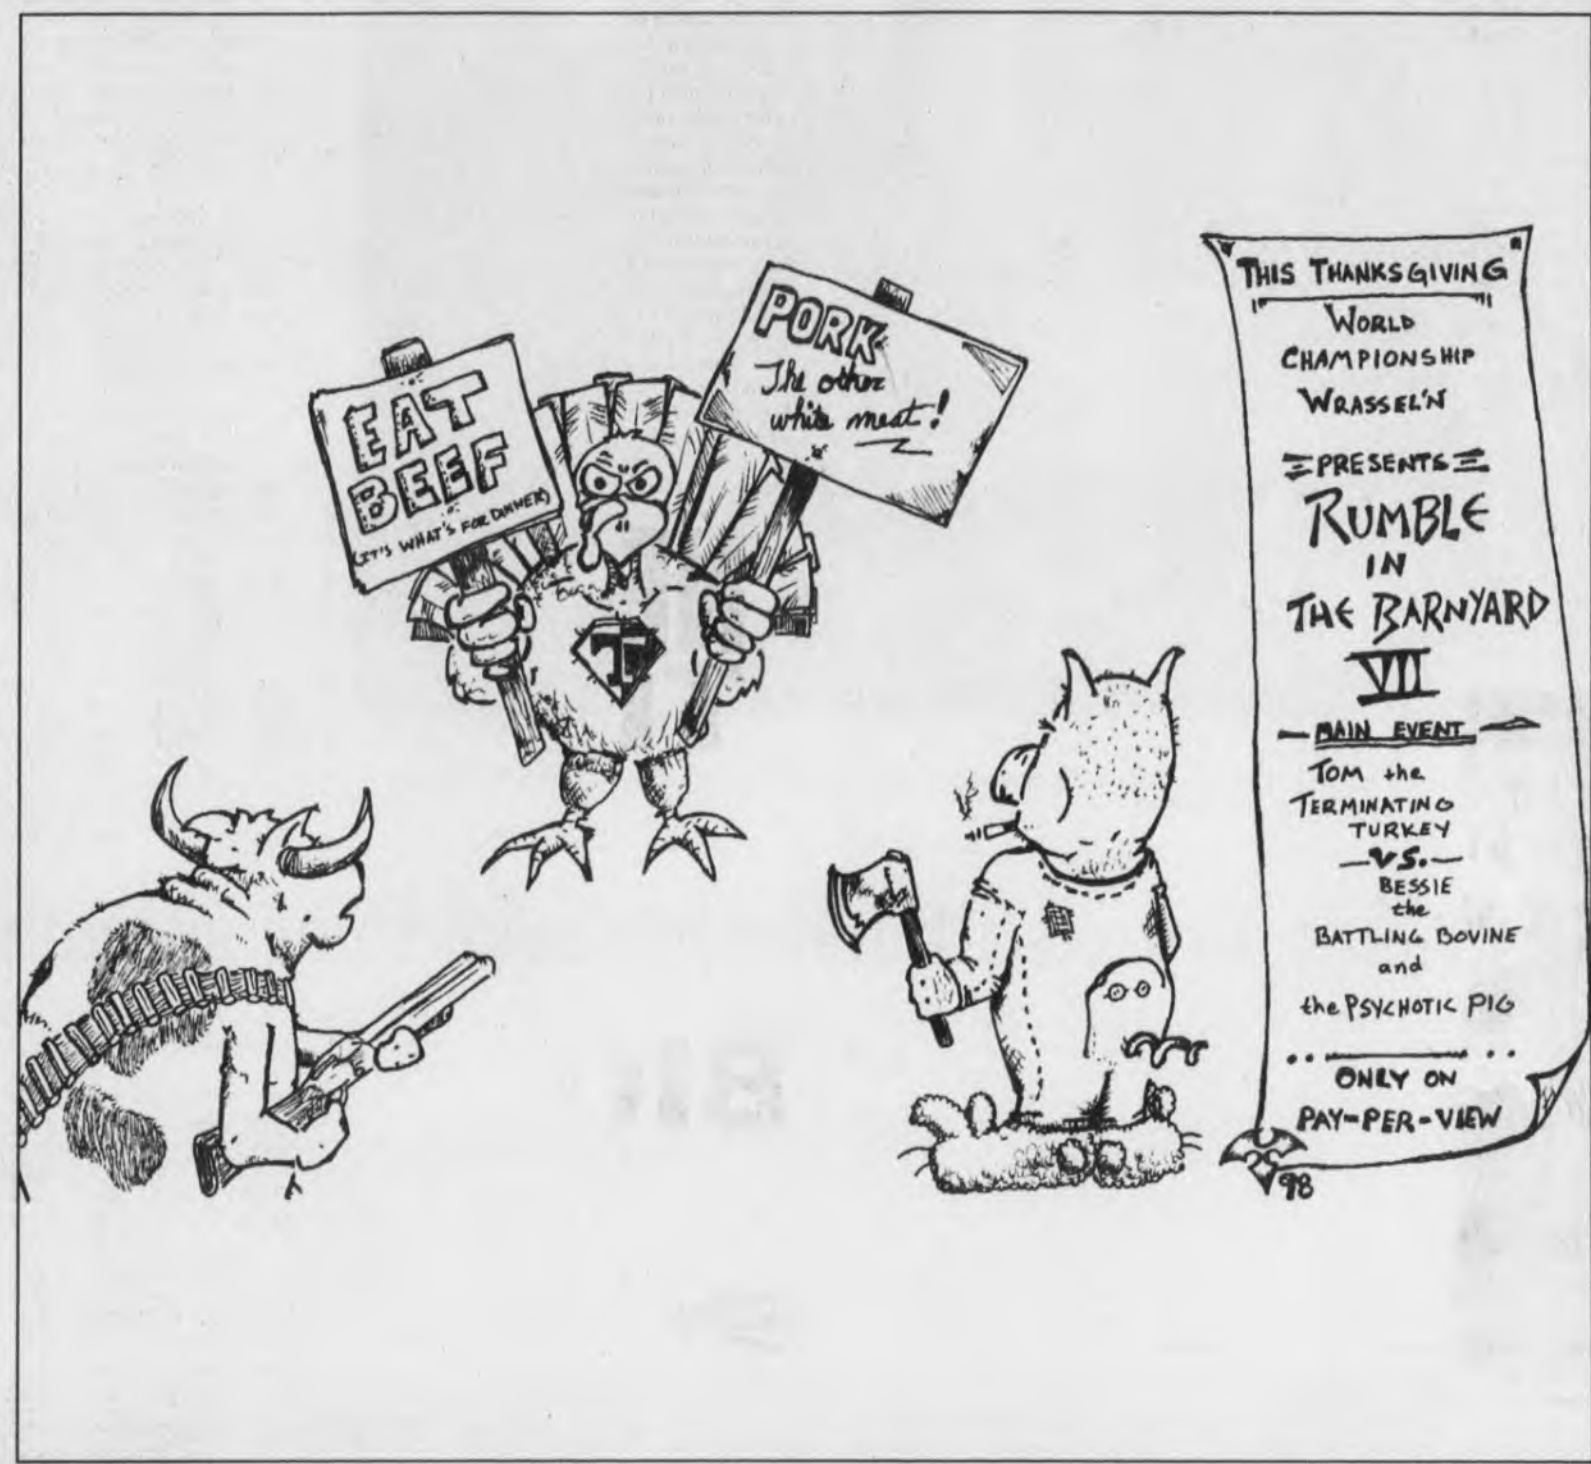

I am normally an indifferent college student who finds my classes more pressing than world news. Yet, the recent disaster in Nicaragua and Honduras has grabbed my attention and my sympathy. I read this morning that the death toll is 9,000 and expected to rise because of the water contamination and the complete devastation of the crops. The survivors are going to be faced with rebuilding their entire country. While they do this, they are going to have to deal with the contaminated water, food shortages, plus all sorts of problems I cannot even begin to imagine.

Yet, I am just a college student. Due to budget constraints, it is hard for me to make ends meet. So, how can I help the victims of this terrible disaster? I called my parents, and we decided not to exchange gifts with each other this year. I sent the money I would have spent to the American Red Cross and specified it was for the Nicaragua Relief fund. I know most people would think that was a bit extreme. Yet, I wonder what would happen if everyone spent $5 less on each Christmas present and spent that money to the Red Cross or to any other relief fund.

The other thing I am going to do is not go out one Friday night. I am going to have a group of friends over instead. We are going to take the money we would have spent at the bar and send it to the Red Cross. That way none of us has put a crimp in our budget, but we have helped. If everyone gives a little, it goes a long way. The people who have been so devastated by the hurricane will have that much more help in rebuilding their lives.

TODD PETERSEN

SNEAK ATTACK OF WINTER

Beware the season that slithers in

WELLS

I'M getting that bad feeling in the pit of my stomach again. This means one of two things. Either my coffee was laced with potassium cyanide and I have moments left to live ("must... finish... column!"), or winter is lurking on the outside of town, ready to sneak in on a freight of wool sweaters from Wisconsin.

I know that many of the people on campus haven't experienced Kansas weather before August. Let's just say the seasons are not easily divisible into four three-month segments. There is summer, winter and occasional months of transition. Some years will have nine months of winter and 15 seconds of summer, while others have 15 flakes of snowfall while the temperature inches up to a slow-broil 230 degrees. Some years are made up on the fly — God apparently plays dice with the weather every morning. "Ooh, double-sixes! Tornado in Kansas!"

Maybe it's not that bad. It's close, though. Winter doesn't just begin and hover for three months. It surfaces menacingly near Thanksgiving, cowers through the rest of the school year, then completely owns everything from the bowl games through the NBA playoffs (if any). Kansas winters are ruthless if sporadic.

However, here's a news flash for everyone who drives: It will snow. No, really. It will snow, and ice will form on the roads. It happens at least once a year, so you'd think people in this city would, well, prepare for it. Nope, here's a personal hint: The first day it snows, give up all hope, leave your vehicle parked and trudge to campus. The city will respond to the first snow with the awesome swiftness of a snail on heavy narcotics. Every year it comes as a complete and utter surprise that Kansas is capable of receiving snow. You can hear the conversation: "Dagburnit, it ain't done snowed here since '06, gee willickers! What-for we needin' dem snow-plowers for?"

Speaking of vehicles, if you're going to leave the city limits, be prepared to get stuck. (Even if you're not leaving the city limits, it's still been known to happen.) You might think about stashing a little survival gear in the car, non-expirable food (chocolate, good), maybe a flashlight, rope (to pull yourself out with, maybe hang yourself, if the situation gets untenable), blanket, that sort of thing. I know this sounds kinda alarmist. The worst that can happen is you won't need it. If your luck is even vaguely resembling mine, though, (a) you will need it and (b) call Lafene and ask for the gallon o' Prozac coupon. Give them my name.

OK, so this season has its downsides. There's slush, mess and cold. If your roommates lock themselves out of the apartment, they will freeze to the front stoop and become decorative sculptures by the front door. There also are some bonuses. One word — snowballs. You can put up with six months of severe thunderstorms, intermittent tornadoes and Noah-let's-chop-down-some-trees flooding for a few weeks of wet, perfectly packable snow. It's all good.

El Niño or no El Niño, there's no telling how long it's going to last. Some Januarys are sun-tannable. Some Aprils are precursors to "Ice Age II: Electric Boogaloo." The weather here, you must know by now, is unpredictable (that National Weather Service, they're just a bunch of masochists, if you ask me). Just count on the people of this city being taken by surprise by the schizophrenia of Mother Nature. Be a pessimist, and prepare for the worst, and hopefully, you'll be disappointed.

Of course, these are just the ramblings of an old cranky arctic geezer, and it's just my opinion. Your mileage might vary. If symptoms persist, see a doctor. Offer not valid in all states. Some settling may have occurred during shipping. Keep hands and feet inside the column at all times. Objects in column are closer than they appear.

Unfortunately, bad news always gets more attention

VIEWPOINT

SACKETT

There are two ways to answer the question, "How are you doing?" You can respond with the short version or the life story.

Most reply with the usual "fine" or "OK." Occasionally, you'll get an interestingly truthful answer to this familiar question.

When you are in a hurry, the expected and polite thing to do is to reply briefly. The average person does not want an explanation of all your problems.

Assuming the questioner is serious about how you are doing, you again are posed with a choice. You could describe the tremendous stomach ache you have, or you could say how tasty mom's two quarts of baked beans were.

Both are honest. Both are relevant. It is usually the negative side of a story that gets attention. The news media are a good example. It is not often you will read stories about how grand life is. Who would read them?

Take an ordinary guy who is happy at work, pays his bills on time and gets along with his neighbors. The public probably will never know he exists, but as soon as he burns his office, writes $97,000 in bad checks and kills two of his neighbors, he is on the front page — photo included.

Bad news sells. It also makes good conversation. Because of this, the negative aspects of situations often get more conversation time than the positive. It is easier to talk about something that is not going our way than to use our creativity to say something positive. Everything else seems too normal. Does normal always mean boring?

In our quest to be acknowledged and accepted by our peers, we murmur about the professor who gives quizzes three times a week. We complain about parents who still are trying to tell us what we should do with our lives. We grumble about the cold weather.

I wonder if all our whining is really worth the time.

If I ask a friend how her day is going (and I really want to know), I prefer to hear that things are going well. However, if her life is miserable, it is important to express this. That's what friends are for.

If all the bad things that happen to us were really as terrible as we make them out to be, we all would do well to leave our communities. With a little traveling, though, it doesn't take long to find that most other people have just as many problems.

This does not mean I want to hear fabricated answers to my inquiries about my friends. Honesty is appreciated.

However, there is usually a bright side to most circumstances. If there isn't a bright side, remember that their situation could be a lot worse than yours. After all, talking to your friend for five minutes about your low test score is bad enough. It's really humbling when you find out the person you're talking to has just been stepped on by one of Ken Wells' roaming cows.

So long as we remain truthful about communicating the bad when it is necessary, it would do us good to look to that which leads to optimism. Optimism leads to hope, and these are two qualities that could use some help coming back into popularity.

If we could learn to see the potential in every situation, we all would become more inspired to finish life with more tenacity. Having this optimistic outlook does not mean that you disregard criticism, it just means you find a clever way to reveal it when it's necessary. This means more happiness for everyone.

Sackett's last column not at all humorous

Editor,
I usually get quite a kick out of reading Sam Sackett's column, but this week the humor died, and I started to take offense.

Thursday, the Collegian printed his "Sex needs to be kept within the confines of marriage, love" viewpoint. His underlying argument that I grasped had much to do with the idea that in order to find true love, one must make a life-long commitment to another. So to have true love, one must ascribe to religious doctrine and engage in nuptials?

He claimed such true love also should not be limited to a time frame, yet in the same sentence he wrote that it had to be a lifelong commitment. Now, I am not much for words, but he seems like a very confused little boy. I wonder if Sackett's columns are printed just to get a rise out of people, a sort of publicity stunt. When I asked a friend what he thought Sackett believed in, he replied, "Homosexuals will burn in hell, Clinton will burn in hell, Muslims are stupid, Christians are awesome, godless people suck." Not that these are or are not true, but you see my point.

When he talks about people who engage in premarital sex as giving themselves "an out" if they lose attraction for each other, I wonder what Sackett would do if he found out sex with his new wife wasn't too spectacular. As unromantic as it sounds, sex is a combination of physical and chemical reactions that sometimes is great, and sometimes not. I do not see how having faith in higher beings is going to change this outcome.

Program would help all K-State students

Editor,

First, I would like to state my outrage at being called shortsighted and anti-intellectual by columnist Russell Fortmeyer.

Fortmeyer takes issue with Student Senate's proposal to create a Saferide program that will be funded, he says, with student money. However, Fortmeyer's obvious lack of research and knowledge of the issue leads me to question whether he might be the one who is a shortsighted anti-intellectual.

Had Fortmeyer taken the opportunity to attend the Student Senate meeting when the program was discussed, or had he contacted a representative of Student Governing Association, he would realize that Student Senate has made no proposal for the creation of a Saferide program. Rather, the Student Senate passed bill 98/99-12. That bill simply creates a special committee to research the Saferide program and its alternatives.

The purposes of the committee are threefold. First, the committee will address the student body's need for a Saferide program. Next, the committee will survey all Big 12 Conference universities and other peer institutions to see what similar programs they have in place. Finally, the committee will survey similar programs at other universities to study their structures.

I fail to see Fortmeyer's logic behind the argument that Senate's actions thus far have encouraged K-State students to participate in the excessive consumption of alcohol. SGA simply is investigating potential solutions to an existing problem. That, in my estimation, is commendable.

Regardless of the special committee's findings, I am proud of my colleagues in Senate. The creation of this committee serves to illustrate the dedication and responsiveness of this body. I deeply resent the mockery of this process by an uninformed ideologue columnist. Fortmeyer, do the students at this university a favor. Inform yourself of the issues before promulgating mindless drivel on a serious topic that involves not only students at K-State, but also the citizens with whom we share the roads.

■ Projected cost up from original bid to $13.3 million.

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday's game against Nebraska will be the last time K-State fans will see KSU Stadium as it is now. Starting Nov. 23, Walsh Co. contractors will begin construction for the stadium expansion that was proposed just more than a year ago.

The contractors can't start before that date because of a high school playoff game at the stadium, but they'll probably start moving equipment in soon after Saturday's game, Max Urlick, K-State's athletic director, said.

After the expansion, KSU Stadium's permanent seats will be increased to between 45,000 and 46,000. Additional chairs in the end zone and other supplementary seating will increase the capacity to about 50,000, Urlick said.

The first projected cost was between $10-11 million, but now the estimate is $13.3 million.

"That addition has come through concession and restroom modifications that were not included in the original bid. We had to add that," Urlick said.

The bond still will be paid over a 15-year period.

Urlick said even if the football program has down seasons in the years to come, the expansion still would be paid off.

"The repayment of the bond is solid because it is based on the long-term lease of the box seats and chairbacks," he said.

The JumboTron has shown fans at each home game what the expanded stadium will look like, but Urlick said when fans see the improved stadium next season, they will be impressed.

"Oh, I just think the physical appearance of the stadium will be quite dramatic in that an addition of the expansion will be an upper deck that expands the whole length of the east side," he said. "The dramatic size and appearance, in my opinion, will be quite noticeable."

Brent Bowman, president of Brent Bowman & Associates Architects PA, said the stadium's appearance also will be dramatic from the street.

The height of the skyboxes will add significantly to the presence of the stadium from the street, he said.

"It will have a dramatic effect. It will seem much more like a traditional stadium," he said.

Bowman said the design of the expanded stadium isn't modeled after any particular stadium.

"The design itself is primarily based on the fundamental configuration of the suites and chairbacks being positioned in a way where they have the best significant sightline possible," he said.

Urlick said the appearance of the new restrooms and concession stands also will be noticeable, and he said he hoped some of the modifications to these two areas will cut down on places of high congestion between the seating and concessions.

"We hope to relieve that congestion by removing the concession stand in the south concourse that will be replaced by a new concession stand on the east side," Urlick said.

However, with about 7,000 more people attending games, it might be hard to relieve a lot of that congestion, he said.

Both Urlick and Bowman said the expansion would be finished in time for the first game of the 1999 football season.

Bowman said the contractors are aware of the time constraint and seem to be comfortable with it.

K-State defensive tackle Damion McIntosh (77) signals to the crowd after helping stop the run with other members of the defense during the Wildcats' match-up against Oklahoma State on October 17th. The Wildcats defeated the Cowboys 52-20.

RUSH HOUR

K-State's Mob defense faces stiffest test in form of Nebraska rushing attack

When K-State plays one of its most important games against Nebraska on Saturday, it won't be just another 60-minute football game. It will be a game made up of many key matchups: Bill Snyder vs. Frank Solich; Michael Bishop vs. the Cornhusker defense; and Martin Gramatica vs. Kris Brown.

Perhaps the most exciting matchup, though, will be K-State's touted Mob defense vs. Nebraska's heralded running attack.

Going into the game, the Cats rank among the top three of all four team-defensive categories.

They rank first in scoring defense, second in total defense, second in rushing defense, and third in passing defense. Additionally, they have held eight opponents this season to nine or fewer points.

Junior free safety Lamar Chapman said team unity adds to the defensive and offensive success.

"On offense and defense, we play as a team," he said. "We care about each other, and we go out as a unit."

Although Nebraska has failed to dominate offensively this year as it has in the past, the Cornhuskers' running attack is third in the country, and they continue to outscore opponents by nearly three touchdowns a game. The Huskers average 270.2 rushing yards a game and 401.4 total yards a game.

"Nebraska is always going to be tough," Andrae Rowe, senior defensive tackle, said. "They execute their plays well."

K-State has faced an option offense previously this season, against Indiana State, but it has yet to face a team that runs the option as well as Nebraska.

"We've faced it before, and we did a pretty good job with it," Rowe said. "Hopefully, we can get it done again."

Despite losing both starting quarterback Bobby Newcombe and I-back DeAngelo Evans to injury, Nebraska still brings several big threats to Manhattan.

Senior fullback Joel Makovica, who was a preseason Doak Walker Award candidate, averages 40.9 yards a game and enters Saturday's game needing only 16 yards to move into third on the Nebraska career fullback rushing chart.

Either Correll Buckhalter or Dan Alexander, both sophomores, will start at I-back Saturday. Buckhalter has averaged 65.3 yards a game, and Alexander rushed for 110 yards and three touchdowns in Nebraska's victory last week over Iowa State.

Redshirt freshman Eric Crouch, who is 3-0 as a starter, will be the Huskers' starting quarterback. He completed four of eight passes and rushed for 91 yards last week.

"He (Crouch) has matured very well," K-State head coach Bill Snyder said. "He's very talented, their kind of quarterback."

Although the Huskers are ranked 86th in the country in passing, Chapman said he still expects them to be effective through the air.

"Nebraska's passing is a threat," he said. "This is the toughest we will have faced so far. They have so many weapons. I think it will be fun to just get out and play with those guys."

Rowe said the Wildcats have to stick to their game plan to stop the rushing attack.

"We have to keep fitting in the gaps and play assignments out," he said.

Chapman said the defensive front will be a key in shutting down Nebraska's offense.

"I think the key is the defensive linemen," he said. "If we can keep our defensive linemen on their feet, making plays, we will do well."

Wildcats make history with No. 1 ranking

By JOHN BERGGREN
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the first time in K-State's 103-year football history, the Wildcats were picked No. 1 in an important poll released Sunday.

K-State (9-0, 6-0) garnered 1,504 points and 30 first-place votes in the ESPN/USA Today Coaches' Poll, tying for first place with Tennessee (8-0). The Wildcats previously were ranked second and the Volunteers third in that poll, but both teams moved into the top slot after No. 1-ranked Ohio State fell Saturday to Michigan State, 28-24.

K-State moved up from No. 4 to No. 2 in the Associated Press Poll behind Tennessee, which received 46 first-place votes to the Wildcats' 19. K-State also moved from fourth to third in the Bowl Championship Series Poll (a poll that combines the AP, coaches' and several computer-ranking polls to determine which teams should play for the national championship). The Wildcats had a score of 6.99, trailing UCLA (5.73) and Tennessee (3.92).

The Wildcats were hurt mostly by their strength of schedule, which factored in .79 points, but that should diminish with three nationally-ranked teams left on K-State's horizon this season.

"I think it's a nice honor," K-State coach Bill Snyder said of being ranked No. 1 in the coaches' poll. "I'd rather have the program be listed No. 1 than No. 50. We humbly accept, but it doesn't have anything to do with the final outcome."

"Each player has his own thoughts, and I would like to believe that our players' response would be somewhere along the lines of 'it's not over.' It's nice to have the opportunity to be thought of that highly, but that has no bearing on the outcome of the season," he said.

The Wildcats now will try to stay in the national spotlight. K-State realizes opponents will be gunning to take the Wildcats off their lofty pedestal.

"Anybody that is 9-0 has a bull's eye on their back," offensive lineman Jeremy Martin said. "We've got a big red 'X' back there, and people will be wanting to shoot us in the back. I'm sure."

Some of the Wildcats said they are not focusing on the No. 1 ranking. Senior running back Eric Hickson said he was focusing on K-State's current task at hand, beating No. 11 Nebraska on Saturday.

"We try not to think about being the No. 1 team and where we're ranked and who we're above," Hickson said. "Nebraska is going to come out and really fight. They're going to give it all they've got. We know that, and we've got to be ready for them," Hickson said.

K-State will be put in the national news media spotlight Saturday. ESPN "College GameDay" will tape its morning broadcast inside KSU Stadium before the kickoff, and the game will be televised nationally on ABC. Snyder said all the hype for this game cannot distract the players and coaches.

"If our people get focused on all the hoopla, then they take their mind off the task at hand," Snyder said. "We've said so many times that this is a program built on distractions, and we have endured those for 10 years, some to a greater magnitude than whatever can be created this week, I'm sure."

"We've had the experience dealing with these types of things, and we'll see if it pays off."

Senior prepare for grand finale in form of victory over mighty Nebraska Cornhuskers

VIEWPOINT

BERGGREN

As Saturday's showdown with Nebraska looms, there is no doubt that this is the biggest weekend in the history of K-State athletics.

I guess that makes the fact that I'll be missing opening weekend of pheasant-hunting season, for the first time in my life, a little easier to swallow — though I might have to seek counseling for this later in life — knowing that this truly is a once-in-a-lifetime event.

Never before has K-State football been ranked No. 1 in the nation in an important poll, and never before has there been so much emphasis on one game. This is a game that virtually every K-State fan or foe has tabbed as a defining point to where Bill Snyder's program actually lies in the whole scheme of college football since all those preseason polls hit the newsstand.

Never before has ESPN "College GameDay" even considered coming to KSU Stadium to tape its Saturday morning college football show. Instead of finding myself at sunrise Saturday morning clad in hunter's orange with a shotgun in hand, I'll be at KSU Stadium when the gates open at 8:30 a.m., donning purple attire and tuning my voice box to chant "OVER-RATED" when Lee Corso and Chris Fowler analyze the UCLA and Tennessee matchups.

Yes, K-State and all of Manhattan will be in the national spotlight Saturday when ABC televises the game at 2:30. Though ABC has slighted the Wildcats all season, waiting until the last minute to decide whether it was going to televise K-State's game, it is giving credit to purple and white this weekend. ABC will send its "A" crew of Keith Jackson, Bob Griese and Lynn Swann to call the game.

Win or lose Saturday, this game will be unforgettable for more than the above mentioned reasons. When K-State squares off against the Cornhuskers, it will mark the last time that 24 seniors will play on Wagner Field. Sixteen of those seniors are starters on offense, defense or special teams and have become household names to nearly everyone in the area.

Never again will we get to view this senior class in the friendly confines of a home game, though there will be opportunities to watch them on television against Missouri, in the Big 12 Conference Championship against Texas A&M and in whatever bowl game the Wildcats will be able to land. Not to mention that next year, several of these guys will be playing on Sundays in the NFL, but it won't be quite the same.

This group of seniors is second to none in the history of K-State football, and for several years, we've become accustomed to all of their on-field performances. Who ever will forget the enthusiasm these guys have sparked in all of those sellout crowds of purple?

There's Martin Gramatica, who turned even the simple point-after kick into a crowd-pleaser.

Or Michael Bishop, who in two years after transferring from junior college has crashed his way to all-time quarterback records.

Or Eric Hickson, who has been around longer than any K-State player sitting through two redshirt years, but who still battled back from his broken leg at Fan Appreciation Day in 1996 to lead K-State in rushing again this year.

What about the not-so-obvious guys, like offensive guard Jeremy Martin, who has held together the Wildcats' front, playing through injuries that should have sidelined him several times in his career. ... You see, the list is so long and so memorable that the 4-2 minutes that is scripted to introduce these guys at the beginning of the game is nowhere near close to the recognition they deserve.

No doubt Saturday is going to be a huge day for K-State athletics. I just hope there will be a few unsuspecting pheasants left to hunt next weekend.

Kansas City's Palmer signs with Detroit

By TOM COYNE
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DETROIT — The Detroit Tigers, seeking to build a contender as they prepare to move into a new stadium in 2000, signed Dean Palmer to a $36 million, five-year contract on Wednesday.

Palmer, who turns 30 next month, hit .278 this year for Kansas City, leading the Royals in both homers (34) and RBIs (119). He was acquired by Kansas City from Texas on July 25, 1997, for Tom Gooden.

Tigers general manager Randy Smith said the signing should send a message to fans and to other teams that the Tigers, who have posted five straight losing seasons for the first time in their history, are ready to compete again.

He said signing Palmer, Detroit's first high-profile free agent addition in years, would make it easier for the Tigers to sign a pitcher and mentioned Todd Stottlemyre as a possibility.

"For someone like Stottlemyre to show us consideration, we have to show we're serious," he said.

He said the signing of Palmer, coupled with the new stadium, will make Detroit more attractive to free agents.

"You look at the Cleveland situation before their new ballpark, it wasn't a place that was on the top of most ballplayers' list to play. But now it is," he said. "I think that will happen for us."

Palmer said it made a difference for him.

"I liked the idea of being with the team moving into a new stadium," he said.

Palmer said he signed with Detroit over Tampa Bay because "it felt like the right fit for me."

"I looked at the talent they have on the field and there's some great talent. With a couple more additions, they will be ready to contend," Palmer said.

The signing fit in with the plan the Tigers began three years ago to go with young players to begin building a nucleus. Smith said the nucleus is in place, and it's time to fill holes.

The Tigers were last in the AL Central this season at 65-97, 24 games behind first-place Cleveland.

Palmer, who made $5.75 million this season, turned down a $4.75 million player option and became a free agent following the World Series.

The Tigers are giving him a $10 million signing bonus that is payable over five years, $3 million in 1999, $5 million in 2000, $5.5 million in 2001, $6 million in 2002 and $6.5 million in 2003.

Smith said that when the Tigers heard that Tampa had made a similar offer, the Tigers agreed to guarantee the fifth year.

The contract also includes a no-trade clause for three years.

Smith said the deal came together partly because Palmer was willing to take less the first season before the new stadium opens.

Some things don't live up to their billing, no matter how trendy they seem.

Well, we've been in the biz long before drinking anything "skinny" or "tall" was an issue. Committed to doing it right and inventing along the way, we were the first to make sure no one cries over scalded milk (our thermometers know that 162° is very bad). We're the only ones that pour fresh frothed milk into every cappuccino, instead of just scooping dry foam on top. At ERC, it's a science and an artform.

THE WAIT IS ALMOST OVER GAMEDAY APPROACHES

KSU Stadium prepares for Big Red invasion

By SARAH CRAIG AND AMANDA EWING
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The overwhelming purple that packs KSU Stadium will be infiltrated by red tomorrow.

With the magnitude of this weekend's Big 12 Conference showdown, K-State students and Manhattan residents are preparing for more than 4,000 Nebraska fans to descend upon the town for the sold-out game.

Officially, 43,000 tickets have been sold for Saturday's game, which will be televised nationally on ABC. Nebraska was allotted 4,000 tickets in compliance with Big 12 bylaws, said Bob Cavello, assistant athletic director for business operations. However, he said he suspects the actual number of Nebraska fans in KSU Stadium will be higher.

"With K-State students selling their tickets, there's no way to know how many will be there," Cavello said. "I expect a lot of fans, because the word is out that there will be ticket brokers on every corner. I wouldn't be surprised if Nebraska fans come down and support their team in our stadium."

Nebraska Sports Information said they have sold all their allotted tickets but had no numbers on how many Nebraska fans got their hands on tickets through K-State ticket holders.

Ace Sports and Tickets of Kansas City, Kan., said they have sold 40-50 tickets, but none of these went to Nebraska fans. This was partially due to many K-State students who resisted the urge to sell their tickets to Nebraska fans.

Sara Julian, freshman in open-option said, "Although I'm broke and I know people in Nebraska who could have sold my ticket for lots of money, I have too much school pride to miss this game, and I could never sell my ticket to someone from Nebraska."

Many game tickets also were sold through the classified ads. Mark Woods, senior in architectural engineering, already has sold four tickets through the classifieds. Woods bought six tickets from friends who wanted to get rid of them without going through the hassle of finding a buyer. Woods paid $125 for the tickets and has sold two of them for $130 and $140.

"I'm pretty sure I won't have any left, but if I do, I'll take them with me and sell them there," Woods said.

Woods sold his tickets to K-State fans and said he hopes to keep it that way. He said he felt the crowd would be a crucial factor in the game's outcome, and therefore, he didn't want to give Nebraska any advantages.

"It goes against my morals. I would prefer to sell it only to KSU fans," Woods said. "I don't think they should sell to Nebraska, because if they want

National media turns attention to KSU

Wildcat fans, are you ready? Are you ready, that is, for the massive news media storm that will arrive on game day?

K-State's Sports Information is prepared, director Kent Brown said. He said his staff will accommodate literally hundreds of extra requests for press passes for the Nebraska game.

"Nearly every major metropolitan paper will be here," Brown said. "It's easier to say who's not going to be here."

Papers from across the nation will be represented, including The New York Times, the Houston Chronicle, The Los Angeles Times and The Washington Post.

"We've had to add on an auxiliary press area on top of the press box on the photo deck," Brown said.

Brown said his staff also has had to move reporters from their normal location and make concessions to accommodate personnel who will be broadcasting the game live. An added radio network will broadcast the game nationwide, and Brown said his staff is anticipating 10 satellite trucks from television crews across the state.

It's not just the added number of newspaper representatives and camera crews that will complicate matters. Many papers and stations are sending extra reporters and photographers to cover the fans as well as the game.

Assistant Sports Information director Craig Pinkerton said fans shouldn't worry about the added reporters taking over KSU stadium.

"Fans will just see added coverage and more people on the sidelines," Pinkerton said. "Usually, you'll see a lot more pictures of the crowd and of the stadium overflowing."

Pinkerton has some experience working with crowds of reporters. He worked for the University of Kansas' Sports Information office before com-

POLICE EFFORTS

Local police hope all fans behave at game, Aggieville

By JEFF SUTTON
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the hype of Saturday's gridiron matchup against Nebraska and the national coverage it is receiving, local police are requesting that fans behave with respect.

"We encourage them not to (tear down the goalposts) and to act like fans who are expecting to win and absorb it like a normal win," K-State Police Capt. Robert Mellgren said. "But it's going to be an extra fever of excitement."

Mellgren said so far, police security has been effective at the home games, and it mostly will remain the same for the Wildcats' final Manhattan appearance this year.

"Basically, it's not a whole lot different,"

As tension builds, Cohen warns Saddam Hussein 'We're not playing games'

By BARRY SCHWEID
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Buoyed by Arab criticism of Iraq, the Clinton administration said Thursday that Saddam Hussein had isolated himself and must reverse course. "We're not playing games," said Defense Secretary William Cohen as U.S. military preparations proceeded.

Eight Arab foreign ministers issued a statement in Qatar saying that Iraq's continued refusal to submit to U.N. weapons inspectors could have serious consequences for the Arab country.

Citing the statement as evidence of near unanimity in the Arab world, State Department spokesman James P. Rubin said, "The U.S. feels this is a pretty good indicator of where the key Gulf countries stand on the latest crisis."

Rubin dismissed a demand by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., that President Clinton seek Congress' approval before ordering any attack on Iraq.

The president has inherent authority to use force and also was authorized by Congress' approval of U.N. Security Council resolutions bearing on Iraq's concealment of weapons, Rubin said.

Delaware Sen. Joe Biden, the senior Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said Clinton would be politically smart to ask Congress to meet in special session and pass a resolution backing military action.

"He is not required to do it, but I think presidents underestimate the willingness of Congress, when asked, to rally to their support and underestimate the incredible strength that gives them in undertaking whatever effort will be taken," Biden said.

Specter had written Clinton that "use of force by your administration without prior congressional authorization would be another major step in undermining the sole authority of Congress to declare war."

Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., said military strikes were likely. He encouraged the administration to consider an all-out follow-up campaign to remove Hussein from power — a plan, he acknowledged, that probably would require U.S. ground troops.

If Hussein cannot be removed without targeting and killing him, "I suspect, then, he will have to be killed," Lugar replied.

In response, Secretary of State Madeleine Albright said the Clinton administration looked forward to working with a post-Hussein government and was increasing its support to Iraqi opposition groups.

"But the purpose of force, if we use it, would be to degrade his ability" to develop and use weapons of mass destruction, Albright said on PBS' "NewsHour With Jim Lehrer."

To reflect what the State Department said was a potential for Iraqi retaliation, Americans throughout the world were advised to maintain a "high level of vigilance."

An announcement the department issued Thursday night suggested that Americans traveling abroad "vary routes and times for all required travel and treat mail from unfamiliar sources with suspicion."

In another development, Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott hinted that if Clinton decided to use force, there could be a series of attacks on Iraq.

"We have thought well beyond hour one, day one and week one," he said during an appearance at the Brookings Institution, a Washington, D.C., research group. "There are lots of ways we can make sure he loses on day one and thereafter."

Talbott said Clinton had not made a final decision.

"This crisis can end peacefully," he said.

Speaking in Norfolk, Va., aboard the Bataan, a Marine Corps helicopter assault ship, Cohen said the U.S. message is for Iraq to comply with the U.N. inspections commission.

"A failure to comply could result in a military operation, and we're hoping that doesn't take place," he said.

behind closed doors."

Yet, the Pentagon chief said, "We're not seeking to go to war. We're seeking to avoid it. All he has to do is comply. The choice is his."

After returning from Norfolk, Cohen planned a meeting with the Kuwaiti defense minister.

Cohen, Albright and Clinton's national security adviser, Sandy Berger, also met for two hours at the White House on Thursday night trying to refine the options, said David Leavy, a National Security Council spokesman.

The Arab statement by Egypt, Syria, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman and Qatar, said, "The Iraqi government is held responsible for any consequences that might arise from its refusal to back down from its decision to expel the U.N. weapons inspectors."

KSU band to perform free concert Sunday

K-State Marching Band members said they hope their concert at 3 p.m. Sunday at Ahearn Field House will be a celebration of a football win over Nebraska.

The concert will take place whether or not the Wildcats beat the Nebraska Cornhuskers on Saturday, but band members are hoping for a win.

"This concert is a conclusion to the season. It's a great way to show what the band can do musically in the stadium or in concert," Nathan Schutte, freshmen in architecture, said.

The band performs each year after the last home football game, band director Frank Tracz said. The band will perform traditional pregame music, all of the performances from half-time shows throughout the year and stadium favorites.

"This concert is a lot of fun and gives the band a chance to sit down, remember and perform all the pieces they have worked on throughout the year," Tracz said.

The concert is free and open to everyone. K-State cheerleaders and Willie the Wildcat will be at the concert to join in on the stadium favorites.

A live recording for the band's annual compact disc will be made during the concert. The CD, "A Season to Remember," will be released before Christmas.

"We hope everyone will come and be a cheering voice on the K-State Marching Band's CD," Tracz said.

KSU bookstore offers 'Wildcat Wonderland'

Get into the holiday spirit today as the K-State Union Bookstore is host to Wildcat Wonderland from 4 to 7 p.m.

Wildcat Wonderland is an annual event that includes samples of holiday food products, pictures with a K-State Santa, and Susan Scott and Robert Shoop, who will be autographing their book, "Lessons in Leadership with Bill Snyder."

"We like to involve as many K-State areas as we could," said Candie Snyder, Union marketing and promotions manager.

Snyder also said the Union Bookstore will be highlighting local companies' products sold at the bookstore.

The Horticulture Therapy chapter will be selling poinsettias and Christmas cacti. Union Food Service also will sell holiday baked goods.

Terry Collins, Union Food Service office manager, said items for sale will include pumpkin pie, cranberry nut bread, assorted cookies and cheese balls.

The K-State Chorus will provide holiday music.

"We're really excited about the K-State Chorus caroling," Snyder said. Gift certificates, gift wrapping and game day shirts for Saturday's game will be available during the event.

Snyder said the event usually takes place on a weekend, but the date was changed this year so more people could attend.

"It's typically held on a weekend, but we moved it up to Friday and held it a little earlier this year so that we could make it available for students," Snyder said.

Cash flow brings chaos to highway rush hour

WICHITA — Some people will do anything for a buck.

Dozens of motorists stopped on busy U.S. Highway 54 in west Wichita at rush hour Thursday morning to scoop up cash flying out of an armored car.

Three wrecks ensued, at least one motorist received insignificant injuries and traffic backed up for miles on U.S. 54 and Interstate 235, which intersect each other.

This occurred because of some several thousand $1 bills, police said. Early police reports indicated $50,000 was released from the truck, but authorities now estimate $10,000 was lost.

The excitement began at about 6:45 a.m., when a motorist noticed the airborne bills and signaled the driver of the eastbound armored car that its back door was open, police Lt. Walt Kuykendall said.

"We had a slight wind, and that was causing the money to blow around," Kuykendall said.

The driver doubled back for about two miles, to the spot where the windfall began. Police already were on the scene, helping to recover the money and trying to control the chaos.

"We had people bailing out of cars," Kuykendall said. "We had to close down the highway so we didn't injure any more citizens and to assist with the pick-up of the money."

Dollar bills clogged nearby storm drains and the water and sewer department had to be called to dig them out.

Much of the money was recovered, some from the people who had stopped to pick it up. One group formed an orderly line and, one by one, handed the dollars over to police.

"But some citizens weren't volunteering," Kuykendall said.

College-fund benefits increase to $50,000

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army has decided to boost from $40,000 to $50,000 the maximum education benefits available under the Army College Fund and the Montgomery G.I. Bill, officials said Thursday. The change is immediate.

The Army also has decided to provide a $3,000 sign-up bonus to every qualified applicant who reports to training by May 1999. In the past, the bonus was available only to those who signed up for certain targeted jobs.

Those targeted bonuses of up to $12,000 for a four-year-or-more enlistment will remain in effect, the Army said.

"The Army has been concerned for some time that education entitlements from the military service are lagging behind the private sector. We must remain competitive," said Maj. Gen. Timothy Maude, the Army's director of military personnel management.

The Army College Fund is available to applicants who show they are able to perform certain skills for the service during a four-year enlistment.

Gephardt considers running for president

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dick Gephardt said Thursday he is considering entering a presidential race despite pressure from some Democratic officials who want him to remain in the House and set his sights on the speakership.

"I'm actively considering it, and I will continue to do so for the next two months," the House Democratic leader said of a presidential bid.

Those Democrats who want Gephardt to stay put have various motives. Some think he is the party's best hope for leading the effort to seize the House in 2000. Some simply are supporters of Vice President Al Gore who would like the field clear of a tough rival.

Gephardt's political future was buoyed Nov. 3, when Democrats surpassed their own expectations and picked up five seats in the House. Six more would give them a majority. He helped shape the party's midterm message.

If Democrats had collapsed, losing 20 or more seats, advisers said Gephardt almost certainly would have run for president. With the speakership a whisper away, he now faces a tougher choice.

Does he try to win the House or the White House?

"It's a hard decision, but it's a straightforward and simple decision," Gephardt said. "The decision is, where do you best think you can do what needs to be done for the country — now and in the next few years?"

Gephardt ran for president in 1988, clashing with Gore. Both lost the nomination.

Bertice Berry, host of "USA LIVE," USA Network's daily interactive talk show, speaks Thursday night in Union Station.

JEFF COOPER/ COLLEGIAN

Speaker says an open mind helps views evolve

By SUZANNE WILSON

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Union Station was packed Thursday night as people gathered to hear Bertice Berry, host of "USA LIVE," the USA Network's live interactive talk show, speak about aspects of cultural diversity.

Berry, who was once a stand-up comedian, had the audience laughing throughout the evening. She said she no longer does stand-up comedy, but she still incorporates it into her lectures to keep herself sane.

Berry's lecture focused on the idea that people need to "evolve," or experience and learn things through an open mind, to overcome cultural barriers.

"If we want to evolve as people, how do we get there with one thought?" Berry said. "If you want to see change, you have to be change."

Amy Mauk, sophomore in business, said she really enjoyed the speech, and it was something she really needed to hear.

"Instead of putting us into groups, she said that everyone needs to evolve," Mauk said. "If we all say 'I'll take responsibility,' then I think we can get to the point we need to be at."

Berry used an example of students segregating themselves into different sections in a cafeteria to explain that people tend to join groups to further self-interest and that it can lead to a fear of diversity. She said people end up creating stereotypes about the different groups they don't know, simply to make themselves look good.

"If you throw enough mud, you're going to get muddy," Berry said.

People in the audience were asked to give examples of stereotypes, which Berry addressed to explain society's lack of knowledge about its history and its people. Audience members gave examples such as "all Asian people are smart," "all black people have bad hair" and "all Christians are persecutors."

Berry said fear of diversity can start at a young age, because parents tend to put a value to differences that kids see. She said it's OK if a child says a person is fat or only has one arm, because it is OK to recognize differences. However, she said it's important that the parent doesn't let the child perceive those differences as bad things.

Berry also used technology to point out the need to evolve. She said technology has grown so much in the past decade that people can't keep up with it. They spend so much time fighting over one thing, they never explore all the other stuff that is out there.

"How do we know, if we don't experience?" Berry said.

Christina Elder, freshman in pre-nursing, said this was her favorite part of Berry's message, because it pointed out that people tend to let the world revolve around them.

"You're never going to get anywhere, if you accept things for the way they are and don't explore for yourself," Elder said.

Berry said it is mandatory that people have an open mind. They'll never make it in a world that is continually evolving. She said that is why the dinosaurs are no longer with us — they couldn't change.

Construction moves outdoor sculptures

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students know them as "the fork," "the tootsie roll" or a variety of other pet names that have been passed down by generations of students.

To the artists and their admirers, however, they are a legacy of K-State outdoor sculpture that dates back decades — a legacy that is increasingly at risk on a campus that seems to be constantly under construction.

Less than a month ago, Lee Lupperts' "Spiral Jade," (1976), was removed from its base east of Kedzie Hall for construction of a new brick plaza. Now, there are plans to re-locate the sculpture south of its original site.

Earlier this year, the Grover C. Cobb Memorial fountain, which has been located under the historic radio tower south of Calvin Hall since 1975, was removed and placed in storage.

Outdoor campus art exists in a fuzzy field between landscape and building. At a Thursday meeting, the question on the minds of the Campus Development Committee was whether campus art falls within its jurisdiction. It was a complicated question that wasn't resolved.

"How should we deal with public art on campus, and are we the right group to do that?" asked Richard Hayter, chair of the committee and associate dean for engineering extension.

Many on the committee said the group should include a statement in its planning guidelines about outdoor campus art. The concept of an ad hoc committee, composed of K-State faculty with backgrounds in art, that would make decisions on the occasional art subject also was met with some approval by the committee.

As in the case of the Cobb fountain, there is now no guardian of campus art ensuring its proper treatment.

The Cobb fountain was removed without the approval of the committee or campus community — a point that led Sondra Visser, a committee member and assistant to the dean of business administration, to write a letter urging the committee to bring the fountain back.

"I'd be happy to see it put back, re-activated and operating properly," Visser said. "Now, it's just an empty basin full of rock with nice mosaic tile around it."

Visser said she approached Division of Facilities personnel about the fountain and was told it was removed for safety reasons. According to facilities, the two-foot high blast of water rising from the fountain spilled over onto the tile, causing it to be slippery and unsafe. Another concern was maintenance costs, since the gift of the fountain — built by architecture students — did not come with an endowment attached.

Researching the history of the fountain, Visser discovered it originally was designed to gurgle. With the water stream at two feet, the fountain was not operating correctly.

"I don't think we can arbitrarily decide we can get rid of it," Visser said.

Helen Cooper, assistant director of facilities planning, said she would look into the matter.

With the Lupperts sculpture, the issue of guardianship is trickier. The sculpture has been removed from its original context.

Daniel Hunt, assistant professor of art and a sculptor, said he was given a letter from the committee developing the plaza informing him about the plans for the Kedzie Hall plaza but was not asked for an opinion.

"With that piece, I don't think where it's placed is going to have any significant impact on its meaning," Hunt said.

"It is what it is."

As for adding new sculpture to the university environment, Hunt said the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art's commitment to purchasing sculpture for exhibition around its building is a positive step forward.

OUR VIEW

Nebraska should see nothing but purple

Well, folks, Saturday is the big day. Set your VCRs, don't park a small car in Aggieville, buy film and prepare yourself. Few events compare with what will happen on game day.

The K-State/Nebraska football game will be one of epic proportions. It might well be the biggest occasion that you will ever be a part of. You will tell your children and grandchildren about this game and how you were a part of history.

Are you ready?

There should be chills running down your spine as game time approaches. You should feel a pit forming in your stomach that sits there like a weight. You should have trouble sitting still.

Nerves.

Just about the only thing that will make you feel better at this point is yelling, screaming, belting out a primal cry that could make the earth vibrate beneath you. We want you to do that at the game. We want you to yell so loudly that your own eardrums bleed. That would make our players smile.

Visiting players in Lincoln, Neb., know the power of the 12th man.

Visiting players in Lincoln have to tangle with tradition. We want you to bring your keys, your Tostitos and your Wabash groove to show our guests what being a Wildcat means.

Players in Lincoln have trouble hearing calls being made because of the noise of the crowd. We want you to be gracious hosts and give our guests the same treatment at every opportunity. Remember to yell for the Mob and for our special teams. They depend on you.

Visiting players in Lincoln see red when they get tackled, and there is no mystery about whose field they are lying on. We should give our guests the same privilege by wearing only purple. Even if it's a shirt that reads, "I'm with stupid." If it's purple, you need to be wearing it.

We have been clear about this point in the past. Purple at football games is good. White is not as good. It is indistinguishable, and nobody on the field knows who you are supporting. If you really, truly don't want to be confused with a Nebraska fan, wear purple. Enough said.

Remember, this is the last home game for many of our starting players. It's the last time we can cradle them here, in our cozy purple blanket, before we send them off to successes elsewhere. Cries of "Joe Bob," "Ochs" or "Goooooosby" will never be heard again in KSU Stadium after Saturday. James Garcia and Martin Gramatica will never get to celebrate a terrific kick on Wagner Field again. It could be the last time you see Michael Bishop in action in person, if you aren't planning on traveling to a bowl game or to Colombia, Mo., next week. Remember that as you watch.

Also, remember to pay a special visit to ESPN's "College GameDay" crew, which will be present to do its show. Try to make K-State stand out as the school with the strongest football enthusiasts in the country. If you don't do it for yourself or your school, please, do it for Lee Corso.

Then, if we win, we can look for ourselves on "SportsCenter" and say we are amused by the simplicity of this game.

Bring us your finest meats and cheeses.

OUR VIEW, an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board, is written after a majority opinion is formed. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and other staff members. OUR VIEW is the Collegian's official opinion.

ODE TO A WILDCAT

by Kyle Detrick

I love college football
K-State's my favorite team,
Another Wildcat first down!
Is what the crowd will scream.

With Bishop throwing passes
And Lockett going deep,
The other team will soon realize
The outcome is defeat.

The defense is so awesome,
It's Joe Bob Clements' turf.
They make those mighty Jayhawks
Seem like little Smurfs.

So if you like Nebraska,
And think you're the best around,
Just wait until November
When purple wins the crown.

Hasn't that ship sunk yet?

With a flood of bad movies, the boat should be gone by now

This past weekend I had one of my worst movie theater experiences here in Manhattan, where the theater lighting was poor, the sound was too quiet and the chair was uncomfortable.

And to top it off, the movie was horrible. I am used to all of these conditions, except for the last one. Even though I am from the land of huge plushy theaters with intense sound systems found in Johnson County, I prefer the cozy environment of the Tivoli and Manor Square theaters in Kansas City. It's not that I don't want to be comfortable.

The movies I enjoy watching are generally those that cannot be seen on the big screens in Manhattan except for the occasional showing at the K-State Student Union. These films used to be known as independent films, but I'm not so sure anymore. Hollywood is taking over.

Even worse, Big Brother is taking over Hollywood. Just like every other discovery made by the suits, changes are being made to make their pockets fatter. This is what is known in the film world as the "Clash of the Titans."

Now there's a good movie, very artistic. Don't get me wrong, these independent artists want to make money. It's only natural in this capitalistic society to need some capital in order to survive, but their intention is not simply to make money.

Sorry Puff, it's not all about the Benjamins. It's about the Waters, the Solondzs, the Lynchs, the Hartleys and a bunch of people neither you nor I know by name. It's about art, feelings, messages and thinking. It's not about explosions, plot-twisting or pretty faces.

Puffy is right about the mo' money, mo' problems, though. Todd Solondz's latest film, "Happiness," was dropped by its initial backer due to content concerns. The movie, which deals with pedophilia, was the winner at the Cannes Film Festival. While the subject might cause some concern, the important thing is how it is dealt with and what message is to be gained.

I haven't seen the movie, but this subject is nothing new. "Lolita" was released recently in theaters and on cable.

Ironically, another great film, "The Priest," which also dealt with pedophilia, more specifically incest, had to cut a portion of a sex scene with two adult men out due to content and ratings concerns. Lesbians have more film credentials as their love scenes are becoming more commonplace in films such as "Wild Things" and "Bound."

Sigmund Freud would be disappointed to know it's not just about the sex.

Independent films used to be known as that not only because of their low budgets but also because they were unconventional. Be it the cinematography, the content or the emotions contained within, they were different.

They were better, too. I'm not saying the quality has decreased. Since I have been in Manhattan, my only connection to the scene is generally video, and they don't rush those films to the video store, so I generally can't remember what films I wanted to see nine months ago.

But the suits money-grabbing tactics have not all been for the worse. There have been some added bonuses. Many great films have been able to find a larger audience due to corporate backing. But is it really worth pushing your friends back down? Criticism helps, censorship sucks.

A "Titanic" amount of crappy films is responsible for these ramblings.

Domain name change would cause difficulties

University should reconsider faulty plan

Last week, the university conducted an informational meeting regarding the possibility of changing the domain name at K-State from "ksu.edu" to "k-state.edu."

For those of you who don't know what a domain name is, here is a short lesson on how the Internet works.

A domain name is what an organization uses to receive e-mail and as a name for its main World Wide Web page. K-State's current domain name is ksu.edu, meaning that any e-mail that comes to someone on the K-State system will have the "@ksu.edu" ending. Also, the K-State's Web page address is www.ksu.edu. In the aforementioned meeting, university officials said the change from

"ksu.edu" to "k-state.edu" is needed in order to eliminate confusion between K-State and other schools that have the initials "KSU," such as Kent State University and Kentucky State University. If this change is implemented, it will mean many modifications to on-campus servers, and workstations will have to be made. It eventually will mean students at K-State will be forced to change their e-mail addresses from, for example, jep6245@ksu.edu, to jep6245@k-state.edu.

A Collegian article quoted Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology, as saying, "We want to make communication as easy as we can." This is a rather strange way to approach that objective. If the domain name change is approved and implemented, a huge amount of time and money will need to be spent to modify the current system, which is working well.

Every computer connected to the campus network will have to be re-configured, and any Web pages that contain a link to the K-State Web site will have to be changed.

If most students have distributed their e-mail address as widely as I have, it will cause all kinds of problems when prospective employers, friends and family members continue to send e-mail to the old address.

According to Harvard Townsend, Computing and Networking Services director, the K-State Web page currently can be accessed through either address, meaning that either address can currently be distributed without disrupting e-mail or any other services.

I really question whether administrators have addressed thoroughly all of these issues. If their goal is to make communication easier, then why are they making a change that will make it more difficult than ever to communicate with K-State students and staff? How often do people come to the K-State Web site looking for Kent State or Kentucky State? How much research on this change really has been done?

Until these questions, and many others, have been answered, there is no reason for the change to be made.

We've all heard the old saying, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

To all the members of the administration who think this costly and disruptive change is necessary, here is a little advice: The current system is not broken, so don't waste students' money and time on "fixing" it.

Columnist's drugs would make women bend to his every whim

I heard a great joke Thursday, but before I commit a gigantic sin and tell it, I want all members of the female gender to neatly fold this newspaper up and set it aside, because this article really isn't for you. On with the joke.

"How many guys does it take to open a beer? None, it should be open by the time she brings it to you."

Oh how I love being a guy. But you know what perplexes me the most is that we guys have all these so-called wonder drugs, (Viagra, Rogaine, etc.) but what do women have? I mean, other than all those feminine hygiene product commercials. There's nothing else I can think of right off the bat. Therefore, I'm going to propose a list of drugs that should be developed for women only. (And I repeat, no I'm begging you, if you are a woman, please skip this article. I hear Jake's article is really good.)

1. Maidagra: Taking this drug immediately will cause the user to have uncontrollable urges to cook for her male counterpart, wash dishes, dust, sweep, etc.

2. Walkenol: Taking this drug will cause the user to have no interest in driving at all, instead preferring to walk everywhere (including the grocery store), thus allowing society to walk the sidewalks without fear.

3. Nonagra: Taking this drug will cause the user to remain silent for 12 consecutive hours, ensuring her male counterpart a headache-free evening when he returns home from work. An added side-effect is the female user will refrain from asking her male counterpart dumb questions such as "Do these pants make me look fat?" Also, she no longer will have the ability to whine in a voice so annoying it could open a garage door from 200 yards away.

4. Sportex: Taking this drug will cause the user to allow her male counterpart to watch sporting events in her presence, such as Monday Night Football or boxing, even when the season premiere of "Friends," is on.

5. PMSgra: Taking this drug will, oh, I'm pretty sure the name explains it all.

6. Storegaine: Taking this drug will make the user realize she can 1. shop for food and 2. accessory shop for less than four hours at a time.

7. Sewgaine: Taking this drug will cause the user to sew all the missing buttons back on to her male counterpart's clothing as well as mending and altering them.

8. Dateagra: Taking this drug represses any desire to have her male counterpart take her out to the movies, dinner, dancing, etc., and then coming home to "cuddle." Instead, she will be content to sit home with her male counterpart and watch "SportsCenter."

9. Yesdeagra: Taking this drug will cause a reaction that will force the user to agree with everything her male counterpart says. (Warning! DO NOT USE THIS DRUG IF YOU ALSO ARE CONSUMING ALCOHOL!)

10. Mapgaine: Taking this drug will cause the user suddenly to be able to read basic maps and give out intelligible directions without a problem. A bonus side-effect is the user will be blessed with the ability to successfully fold the map back into its original position.

Having said all that (all in good fun, of course), I believe it would be most intelligible of me to hurry home and lock myself in my sock drawer until the riots subside. People can be so touchy these days. Just remember, I warned you.

Actress grabs audience, doesn't let go until end

By RUSSELL FORTMEYER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It must have been the first act with the song "Don't Tell Mama" that Sally Bowles staked her claim with her audience and never repented until the lights went dark.

This oversexed 1930s Berlin singer at the Kit Kat Klub is the star attraction of the slow, hellish descent into social collapse that is "Cabaret." Yet, when it's all said and done, there she is singing, "Life is a cabaret, old chum," like she counts on it.

Delivering the title song, Diana Yamabayashi was stunning as Sally, stopping the K-State production's opening night audience cold with her paeon to hopeless optimism. Yamabayashi, one of the best dancers at K-State, is the fire in this show, and the actress doesn't pass up this opportunity of a lifetime to give a devastating performance.

One only wishes Sally's role was written to be more, for if you come away from this production wanting anything, it's to spend more time with these fascinatingly decadent swingers.

With the book by Joe Masteroff, music by John Kander, and lyrics by Fred Ebb, "Cabaret" strikes one as a rather typical girl-meets-boy musical via large doses of gin and Viagra. Yes, everyone on stage seems to be after sex — whether in choreographed dances, on the phone or under the sheets in the amusing number "Two Ladies."

Perhaps the evening's tone of collegial wild abandon (how appropriate) was given away early with the introduction of Scott Chamoff's naughty Emcee, who always seems to be taking off his clothes as he leads us through the flawed lives of desperate Germans during the rise of Hitler.

Was there a hint of nervous laughter in the audience last night? One wonders just what a K-State student expects of a show with such a seemingly innocuous title. Dancing? Nazis? Bisexuality? Not at K-State.

Which is why this show, directed by Lew Shelton, is such fun. In the same city where extreme-right Christian preachers draw crowds and City Hall features the Ten Commandments, this "Cabaret" is likely to turn a few cheeks red. Give K-State Theatre some credit, the choice of "Cabaret" was bold.

Although the cabaret acts are the heart of the show, the book is basically split between two doomed romances — Sally and a writer, Clifford Bradshaw (Chad Pape); and the writer's older landlady, Fraulein Schneider (Melissa Jordan) and a widower Jewish grocer, Herr Schultz (Erik Hogan). The bisexual Bradshaw character isn't too compelling, somewhat like the observant, bland writer in Benjamin West's "Day of the Locust." Pape gives a respectable performance. Jordan and Hogan, through no fault of their own, suffer from their age differences with their characters.

Of course, the music could not be better, with the title song eventually becoming a show tune standard. Kander's sharp, jazzy music and Ebb's perfectly satirical lyrics are dead-on all the time. The two have enjoyed successful revivals of both "Chicago" (K-State did its own mischievous version recently) and, just this year, "Cabaret."

John Uthoff's smoky, multi-level set, a virtual cabaret on the McCain Auditorium stage, serves this show well. Dana Pinkston's revealing costumes on the Kit Kat Girls complement the tarty white makeup that makes the show such a carnal spectacle.

Union budget presented to Student Senate

By JAIMIE HARTTER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As part of the continuing K-State Student Union enhancement project, the Union presented Senate its budget at Thursday's meeting.

Senate will vote on the Union operations, repair and replacement fees next week. These fees will be part of the allocations funded for the years 1999, 2000 and 2001.

The budget will be reviewed by Privilege Fee Committee prior to school year 2001-02.

"Student fees have been important from day one," Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said.

Pitts said the Union is currently renovating the Main Ballroom and the K, S and U ballrooms and will begin renovating the catering services area after finishing these rooms. Pitts said these renovations will reduce noise in the rooms.

"We are going to maximize the effectiveness of these rooms," Pitts said. "It will cut down on the noise-bleed factor, and we will be able to have at least five different functions in the room at one time."

Pitts said the most important thing about the Union was keeping areas accessible.

"Our goal is to maintain central traffic flow," he said.

The Union Bookstore could be relocated to the K, S and U ballrooms and Cats' Pause Lounge from early September 1999 through February 2000. Pitts said they were trying to find a window to minimize rush and buy-back, and this time frame seemed to fit.

"It's going to be a challenge. We don't know how it's going to work until we do the actual process," he said.

In other business, a proposal was presented to support Hale Library funding. The proposal will ask for a one-percent increase in other operating expenditures designated specifically for the library. Last year's 0.5 percent increase in other-operating-expenditures funding started the process of correcting the backslide the library has faced in the last three to four years.

"This year, the library is fine, but we are asking for this 1-percent increase so that the library will not go backwards again," Elizabeth Gregory, engineering senator, said.

The proposal will be voted on next week.

Allocations also were made to the St. Francis Canterbury Episcopal Ministry, Blue Key, Golden Key National Honor Society, Kansas State Young Democrats and India Students Association.

K-STATE VS. NEBRASKA: A WAR ON THE FIELD

JUDGMENT DAY

29 years of frustrating losses, national attention have purple players, fans ready to roll

By JON BALMER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Judgment day has arrived, and this year, it seems David might be ready to slay Goliath.

After months of speculation and 11 weeks of college football, the date purple-blooded K-State fans have circled on their calendars in red ink has arrived.

Nov. 14.

Nebraska. With ABC providing a national audience a glimpse of the Little Apple and hundreds of newsmen and personnel ready to examine one of the top teams in the nation, No. 1 K-State (9-0, 6-0 in the Big 12 Conference) looks to end a 29-game losing streak against the 11th-ranked Huskers (8-2, 4-2) Saturday at 2:30 p.m. and take a giant step toward a stake in the Bowl Championship Series.

Although many had hoped this showdown would be between two undefeated Big 12 powers, only K-State could hold up its end of the deal. Nebraska suffered defeat at Texas A&M and in Lincoln, Neb., to the University of Texas. The Longhorns' victory ended Nebraska's 47-game home winning streak.

While the losses dropped the Huskers out of title contention and, in the minds of certain members of the news media, removed the luster from Saturday's game, head coach Bill Snyder said Nebraska remains strong and the two losses might make the Huskers more dangerous.

"I think it's possible that it could be true," Snyder said.

"You could look at it from an emotional standpoint, or you could look at it from a motivational standpoint. But then again, you're dealing with both sides of the coin."

A significant contributor to the Husker's troubles has been injuries to key players, including quarterback Bobby Newcombe, I-back DeAngelo Evans and wingback Frankie London. The early-season injury to Newcombe thrust redshirt freshman Eric Crouch into the lineup prematurely, but Snyder said he thinks the offense has responded well to Crouch's leadership.

"When you watch Eric play, you see his progress throughout the season," Snyder said. "Whether it was in ball games he started or games he didn't start, you see him evolving into this offense very well."

Even with the progression of the offense, the Huskers might not find much to gain against K-State's defense. The Mob continues to lead the nation in scoring defense and ranks in the top three in three other statistical categories. With linebacker Travis Ochs and cornerback Gerald Neasman expected to return Saturday, the 'D' only expects to improve.

On the other side of the ball, offensive coordinator Ron Hudson has molded one of the most complete packages in the nation. The offense counters the Mob with the nation's top-ranked scoring offense and attacks its opponents with numerous weapons, including the field general, quarterback Michael Bishop, who has thrown 18 touchdown passes to only one interception this season.

Another emotional factor that should fire up the Cats is the fact that Saturday is Senior Day, which will give fans one final chance to cheer the class of 1998 at home. Offensive lineman Jeremy Martin, who will finish his career at KSU Stadium tomorrow, said a victory would be the best way to say goodbye.

"I haven't really taken the opportunity to sit down and think about it yet," Martin said. "It's special, we just need to make the most of it."

Outside of the seniors' final home game, sophomore David Allen also has the opportunity to complete the home season with a bang.

After a bizarre 77-yard punt return touchdown last week, Allen tied the NCAA record shared by five others by returning his fourth punt for a touchdown this season.

An important factor that doesn't appear on the stat sheets is the ghost of Nebraska past that seems to haunt the Cats every year.

After opening strong last year in Lincoln, K-State folded, leaving fans wondering if the team honestly believed it could beat the Big Red. However, after Bishop's wake-up call and the team's response, that mentality might have disappeared. Receiver Darnell McDonald's choice for No. 1 seemed to emphasize this new mindset.

"I believe we're the best team in the nation," McDonald said.

With the statistics put aside and discussion laid to rest, one thing remains — the game. According to Martin, K-State's approach won't change for opponent No. 10.

"It's a big game, everyone knows it," he said.

"As far as the attitude of this team, we're going to keep on plugging away."

K-State linebackers Jeff Kelly (8) and Mark Simoneau (42) celebrate in the end zone after Kelly intercepted a pass and returned it 17 yards for a touchdown in the second quarter of the game against Texas. K-State defeated Texas 48-7.

K-STATE VS. NEBRASKA: A WAR OF WORDS

Cats will secure their place as heirs to throne of Big 12 Conference in Saturday's big game

Can this really be happening?

Can the former lackey to the Big 12 conference's bully honestly be ready for a takeover of the hardware?

Can K-State head coach Bill Snyder finally remove the scarlet "N" that resides on his chest?

For the first time since the Cats whimpered off Memorial Stadium in Lincoln, Neb., a year ago, these questions can be answered on the field.

All right, Nebraska suffered yet another fatal dose of Texas, this year, with two lumps. But does that make this ESPN "College GameDay" worthy broadcast (Imagine Lee Corso actually being welcomed to a college town on Saturday) any less important?

To quote the eloquent Honey D. Clown, "I don't think so."

Two losses in the Husker tank doesn't mean erasing 30 years of frustration (and 39 in Manhattan) will be any easier. Polls come and go, so don't think for a minute that the top-ranked Wildcats (Man, does it feel strange to write that) will lose focus now while sharing a spot on the top.

The simple fact that K-State has been bludgeoned annually by the Big Red for the past three decades takes its toll.

As evident in last year's contest, the Cats seemed haunted by their history and could not end the streak, even after Snyder seemed to have the perfect concoction for an upset.

But a funny thing happened after that defeat. K-State found a leader, someone who could take charge of the situation and ignore the past. A man by the name of Michael Bishop.

Now that he's solidified his role as a leader, others have begun to follow his lead and assume their role in the rebirth.

Linebacker Jeff Kelly has assumed the shadow role, consistently stopping the biggest threat an opposing offense has to offer (Does anybody on the Ricky Williams bandwagon remember his "Heisman-worthy" 43 yards against K-State?).

Wide receiver Aaron Lockett (that's right, there's more in the family) has stepped out of his brother's shadow and has become a deadly weapon in the offensive scheme faster than anyone expected.

From kicker Martin Gramatica adding range to the offense to the rest of the defensive members of the Mob (that's right, our defense doesn't find it necessary to use their shirt colors as a battle cry), there's that other factor — the new conference coaching guru, Bill Snyder.

In the past, Nebraska constantly gave Snyder fits, using Tom Osborne's mastery at play-calling (the only man to out-coach Snyder, according to many) to humble K-State.

But suddenly, the only place to find Dr. Tom's legacy is on a giant artificial rug in Lincoln.

Frank Solich is a fine coach and could live up to Osborne's legend some day, but he has yet to coach against the complexity of Snyder's game plan.

He might have studied it in the past, but Solich has yet to combat the Snyder scheme as the top dog.

Granted, this year's version of the Big Red would be better labeled the Big Red Cross after all their injuries, both physical and mental. The Huskers haven't adjusted well to the Bobby "Fragile porcelain mouse" Newcombe era, and tailback and Wichita native DeAngelo Evans hasn't returned to form since his pummeling performance opposite Washington earlier this season.

But let me shout it out one more time for the purple people: THIS MEANS SOMETHING, regardless of how much Chris Fowler and Kirk Herbstreit would like to downplay it.

With the biggest game in K-State history (until next week, of course) going down this weekend, the purple faithful who value loyalty over lucre (That's money, for you cash-happy Husker fans) won't be disappointed.

Purple will roll, Corso will be crowned honorary king of Manhattan, Snyder will smile (possibly), Bishop will cry (definitely), Lil' Red — that inflatable mascot of the damned — will be lost in the celebration and suffer a nasty puncture, and finally, K-State will answer all those bicoastal questions about not being able to win the big one.

And just like that, 30 years of heartache and frustration will dissipate, leaving a new heir to the Big 12 throne.

While the entire purple-blooded community will be swept up in the moment, Snyder will remind his team of one thing.

It's not over yet.

Nebraska can play role of spoiler; next year will have different feel

Do you want me to say it?

Do you want me to say K-State's going to beat Nebraska? Fine. It will. Good Lord, it ought to.

K-State has a better offense, a better defense, a better kicking game, a more experienced coach, the home-field advantage, Michael Bishop, Jeff Kelly and a cooler mascot.

K-State does not have injuries, players running home for medical tests and then crying to the hometown news media about hate mail, locker room fights, secret doctor reports, a running back who is permanently on injured reserve and all sorts of things in that bag of horrors Nebraska has this year.

However, this prediction comes with a warning. (Now I'm talking to the K-State football team for a moment.) Boys, you'd better win. Because I know what happens next year, and so do you. So. Do. You.

Next year, K-State gets taken to the woodshed. No Bishop. No Mob. (Hey, what kind of name is Mob, anyway? Isn't there anything more original than that?) No superman kicker, either. You, my friends, are staring right down the barrel of a 6-5 season next year.

Because Kansas gets better. Colorado gets better. Texas gets better. Oklahoma State gets better, and Nebraska return to its old selves come 1999.

So this game serves as a ruler for the Wildcats. Just how far have they come since 1988? Finally, for once, can K-State win a big game when it has to? It's an answer more intriguing than any other in college football.

All K-State has to do is win. The Cats are the best team in the country, hands down. I'd kill to see UCLA get pummeled by them.

Tennessee? Frauds. And we know about Ohio State, don't we?

So K-State must win. It's that simple. But, see, the Cats have never done this before. Inside, even now I think they're a little scared of Nebraska. Maybe they should be.

Nebraska finally has put to rest the Bobby Newcombe Soap Opera for now. Eric Crouch runs the show. Dan Alexander is in the crawling stages of being a good running back, but I'd like to see you bring him down.

NU's defense? Well, I'll tell you this: On a good day, the Black-shirts (see, cooler name) are better than Colorado and just a shade below K-State's (oh, OK) Mob.

Throw in some turnovers, and you got yourselves a game. I wonder if K-State can deal with that, knowing it's vulnerable to a team it hasn't beaten in 29 years. I wonder if it accepts this game and knows if it doesn't win it, there won't be another chance next year.

Around the nation, people are waiting for K-State to lose. They want it to happen, not because they don't like purple, but because they don't like K-State's feckless schedule, for which, at this point, there is no excuse.

The Cats have never won a big game. Not a really big game, anyway. So here's one for them. All the pressure's on K-State. Nobody really expects Nebraska to win. The Huskers have nothing to lose, because they already have.

I'd love to see it happen, Nebraska upset K-State. It'd bring this strange NU season another bizarre twist.

For K-State, this is ground zero. Everybody finds out what the Cats are really made of.

I wonder if K-State can handle that. If it can (and it never really has), K-State will win the national championship.

Volleyball squad hopes to rebound with wins

By JOSHUA KINDER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 21st-ranked K-State volleyball team is coming off a weekend in which it split with two tough Big 12 Conference opponents. The team said it hopes to close out strong at home tonight and Saturday night against Missouri and Iowa State.

The Wildcats traveled to Lincoln, Neb., last Friday and dropped their match to the 3rd-ranked and now 22-0 Huskers, extending K-State's losing streak against Nebraska to 58 losses. The following day, K-State bounced back and knocked off the 13th-ranked, 17-3 Buffaloes at Colorado.

Wednesday, K-State coach Jim McLaughlin said Nebraska was a good team.

"They just do a lot of things well. Besides being a good physical team, they can side out and score points on you."

McLaughlin said he's happy that his team displayed the resilience to be able to come back and defeat a good Colorado squad after losing to Nebraska the night before.

"They showed a lot of character," McLaughlin said. "In sports, it's tough to shake losses off. We can't look behind us. We have to look to see what's in front of us."

"Our team really did a good job."

They never let go against the 13th-ranked team in the country. We served and passed very tough. We defeated them in that. We converted opportunities on defense 40 percent of the time. We win when we do that. We did both against Colorado."

K-State hasn't secured a spot in the NCAA Tournament yet, but McLaughlin said he hopes wins over Missouri and Iowa State will give them a berth in the national tournament and a shot at playing at home, where they're 8-1 this season.

"We have to take care of business first against Missouri," McLaughlin said. "I feel good about our chances in front of our fans, and hopefully, we'll host the NCAs here."

"I think both teams will be better the second time around. I'm more concerned with our rhythm. If we take care of our rhythm, we'll be OK."

McLaughlin said the Wildcats are focusing better right now — an element crucial this late in the season.

"I really see the team focusing better. It's a tough part of the season right now," McLaughlin said. "They're tired and fatigued, but we're staying focused at the end of the season. The great teams do that."

The Wildcats' match against Missouri is at 7 p.m. tonight at Ahearn Field House and 8 p.m. Saturday night against Iowa State.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State basketball fans will get a rare treat Friday night when the men's and women's teams square off for a double-header at Bramlage Coliseum.

In the first contest of the evening, the women's team will face the Basketball Travelers at 6 p.m. for its final exhibition game. In their first tune up, the Cats had little trouble in a 75-37 victory against the Foreign National Team.

The nightcap will feature the men's team opening its regular season against Saint Mary's. Tip-off is scheduled for 8 p.m., which is 30 minutes after the first game concludes.

The first of three such events this season, the double-header concept was a welcome change for women's head coach Deb Patterson, who said she expected a bigger turnout.

"I'm really excited about the prospect of getting people in to see both our men's and women's teams," Patterson said.

"I'm anxious to see what it does for our attendance. We think this is something that will bring some fans out and generate some excitement and meet our scheduling needs on both ends of the table."

While Patterson is looking forward to the event, men's coach Tom Asbury said he is approaching the Cats' opener with caution. Already reeling from the losses of Ayome May and Duane Davis, Asbury has had to deal with injuries to guards Chris Griffin and Josh Reid, who might miss the opener.

"You can't dwell on it," Asbury said, referring to the sudden rash of injuries. "You have to move on and do the best with what you have."

Although the possibility of a freshman back-court Friday night seems imminent, Asbury said he has seen some signs of encouragement.

Senior forward Manny Dies should be ready for action after an injury last week hindered his recovery from an off-season knee surgery.

On the other bench, Saint Mary's is suffering from the injury bug as well. The Gaels will be without the services of center Brad "Big Continent" Millard, a 7-foot-3-inch, 345-pound junior. Millard suffered a stress fracture in his left foot during the preseason.

Due to the double-header, certain changes have been made involving tickets and parking. The west parking lot will open from 4 to 6 p.m.

The northwest and southwest doors will open for the women's game at 5 p.m. At 6:30 p.m., doors will open for the men's game. Men's tickets will go on sale at halftime of the women's game.

Men's basketball team signs 2 recruits

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two high school basketball stars from Kansas have signed letters of intent to attend K-State next year. Coach Tom Asbury announced Thursday.

They are Quentin Buchanan, a 6-foot-7-inch guard from Junction City, and Donnie Wallace, a 6-foot-9-inch power forward from Goddard. As juniors last season, Buchanan averaged 15 points and 8 rebounds and Wallace, 20.5 points and 8.9 rebounds.

K-STATE VS. NEBRASKA: IN THE 'VILLE

Touchdown Weekend highlighted by concert, pep rally on Friday

By ANGELA KISTNER
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State fans, get ready for the last Touchdown Weekend in Aggieville this year.

An Aggieville concert and pep rally at 5:30 tonight will get fans excited for Saturday's K-State football game.

The pep rally will include the complete K-State Marching Band and contests involving the fans.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said there will be a poster contest, best-dressed fan contest and an ESPN sports analyst Lee Corso look-alike contest.

The best-dressed fan contest is for children 12 years and younger.

Sieben said Ballard's Sporting Goods, Varney's Book Store and Streetside Records are giving away prizes, as well.

This is the first Touchdown Weekend this season that has included the contests.

"We were saying it for the big game," Sieben said.

Sieben said the last time contests were included in the pep rally was the Touchdown Weekend before the Colorado game three years ago, when fans thought a win would send the football team to the Southwestern Bell Cotton Bowl.

The concert at 7 tonight will feature country acts Dustin Evans and Good Times, which will play until 10 p.m.

Because more people than usual are expected at the pregame festivities, Sieben said the block of 12th and Moro streets will be blocked off from vehicular traffic to allow more room and for safety precautions.

Fans who don't have tickets to Saturday's game will have a chance to bid for a pair of tickets Friday.

J.J. Davis, program director for KJCK-FM 94.5, said the station is auctioning off two tickets for the game from the roof of Streetside Records. Jack Frost, an on-air morning personality for the station, will take bids from 10 a.m. until 9 p.m. Friday night. Whoever has the highest bid at 9 p.m. will get the tickets.

The money will go to Shining Smile, a nonprofit organization that helps raise money for dental work for underprivileged children in Manhattan, Junction City and Wamego.

The tickets were donated by Coors' JC Distributing.

Aggieville also will be host to three live news broadcasts.

WIBW-TV will broadcast its 5 p.m. news from Aggieville; KSNT-TV will broadcast its 6 p.m. news from Aggieville and Wichita's KAKE-TV will broadcast both its 5 and 6 p.m. news from Aggieville.

Sieben said everyone is welcome to attend the festivities.

"We sure would like all the college kids to come down," she said.

us to win, the crowd getting into the game is a big part of it, and you can use all the help you can get."

Not all K-State ticket holders said they felt the same way. In last Friday's issue of the Daily Nebraskan, eight ads were placed by people with Manhattan phone numbers. Kristen Morgan, senior in health information management, was one person who placed an ad.

"I thought they were likely to pay more money," Morgan said in response to why she advertised in Nebraska. She and her friends pooled their tickets together and sold all seven they advertised.

Morgan said she received around $200 for ICAT tickets and between $100 and $150 for general admission tickets.

"We were just all broke," Morgan said. "I think we feel bad, but we can't do anything about it."

Others who advertised in the Nebraska paper weren't so lucky. Amy Robinson, senior in accounting, advertised two 50-yard line reserved seat tickets. She said she'd heard she could have received $800 for each ticket. Nebraska's losses, though, seemed to have diminished the demand.

"One person offered $150, but that wasn't high enough," Robinson said. She said the minimum they would have accepted was $300.

With many people trying to get into the student section, random spot checks might occur to make sure people sitting there are supposed to be there. Athletic Director Max Urlick said the individual tickets were designed so students could exchange tickets to allow parents to sit with them. However, they weren't designed to be sold.

"Our intention was not to facilitate scalping," Urlick said.

Jim Muller, associate director of Bramlage Coliseum, said KSU Stadium workers reserve the right to check for student IDs. He said he is not sure what kind of circumstances might warrant a check, but if they see a problem during the game, they will ask to see an ID.

The crowd should prove to be lively tomorrow, as K-State fans will be side-by-side with Nebraska fans to witness this showdown of football powerhouses. One student said he looked forward to ridiculing those wearing red when K-State scores and wins.

"As soon as Nebraska fans start making excuses for losing and say how they've won 30 years in a row, I'll just smile, look at my purple shirt, and say, 'Look at the scoreboard,'" said Jeremy Deutsch, freshman in electrical engineering.

Other K-State fans said they were not so concerned with Nebraska fans as with the students who sold their tickets to Husker fans.

"Actually, I don't care about doing anything to Nebraska fans, but I'd like to clobber the K-State students who sold their tickets to the Nebraska fans," said Robert Allison-Gallimore, freshman in agricultural economics. "They shouldn't be allowed to ever buy tickets again."

While some students are looking forward to the intensity of this game and to tearing down the goal posts should K-State win, one student who sold her ticket had mixed feelings about missing the game.

"I felt bad selling out my team, but I needed the money, and I figured I could watch it and still be in town and enjoy it," Jennifer Lake, junior in English, said. "It's going to be the first time in a long time, if it happens, and it's about time. The only thing I'll regret is not being able to tear down the goal posts."

ing to K-State.

Hotels for the added reporters also are difficult to find. Most of Manhattan is booked up, and Brown said he thinks most of them will have to stay in the Kansas City area.

Brown said he isn't worried, though, about the Sports Information staff handling the pressure.

"Our folks are used to the demands," he said. "Our staff doesn't have to add people to help out."

Most of their duties include working in the press box and running small errands for the news media staff. Most crews, however, are self-contained and can handle themselves without supervision, Brown said.

"We'll provide any information that they need," he said.

Saturday schedule

■ 7 a.m. — KSU Stadium parking lots open. No camping out to enter the stadium will be allowed before that time.

Once the lots are open, students will be allowed to line up to enter the stadium. To line up for ESPN "College GameDay," students must use gates 5 and 8. Students who choose not to go to "College GameDay" can line up at Gate 12 to wait for the game entrance time.

■ 7:30 a.m. — ICAT will start banding ICAT ticket holders.

■ 8:30 a.m. — "College GameDay" gates open. To enter "College GameDay," students must show their football tickets for inspection.

Tickets will not be torn for "College GameDay."

■ 9:30 a.m. — Rehearsal for "College GameDay" within the stadium.

■ 10-11 a.m. — "College GameDay." After "College GameDay," the stadium will be cleared, and security will do a sweep throughout the stadium, checking bathrooms, etc., to make sure no one is still inside the stadium. All gates will be locked, and the stadium will be prepared for game entrance.

■ 12:30 p.m. — Fans will be allowed into the stadium. Students will not be allowed to save seats for anyone not inside the stadium. Tickets will be torn for game entrance.

■ 2:30 p.m. — KICKOFF.

Opening weekend brings hunters flocking to state

By ELIZABETH SCHOFIELD
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Instead of hunting for a parking place at Saturday's football game, avid bird hunters will make their way out of town for the opening weekend of quail and pheasant season.

Much like the frenzy of people coming to town for the football game, a rush of those coming for wild game also affects Manhattan.

Don Morton, owner of Don Morton Sports, said people come from places like Tennessee and Kentucky to hunt in Kansas. Many of them stop in his store for non-resident licenses.

"Hopefully, they buy something else while they're in the store," Morton said.

Anyone of any age can hunt pheasant and quail as long as they have a valid hunting license. A hunter safety course, which is offered by the state, is required to obtain a license. Usually the beginning age for passing the course is 9 or 10, but it varies.

"We don't have an age limit," said Mike Miller of the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. "It's basically up to parents."

Licenses are sold over-the-counter by hundreds of licensed vendors like Morton across the state.

For the eastern portion of the state, quail and pheasant season runs Nov. 14 through Jan. 31, with the season in western Kansas beginning a week later, on Nov. 21.

The state is divided into two zones because quail are less abundant in the western part of the state. Miller said the week delay in the start of the season for western Kansas is designed to take pressure off quail.

"Hunting pressure drops off dramatically after opening weekend," Miller said.

Public hunting grounds in this area include Tuttle Creek Wildlife Area and Milford Wildlife Area. Tuttle Creek has more than 12,000 acres, and Milford has almost 19,000.

Ninety-seven percent of Kansas land is privately owned, making public hunting ground rather scarce.

However, an alliance between landowners and the state that began as a pilot program three years ago has opened up more land to hunters. Walk-in hunting areas, or WHAs, are pieces of land that owners are paid to give hunters access to.

"We pay the landowners to assume responsibility and open those areas to public hunting," Miller said.

Maps of public hunting grounds and WHAs are available through the wildlife and parks department.

Although it's not necessary to tag pheasant and quail or obtain special permits to hunt them, daily limits are enforced. Bag limits for pheasant are four cocks — male pheasants — per day; hunters are not allowed to shoot hens, which are female pheasants. Quail limits are set at eight per day.

The regulation that forbids shooting hens has been in place for a long time and helps insure hunting doesn't affect bird numbers.

"You can harvest a lot of birds and not have any affect on next year's population," Miller said.

Because of this regulation, it is important to keep some evidence of sex on the bird in case you are stopped.

"A lot of people forget to leave a leg or a foot," Miller said.

These parts of the bird allow conservation officers to identify them as male or female, Miller said.

This weekend, as the huge wave of hunters hits the open fields, conservation officers will be enforcing the bag limits.

Sixty-eight officers will be patrolling the state, Miller said. "They do random license checks and bag-limit checks. Road blocks will be set up on weekends like this," Miller said.

With the number of armed hunters at its peak this weekend, the wildlife and parks department emphasizes the need for safety.

"The most common hunting accident is when a shooter swings on a game animal and shoots a hunter in the line of fire," Miller said.

Wearing blaze orange is not required but highly recommended, he said.

Graduate student examines early prejudices

By JAMI STUMP
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Research has shown that by the age of 9, children have established prejudices, stereotypes and inaccurate ideas about other people.

Abby Baucom, graduate student in family life education and consultation, is studying children's perceptions during preschool years that form inaccurate stereotypes.

She will be using a technique on 3- to 5-year-olds that was developed a decade ago. The curriculum is designed to intervene in the development of negative stereotypes in young children's minds.

"A mistake that has been made in the past is that people do not realize that young children are very prone to prejudices," Baucom said. "At 3 to 5 years old, inaccuracies and stereotypes are more apt to be changed by quality, practical, effective intervention."

Baucom said she will supply teachers with five months of teaching materials and will provide any technical assistance and on-site support necessary. Her research will evaluate whether these materials were effective in changing student perceptions.

Intervention is critical at a young age, Baucom said, because it is almost impossible to change an adult's stereotypes.

"It usually takes a life-changing event for an adult's stereotypes to be challenged and changed," she said. "The media reinforces these stereotypes continually."

Baucom's research is based around area Head Start programs. She received a $15,000 research study grant from the National Head Start Bureau.

Baucom said Head Start is interested in funding and increasing research revolving around what affects social competence, prejudices and inaccurate ideas in young children within its program.

Although the Head Start program focuses on families that live in poverty, Sally Frick, director of Head Start of Riley County, said all children need to have proper intervention in order to improve their social competency.

"Children need to establish a positive link between the way they see themselves in relationship to others," Frick said.

"I think that all young children need to have the opportunity to rejoice in the diversity around them."

Frick said stereotyping will never be just an economic issue; all children are affected.

Baucom is studying three Head Start programs in urban, suburban and rural settings in Kansas. She will give attitudinal assessments and evaluate children in Kansas City, Kan., Manhattan, and in a program serving Brown and Atchison counties.

Baucom said research indicates the more homogeneous the population is within a particular location, the more stereotyping and prejudices are normally found. Baucom said she hoped her findings reinforce that fact.

Future farmers welcomed for final Kansas City visit

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A huddle of blue-coated teens braced against a chilling wind outside a downtown hotel has been as much of a fall tradition for this city as the lighting of the Plaza Christmas lights.

However, this year will be the last here for the FFA convention — an event that for 50 years has brought hundreds of thousands of teens from rural areas across the country to the bright lights of the city.

"It sounds trite, but when you come from a town of about 2,000, and then see thousands of people in blue jackets — kids like you in all ways but yet different — it gives you self-confidence," said Jack Pitzer, who attended his first convention in 1958 and now runs a trade-show management business in Alexandria, Va.

"In those days, you hardly knew about the rest of the world."

The National FFA — known then as the Future Farmers of America — has met here every year since 1928. The city lost the convention to Louisville, Ky., beginning next year.

About 40,000 members, all wearing the standard blue coats with the names of rural towns from all 50 states stitched on the back, began arriving Wednesday for the convention, which runs through Saturday.

They have been welcomed with open arms — although commuters sometimes mutter about clogged streets and ignored "Don't Walk" signs, and the wait is sometimes longer at downtown restaurants.

"They reaffirm your faith in human nature," said Sgt. Gerald Gardner of the Kansas City Police Department, who has coordinated security for the past 15 years.

"They will turn in billfolds with hundreds of dollars in them," Gardner said. "Expensive cameras. They don't have a thought of taking anything for themselves."

FFA members police themselves. A courtesy patrol was formed in the 1950s when downtown pedestrians complained about water balloons being dropped from the upper windows of the Hotel President.

"I even see kids from different states or chapters trying to put somebody else in line," said Dave Sheets, who attended his first convention in 1973 and now is manager of the convention newsroom. "They don't want the convention ruined."

Although the standard uniform has stayed the same since the chapter from Fredericktown, Ohio, showed up wearing matching jackets in 1933, some other things have changed.

"There's also a lot more laser lights today," said Jeri Matties, whose first convention was in 1979.

The name of the group was changed as it changed its emphasis to reflect the growing use of computers and other technology in farming. Women were first admitted in 1969.

Peg Armstrong-Gustafson was the second woman to hold one of the six national offices when she was chosen in 1977 out of North Winneshiek County, Iowa.

"No one told me I couldn't," said Armstrong-Gustafson, an executive in Des Moines with a plant genetics company.

"Women have been involved in agriculture since the beginning of time, so it was just a natural transition for the organization."

Betsy Blades attended her first convention in 1986 and was awarded the American FFA Degree, the highest recognition that an active member can earn, in 1991.

Her father had received the award before her, and her brother after her.

Her sister will get her award at this year's convention.

"There's going to be some closure for my family," Blades said.

And for Kansas City.

Pact to ease tension between troopers, Highway Patrol

By CARL MANNING
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — State troopers reached a tentative work agreement with the Kansas Highway Patrol, ending more than a year of rancor and raising hopes for improved relations between the officers and management.

The two-year pact, which needs approval by the Kansas State Troopers Association, resolved the largest sticking points of binding arbitration, overtime, and pay, and paid leave for association activities.

"I'm very pleased it's resolved. It starts the healing process. We weren't going to be able to deal with underlying issues of morale and distrust until we resolve this issue," Secretary of Administration Dan Stanley said Thursday.

Stanley represented Gov. Bill Graves during the talks, which began in 1997 but reached an impasse in June. A fact-finder was to have heard both sides this week, but the tentative agreement reached Tuesday night ended the need for that.

Graves spokesman Mike Matson said the governor is "happy we have finally reached common ground."

In Kansas, public employees can't strike, and the proposed agreement is a memorandum of understanding. Graves could have imposed an agreement unilaterally, but Stanley said the governor wanted to avoid doing so.

Equally happy was Steve Kearney, the association's executive director. He said copies of the agreement and ballots will be mailed to its 315 members and the votes tallied later this month. Association members include troopers and master troopers.

"Everything I have heard is that we will encourage our membership to ratify the agreement," Kearney said. "Both sides did compromise, and we're very happy to have reached an accord."

Kearney also said the accord will help repair the discord between troopers and management. In recent months, the discord has become public, including stinging criticism of the patrol superintendent, Col. Lonnie McCollum.

"It will go a long way to help the healing process and let us go about the business of being troopers and take the concern of the contract off the table," Kearney said.

The proposed agreement was worked out after both sides agreed to return to the bargaining table.

"Both sides were interested in taking one more shot at hammering out an agreement before going to fact finding," Kearney said. "There was a desire by both parties to come back to the table and reach an accord."

One sticking point was binding arbitration, which applies to cases where an agreement couldn't be reached to resolve a contract dispute. It wouldn't include disciplinary action.

Management had opposed binding arbitration, which had been in previous contracts. The association refused to budge on the issue.

The tentative agreement retains that right, but contains new language emphasizing both sides' intention to resolve disputes before arbitration is needed.

Stanley said the chasm dividing the sides was too wide to bridge, and both sides decided to reach a middle ground to put the issue behind them.

Another sticking point was that troopers had to work 86 hours within two weeks before receiving overtime pay, compared to 80 hours for most other state workers.

The proposed agreement puts the troopers on equal footing with other workers.

A compromise also was reached on paid leave for association board members. They wanted 36 hours a month and authorization to use patrol vehicles to conduct association business. They agreed to 32 hours and the use of private vehicles.

When talks broke down, the association wanted a 24-percent pay hike. Troopers' annual salaries range from $25,979 to $41,300.

The proposed agreement doesn't give troopers an increase beyond the 4-percent boost they received along with all other state employees.

Kearney said efforts will be made to convince lawmakers next year to look at the salary issue.

In recent months, some troopers have talked publicly about the morale problems within the ranks and their distrust of management.

A legislative audit of the patrol in September concluded there was a serious and pervasive breakdown in relations between management and troopers.

Also, a World Wide Web site started a few months ago included a collection of inside jokes, complaints and comments about McCollum, dubbed "Lonnie McCollum." Nobody has claimed credit for maintaining the site.

Girls switched at birth; custody fight might arise

By DAVID REED
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BUENA VISTA, Va.—A custody battle may be in the works for one of two girls switched at birth three years ago.

Tommy and Linda Rogers, the divorced maternal grandparents who have been helping raise Rebecca Grace Chittum, have petitioned a juvenile court for sole custody of the child, a relative said Thursday.

Relatives said the grandparents want to end a joint arrangement between themselves and Rebecca's paternal grandparents, Rosa Lee and Larry Chittum, and also keep Rebecca's biological mother from visiting.

Paula Johnson gave birth to Rebecca at the University of Virginia Medical Center on June 30, 1995, a day after Kevin Chittum and Whitney Rogers had Callie Conley there.

DNA tests this summer determined the babies were switched and raised by the wrong parents.

Chittum and Rogers did not know of the switch when they died in a car crash July 4. Since then, the couple's parents have taken turns caring for Rebecca and her 1-year-old sister, Lindsey.

Those involved have said they want

Callie and Rebecca to stay with the families who raised them, and each suggested liberal visitation rights for both sides. The two girls already have played together.

Because the new petition was filed in juvenile court, the records are not public. Kevin Chittum's sister, Pam Miskovsky, said the Rogers' attempt to get custody of Rebecca and Lindsey is an effort to deny Johnson access to Rebecca.

She said the Rogers family didn't want Johnson to have overnight visitation of Rebecca.

Miskovsky said the action could keep Rebecca away from the Chittums, who are still mourning their son, his wife and four of his relatives who died in the crash. One of those who died was Miskovsky's daughter.

"It's upsetting. We've lost six members of our family, and now they want to take two more away," she said. "We feel like we've lost enough, and we shouldn't have to go through this. I'm hoping the judge will see that it's in the kids' best interest to keep all of the families involved."

Johnson's attorney, Cynthia Johnson, who is not related, said Thursday she would not speculate how the Rogers' petition might change the voluntary visitation arrangement.

British musician combines Celtic, blues and roots

Martin Simpson draws from many influences, sounds and techniques to produce his music

By M.A. LOROFF

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Celtic, blues and roots music have a common ground in the musical expression of at least one person.

Martin Simpson will share his interpretation with others as a performer in the BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series at 8 p.m. Friday at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Simpson, originally from England, uses altered tunings to produce cascades of sustaining notes and has a right-hand attack influenced by banjo frailing techniques. He uses these techniques to reveal the emotional nuances of the music he interprets.

David Kamerer, director of the BirdHouse concert series, said he thought Simpson is one of the best all-around musicians.

"He is a wicked slide player and blues musician," Kamerer said. "He distinguished himself by working with top British artists, and 10 years ago, he found his voice."

In 1985, Simpson married singer and poet Jessica Ruby Simpson, with whom he eventually would release two recordings. Simpson released "Leaves of Life," an all-instrumental collection of British, Irish and Scottish ballads in 1989, and "When I Was On Horseback" in 1991.

After establishing himself as an interpreter of Celtic music, Simpson broadened his horizons by releasing a blues album, "Smoke and Mirrors," with singer Alisa Fineman.

Recently, Simpson has been touring and recording with virtuoso string players from China and India.

His new album, "Cool and Unusual," makes connections between Celtic music and American music's black roots.

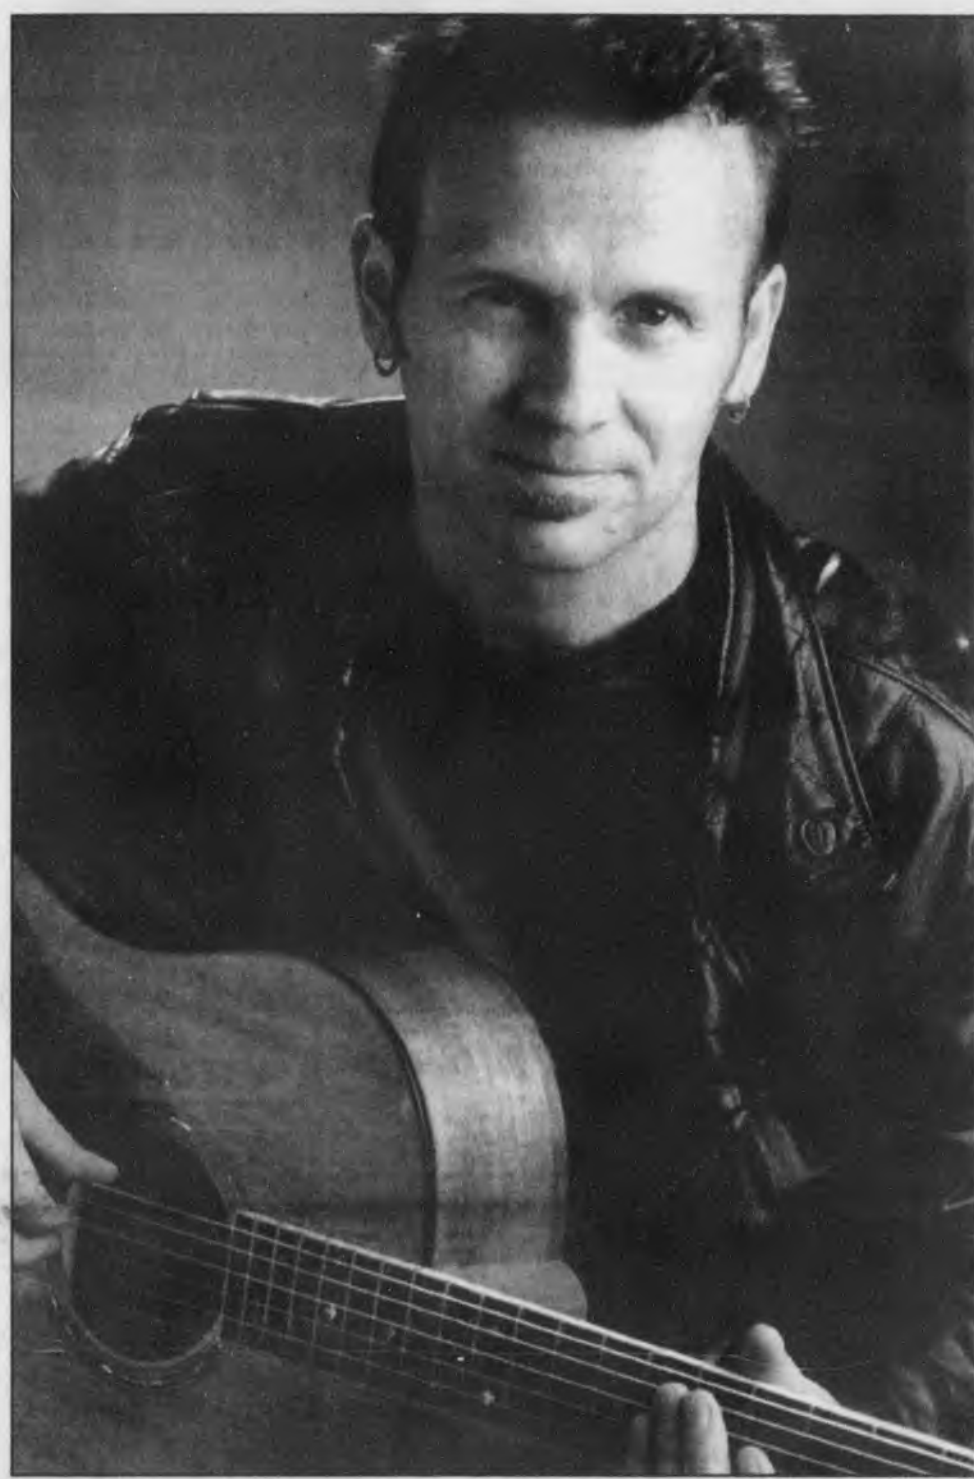

"With 'Cool and Unusual,' Simpson takes American songs back to their deep roots," Kamerer said.

The album also features musicians David Lindley, Kelly Joe Phelps and members of Tanika Sammy.

Kamerer said the series has tried to book Simpson for three years.

"He is the best absolute musician and an excellent interpreter," Kamerer said. "I adore him."

Tickets for the concert are $10 for the general public, and $8 for students and seniors. Tickets are available at the Manhattan Arts Center and The Dusty Bookshelf in Aggieville.

'Cabaret' set designers strive for uniqueness, authenticity

By JENN DAVOREN

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The audience members who pack McCain Auditorium sometimes might take certain aspects of K-State Theatre productions for granted.

During this weekend's performances of "Cabaret," theater buffs might want to take a few minutes to consider the effort it took to construct K-State's two-tiered version of the Kit Kat Club.

The set itself has been in the works since last spring, when director Lew Shelton met with the scenery team for discussions. Set designer John Uthoff took certain ideas from that meeting and began to do a little studying on the subject of nightclubs in 1920s Germany.

"You never research old sets," Uthoff said. "You research the times."

In this way, designers can be sure their final product is more imaginative than those of their predecessors, he said.

As Uthoff researched, he found his ideas fell into particular patterns.

"There are three ways you can do the sets for 'Cabaret,'" Uthoff said. "You can make it look like a concert hall, very glitzy; maybe a decaying Victorian nightclub; or a cellar, like a secret club."

As designing ended and construction began, Uthoff found similarities between his set and the scenery of a recent movie.

"John calls the set 'Cabaret' à la 'American Werewolf in Paris,'" said Brian Floyd, sophomore in theater and set constructor for the production.

In "Werewolf," Paris partiers frequent underground clubs to escape police. In the time period in which "Cabaret" is set, German club-hoppers often sought secret clubs in which to relax during a turbulent time in history, just a few years prior to Nazi control.

"You can't do anything with this play and not look at the Nazi aspect," Uthoff said. "It's one of the underlying ideas."

While Uthoff designed the "Cabaret" set, technical director David Tidwell oversaw the actual construction of the set with the help of shop managers. Uthoff said what he wanted to do with a particular design, and Tidwell and crew decided what their space and budget would allow.

Construction for K-State Theatre productions begin in the Scene Shop, located in McCain, until the main stage is available for use. Builders must keep in mind that whatever they might build in the Scene Shop eventually must fit through a 10-foot-tall door during the location transfer.

Once the set's shell is situated on the main stage, large-scale construction can begin. Much measuring and securing took place for this particular set, because actors must be able to move freely and safely on the second story. Because the "Cabaret" set includes moving scenery, back technical crew members must learn the art of the scene change.

Other details, such as painting and decorating, are added during the week before the show opens.

Uthoff and Scene Shop workers said they always are looking for students who are willing to lend a hand.

"Anyone enrolled in the university can get involved with the theater," Uthoff said. "It doesn't matter if it's backstage or onstage."

Vienna Boys Choir to perform

Group formed in 1498 by imperial decree

By CORBIN H. CRABLE

KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

With the appointment of a new artistic director, the Vienna Boys Choir is ready to celebrate its 500th anniversary with a performance at 3 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The choir, which is comprised of boys ages 10 to 14, was founded in 1498 by imperial decree. Since its beginning, the choir has split up into touring choirs of 24 boys each, while at least one choir stays in Vienna at all times to sing at the weekly Sunday Mass at Vienna's Imperial Chapel.

In addition to the big name of the Vienna Boys Choir, McCain Director Richard Martin said the amount of time the choir has been in existence is a large factor in drawing crowds.

"The 500th anniversary tour of anything is going to draw attention," he said.

In 1996, Agnes Grossmann became the new artistic director for the choir, a title that her own father maintained for more than 20 years until his death in 1970. Grossmann is the choir's first female director.

Martin said he was excited about the choir's first female director and that he saw no reason why she wasn't qualified to direct the group.

"If she has all the right qualities, then why shouldn't a woman direct the Vienna Boys Choir?" he said. "She's not singing, after all. She's leading them."

Over the past couple of years, Grossmann, who also is the director of the Choir School in Vienna, opened the school's doors to young girls, enabling them to receive an exceptional education in music. There are, however, no plans to establish a girls' choir or to integrate them with the boys' choir.

The choir has performed in McCain five times since the building opened in 1970. With its sixth performance at McCain on Sunday, Martin said a large audience is imminent.

"Obviously, musically, what the choir is doing is at the highest level of excellence," he said. "Since they've had astute promotions and management, most people know about them."

"I think since the Vienna Boys Choir has such a recognizable name, there will be patrons at the show that normally wouldn't be here."

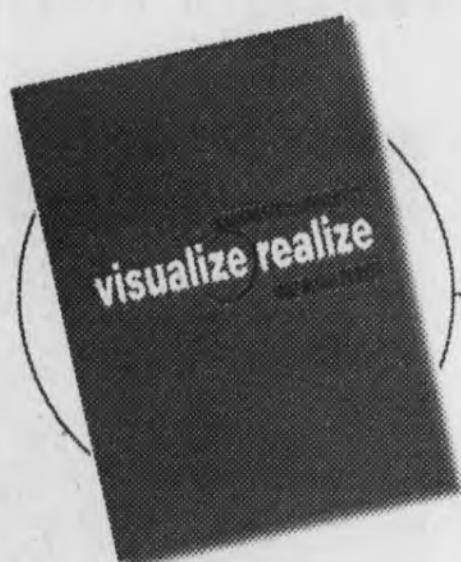

Included on the show's program will be Viennese folk songs and music from Vienna's Imperial Chapel. Ticket prices are $19.80 for general admission, $18 for seniors and $9.90 for students and children. For more information call the McCain box office at 532-6428.

CONGRATULATIONS!

For the third time this decade, the K-State Collegian and Royal Purple have both won top national awards at the Fall National College Media Convention.
